Karen - I am attaching a spreadsheet providing the information you have requested (Attachment 1), but I want to highlight a few points which may not be immediately self-evident.

First, the original budget (Attachment 2) we submitted to the EAC, dated March 22nd, did not itemize personnel expenses by each person. In addition, when we actually began work two months after submitting that budget, we decided to reallocate more time to people within Eagleton and hire fewer outside hourlies.

Second, in the figures I sent you in late December we tried to account for all the expenses and projections but overlooked a few things including neglecting to include the honoraria for our peer review team. Hence, the figures we're now sending are different than what I sent in December.

Lastly, we originally discussed a no-cost extension through February, but since we don't yet have the EAC comments on our draft Provisional Voting material nor an estimate of when they are likely to be ready, I think it is prudent to extend the no-cost extension through March 31st. We would still like to conclude by the end of February, but if you can approve the extension for another month we could avoid going through this process again if everything is not complete six weeks from now.

It is my understanding that Rutgers will soon be sending our December invoice. At this time, I would also like to request that we combine January and February an invoice the EAC once for that time period.

As you can see, we are currently projecting an ending balance of approximately $10,000. If additional expenses are incurred beyond what is currently projected, we're confident they will not exceed the original budget of $560,002.

Thanks and I look forward to hearing from you.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

Background

On May 24, 2005 the U.S. Election Assistance Commission awarded an eight month contract (December 30, 2005) in the amount of $560,002.00 to the Eagleton Institute of Politics (Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey) to provide research assistance to support development of guidelines on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification procedures.

Contractor’s Request for a No-Cost Extension

On November 15, 2005, John Weingart, Associate Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics, requested via e-mail, a no-cost extension on this contract (E4014127). Mr. Weingart has requested an extension to complete the work of this contract to February 28, 2006.

In subsequent correspondence, Mr. Weingart notes the following as the reason for the request:

"The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October, voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting, based on Eagleton’s research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication.... The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report of that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid-January".

"If EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings...(that EAC has determined will not take place)....would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work...“The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $300,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project”.

January 9, 2005

U.S. ELECTION ASSISTANCE COMMISSION
1225 New York Ave. NW – Suite 1100
Washington, DC 20005
Mr. Weingart further notes:

“We anticipate reallocating funds primarily from the public hearings line items and spending approximately $35,500 more than originally budgeted on personnel, $23,250 more on the subcontract with Ohio State and $20,250 more on consultants”.

Specifics of the Extension

The contractor has provided the following breakdown and explanation of the personnel and consultant costs, associated with this extension.

Original Project Personnel costs- $195,439 (May-December)
Original Project labor hours-xxxxx (May-December)

Projected Project Personnel costs -$253,915 (January-February)

EAC Staff Recommendation

Karen Lynn-Dyson, the EAC’s Contracting Officer Representative assigned to this contract has reviewed this request, the rationale and authority for it (FAR 43.103(a)(3)) and finds it to be appropriate. To-date the Eagleton Institute has consistently met its deadlines for major project deliverables and stayed within the project budget. To grant the Eagleton Institute a two month extension on this contract in order to obtain the necessary feedback on major documents it has produced will be within the best interests of the Election Assistance Commission, and thus, the federal government.

EAC’s Contracting Officer Representative finds that to grant the Eagleton Institute a no-cost extension for the modification of its contract with the EAC is within the scope of the original agreement and is recommending that this modification to the contract be made.

Thanks for letting me know. This may well extend all the dates in the proposed revised schedule we sent accordingly. When do you think we will hear about the no-cost extension and budget reallocations? Thanks, John

Karen - Our request for a no-cost, reallocation of resources is based on (a) the fact that our personnel costs have already been higher than we anticipated and (b) the reality that keeping the project operating for at least nine months, instead of seven as planned, will require the participants to devote more time than anticipated. While we are not producing more product than originally promised, the time involved in our work continues to increase. Both Provisional Voting and Voter ID have proved to be very dynamic topics requiring us to continually monitor developments and update our data, analysis and evolving work products as we learn of new or revised information. As a result, despite the extension of the schedule, the staff and consultants on this project have had no "down" time. We anticipate this research, monitoring and revising to continue for the months added to the project, necessitating significantly more hours by all members of the project team than anticipated.

Our request asks for changes to three line items which I will address below on the assumption that the EAC response to our already-submitted Provisional Voting draft and to-be-submitted Voter ID draft will be sufficiently timely to enable us to complete our work on both topics by the end of February.

1. Eagleton Institute of Politics personnel: We originally budgeted $110,695 ($15,813 average per month) for Eagleton faculty, staff and graduate student assistants for the seven-month project from May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005. Our actual costs have been approximately $14,500 more than that. In addition, we are anticipating needing another $21,000 for personnel costs in January and February, calculated on the basis of 2/3 of the original monthly estimate. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $110,695 to approximately $146,000.

2. Consultant Services: We originally budgeted $79,500 ($11,357 average per month) for consultant services which we have used to engage Tom O'Neill as the project manager. We anticipate no additional cost for the original contract period of May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005, but do anticipate needing his services during January and February at a slightly reduced rate of $10,125 per month or $20,250 total additional. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $79,500 to $99,750.

3. Moritz School of Law: We originally budgeted $84,744 ($12,106 average per month) for staff and overhead for the May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005 period. We anticipate needing an additional $23,171 ($11,585 average per month) to support their time on this project in January and February. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $84,744 to $107,915.

With these revisions, approximately $22,000 of the EAC contract award to Eagleton would remain not yet allocated, primarily because the cost for the public hearings would have incurred Rutgers University overhead whereas the additional expenditures for consultants and the subcontract with Moritz do not.

I hope this provides you the information you need. While Rutgers is shutting down until January 3rd, I will be checking email at least every day or two.

Karen - At this time, we anticipate reallocating funds primarily from the public hearings line item and spending approximately $35,500 more than originally budgeted on personnel, $23,250 more on the subcontract with Ohio State and $20,250 more on consultants. There are other additional variances but they are not significant (e.g. less on honoraria, less on travel, and more on general operations such as phone expenses). Let me know if you need additional detail or information.

Thanks, John

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

Background

On May 24, 2005 the U.S. Election Assistance Commission awarded an eight month contract (December 30, 2005) in the amount of $560,002.00 to the Eagleton Institute of Politics (Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey) to provide research assistance to support development of guidelines on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification procedures.

Contractor’s Request for a No-Cost Extension

On November 15, 2005, John Weingart, Associate Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics, requested via e-mail, a no-cost extension on this contract (E4014127). Mr. Weingart had requested an extension to complete the work of this contract to February 28, 2006.

In response to EAC’s requests for additional information related to the no-cost extension, in a January 13, 2006 e-mail, Mr. Weingart revised the request for the extension to March 31, 2006. Mr. Weingart did note that he would still like to conclude the project’s work by the end of February.

In various correspondences, Mr. Weingart notes the following reasons for the request:

“The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October, voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting, based on Eagleton’s research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication….. The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report of that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid-January”.

“Our request for a no-cost, reallocation of resources is based on (a) the fact that our personnel costs have already been higher than we anticipated and (b) the reality that keeping the project operating for at least nine months, instead of the seven as planned, will require the participants to devote more time than anticipated. While we are not producing more product than originally promised, the time involved in our work continues to increase... We anticipate this research monitoring and revising to continue for the months added to the project, necessitating significantly more hours by all members of the project team than anticipated”.

The contractor anticipates reallocating funds primarily from the public hearings line item ($81,120) and spending approximately $33,750 more than originally budgeted on personnel, $23,171 more on the subcontract with Ohio State and $20,250 more on consultants. The EAC elected to not hold public hearings on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification.

Specifics of the Extension

The contractor has provided the following breakdown and explanation of the personnel and consultant costs, associated with this extension.

1. Eagleton Institute of Politics personnel:

   Original budgeted project personnel costs-$110,695 (May-December)
   Revised project personnel costs- $144,444 (May-February)

2. Consultant Services:

   Original budgeted costs: $79,500 (May-December)
   Revised costs -$99,750 (May-February)

3. Moritz School of Law personnel and overhead:

   Original budgeted costs: $84,744 (May-December)
   Revised costs- $107,915 (May-February)

Total project budget:

Original budgeted costs: $560,002 (May-December)
Revised project cost: $549,831 (May-February)

EAC Staff Recommendation

Karen Lynn-Dyson, the EAC’s Contracting Officer Representative assigned to this contract has reviewed this request, the rationale and authority for it (FAR 43.103(a)(3)) and finds it to be appropriate. To date the Eagleton Institute has consistently met its deadlines for major project deliverables and stayed within the project’s overall budget.
Based upon the work products provided to the EAC, thus far, the additional personnel expenses which the contractor has incurred appear to be reasonable. To grant the Eagleton Institute a three-month extension on this contract in order to obtain the necessary feedback on major documents it has produced will be within the best interests of the Election Assistance Commission, and therefore, the federal government.

EAC’s Contracting Officer Representative finds that to grant the Eagleton Institute a no-cost extension for the modification of its contract with the EAC is within the scope of the original agreement and is recommending that this modification to the contract be made.

Signed

14. DESCRIPTION OF AMENDMENT/MODIFICATION (Organized by UCF section headings, including solicitation/contract subject matter where feasible.)

Pursuant to the terms of the above-referenced contract, the contractor was to present the EAC with draft reports that would form the basis for recommended best practices for provisional voting. The documents were to be published in mid-October after EAC review. The contractor did not receive EAC comments on the draft document until October 2006. As a result, additional time was required to complete the work on provisional voting and analysis of Voter identification issues. The extension will entail additional personnel time, but no additional funds to complete the work. The contractor anticipates that it will be able to complete its work during the week of March 31, 2006.

Except as provided herein, all terms and conditions of the document referenced in Item 9A or 10A, as hereafter changed, remain unchanged and in full force and effect.

A. THE ABOVE MODIFIED CONTRACT/ORDER IS MODIFIED TO REFLECT THE ADMINISTRATIVE CHANGES (such as changes in paying office, appropriate dates, etc.) SET FORTH IN ITEM 14, PURSUANT TO THE AUTHORITY OF FAR 43.103(b).

E. IMPORTANT: Contractor is not, ☐ is required to sign this document and return ——— copies to the issuing office.

14. DESCRIPTION OF AMENDMENT/MODIFICATION (Organized by UCF section headings, including solicitation subject matter where feasible.)

Pursuant to the terms of the above-referenced contract, the contractor was to present the EAC with draft reports that would form the basis for recommended best practices for pre-voting. The agencies began to issue October after EAC review. The contractor initially released EAC comments on the draft document until October, 2006. As a result, additional time is required to complete the work on pre-voting and analysis of Voter Identification issues. The contractor will require additional personnel time, but no additional funds to complete the work. The contractor anticipates that it will be able to complete its work during the week of March 31, 2008.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

Background

On May 24, 2005 the U.S. Election Assistance Commission awarded an eight month contract (December 30, 2005) in the amount of $560,002.00 to the Eagleton Institute of Politics (Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey) to provide research assistance to support development of guidelines on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification procedures.

Contractor’s Request for a No-Cost Extension

On November 15, 2005, John Weingart, Associate Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics, requested via e-mail, a no-cost extension on this contract (E4014127). Mr. Weingart had requested an extension to complete the work of this contract to February 28, 2006.

In response to EAC’s requests for additional information related to the no-cost extension, in a January 13, 2006 e-mail Mr Weingart revised the request for the extension to March 31, 2006. Mr. Weingart did note that he would still like to conclude the project’s work by the end of February.

In various correspondence, Mr. Weingart notes the following reasons for the request:

“The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October, voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting, based on Eagleton’s research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication..... The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report of that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid-January”.

“Our request for a no-cost, reallocation of resources is based on (a) the fact that our personnel costs have already been higher than we anticipated and (b) the reality that keeping the project operating for at least nine months, instead of the seven as planned, will require the participants to devote more time than anticipated. While we are not producing more product than originally promised, the time involved in our work continues to increase... We anticipate this research monitoring and revising to continue for the months added to the project, necessitating significantly more hours by all members of the project team than anticipated”.

The contractor anticipates reallocating funds primarily from the public hearings line item ($81,120) and spending approximately $33,750 more than originally budgeted on personnel, $23,171 more on the subcontract with Ohio State and $20,250 more on consultants. The EAC elected to not hold public hearings on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification.

Specifics of the Extension

The contractor has provided the following breakdown and explanation of the personnel and consultant costs, associated with this extension.

1. Eagleton Institute of Politics personnel:

   Original budgeted project personnel costs- $110,695 (May-December)
   Revised project personnel costs- $144,444 (May-February).

2. Consultant Services:

   Original budgeted costs: $79,500 (May-December)
   Revised costs - $99,750 (May-February)

3. Moritz School of Law personnel and overhead:

   Original budgeted costs: $84,744 (May-December)
   Revised costs- $107,915 (May-February)

Total project budget:

Original budgeted costs: $560,002 (May-December)
Revised project cost: $549,831 (May-February)

EAC Staff Recommendation

Karen Lynn-Dyson, the EAC’s Contracting Officer Representative assigned to this contract has reviewed this request, the rationale and authority for it (FAR 43.103(a)(3)) and finds it to be appropriate. To date the Eagleton Institute has consistently met its deadlines for major project deliverables and stayed within the project’s overall budget.
Based upon the work products provided to the EAC, thus far, the additional personnel expenses which the contractor has incurred appear to be reasonable. To grant the Eagleton Institute a three month extension on this contract in order to obtain the necessary feedback on major documents it has produced will be within the best interests of the Election Assistance Commission, and therefore, the federal government.

EAC’s Contracting Officer Representative finds that to grant the Eagleton Institute a no-cost extension for the modification of its contract with the EAC is within the scope of the original agreement and is recommending that this modification to the contract be made.

Karen - I am attaching a spreadsheet providing the information you have requested (Attachment 1), but I want to highlight a few points which may not be immediately self-evident.

First, the original budget (Attachment 2) we submitted to the EAC, dated March 22nd, did not itemize personnel expenses by each person. In addition, when we actually began work two months after submitting that budget, we decided to reallocate more time to people within Eagleton and hire fewer outside hourlies.

Second, in the figures I sent you in late December we tried to account for all the expenses and projections but overlooked a few things including neglecting to include the honoraria for our peer review team. Hence, the figures we're now sending are different than what I sent in December.

Lastly, we originally discussed a no-cost extension through February, but since we don't yet have the EAC comments on our draft Provisional Voting material nor an estimate of when they are likely to be ready, I think it is prudent to extend the no-cost extension through March 31st. We would still like to conclude by the end of February, but if you can approve the extension for another month we could avoid going through this process again if everything is not complete six weeks from now.

It is my understanding that Rutgers will soon be sending our December invoice. At this time, I would also like to request that we combine January and February an invoice the EAC once for that time period.

As you can see, we are currently projecting an ending balance of approximately $10,000. If additional expenses are incurred beyond what is currently projected, we're confident they will not exceed the original budget of $560,002.

Thanks and I look forward to hearing from you.

Chair
U.S. Election Assistance Commission
Karen - Our request for a no-cost, reallocation of resources is based on (a) the fact that our personnel costs have already been higher than we anticipated and (b) the reality that keeping the project operating for at least nine months, instead of seven as planned, will require the participants to devote more time than anticipated. While we are not producing more product than originally promised, the time involved in our work continues to increase. Both Provisional Voting and Voter ID have proved to be very dynamic topics requiring us to continually monitor developments and update our data, analysis and evolving work products as we learn of new or revised information. As a result, despite the extension of the schedule, the staff and consultants on this project have had no "down" time. We anticipate this research, monitoring and revising to continue for the months added to the project, necessitating significantly more hours by all members of the project team than anticipated.

Our request asks for changes to three line items which I will address below on the assumption that the EAC response to our already-submitted Provisional Voting draft and to-be-submitted Voter ID draft will be sufficiently timely to enable us to complete our work on both topics by the end of February.

1. Eagleton Institute of Politics personnel: We originally budgeted $110,695 ($15,813 average per month) for Eagleton faculty, staff and graduate student assistants for the seven-month project from May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005. Our actual costs have been approximately $14,500 more than that. In addition, we are anticipating needing another $21,000 for personnel costs in January and February, calculated on the basis of 2/3 of the original monthly estimate. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $110,695 to approximately $146,000.

2. Consultant Services: We originally budgeted $79,50 ($11,357 average per month) for consultant services which we have used to engage Tom O'Neill as the project manager. We anticipate no additional cost for the original contract period of May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005, but do anticipate needing his services during January and February at a slightly reduced rate of $10,125 per month or $20,250 total additional. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $79,500 to $99,750.

3. Moritz School of Law: We originally budgeted $84,744 ($12,106 average per month) for staff and overhead for the May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005 period. We anticipate needing an additional $23,171 ($11,585 average per month) to support their time on this project in January and February. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $84,744 to $107,915.

With these revisions, approximately $22,000 of the EAC contract award to Eagleton would remain not yet allocated, primarily because the cost for the public hearings would have incurred Rutgers University overhead whereas the additional expenditures for consultants and the subcontract with Moritz do not.

I hope this provides you the information you need. While Rutgers is Karen - At this time, we anticipate reallocating funds primarily from the public hearings line item and spending approximately $35,500 more than originally budgeted on personnel, $23,250 more on the subcontract with Ohio State and $20,250 more on consultants. There are other additional variances but they are not significant (e.g. less on honoraria, less on travel, and more on general operations such as phone expenses). Let me know if you need additional detail or information.

Thanks, John

Hi Karen - Do you think we can get approval of our no-cost extension request this week? We really need it for the Rutgers administrative processes since, from their point of view, the project concluded on December 31st. Thanks, John

Karen,

I have looked into the matter noted below. Bottom line is that you are looking to make a number of changes to this contract:

1. Drop two requirements (public hearings)
2. Add labor hours
3. change date the deliverables are due.

The result is a change which increases the cost of the contract but does not exceed the contractually set ceiling. My review of fiscal law in this area has led me to conclude that this modification may be made using the FY 05 funds originally obligated to the contract. (see 61 Comp. Gen. 609 (1982) & 65 Comp. Gen. 741 (1986)). However, if the labor costs exceed the original contractual ceiling, FY 06 will have to be used as the modification did not constitute an antecedent liability (i.e. once the total value of this time and materials contract was reached neither party had any further obligation or liability and therefore the modification will be a new agreement).

Given the above, your modification memo and the form must reflect the 3 changes noted above. It must contain an analysis of the additional cost specifically justifying the amount and reasons for this modification (this is required by the FAR). See the FAR and form instructions for guidance on the Mod form.

I am somewhat concerned about the limited explanation below. If he wants additional labor hours (and labor dollars) he should be able to provide the labor hours (and frankly, rates) needed to complete the task just like I presume he did for the initial contract. The general numbers he provides below are not specific enough for my taste. We need to make sure we are being charged the same rates as in the original contract and that the number of labor hours the contractor expects to expend are appropriate. Also, I am still not sure from the below why the original estimates were off. You are going to have to justify for the commission the additional payments (ultimately signed by both you and the chair). The bottom line is that you will want enough information so that you are confident in making this call. One tact would be to look at the previous labor expenditures in connection with the work done to get a sense of whether the labor amounts set for the amendment are justifiable. (I assume we have his previous invoices stating expended hours.)

Let me know if you have any questions.

EAGLETON INSTITUTE OF POLITICS

Request to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission
for a No-Cost Extension and Reallocation of Funds

November 30, 2005

Why we need a no-cost extension

The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting based on our research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication. The draft was complete in August, but the EAC’s schedule did not permit us to brief the commissioners and staff until early September. We did not receive EAC comments until October, making it impossible to complete the work on the original schedule. Taking account of those comments and guidance from EAC required several weeks. The EAC did not receive our final draft report and recommendations for best practices until late November. We are now awaiting the EAC’s comments on that final draft, which we have been told to expect in January.

The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report on that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid January.

Because the EAC has decided to issue recommendations for best practices on these topics, rather than voluntary guidance, we will finish the work within two months of the original completion date since the adoption process will be shorter. Note that meeting this schedule is dependent on the time needed by the EAC to review our work.

This extension will entail additional personnel time but, since no public hearings on “best practices” are required, if the EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work.

When will work be completed and funds fully expended?

As shown on the attached schedule, work on this contract will be completed in three phases. The EAC will receive our final report and recommendations for best practices in provisional voting during the week of January 23, 2006 (assuming that we receive the EAC’s comments on the draft report submitted on November 28 by January 9).

We will submit our draft report, alternative approaches, and compendium of statutes, regulations, and litigation on Voter Identification Issues during the week of January 16, 2006. If the EAC is able to return comments to us no later than the week of January 30, we will have submit the final report and recommendations for best practices on Voter Identification to the EAC during the week of February 13.

The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $399,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project.

Re: No-Cost Extension to contract number E4014127 with the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University

Background:
Contract E4014127 with the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University ("contractor") was originally scheduled to be concluded on March 31, 2006. The contract's final products include a report on Voter Identification and a report on Provisional Voting. The contractor has vetted the reports with a Peer Review Group, pursuant to the terms of the contract.

Justification for No-Cost Extension:
The EAC wishes to supplement the contractor’s Peer Review of the reports by adding another review process with some of the EAC's key stakeholders. The EAC proposes to assemble a panel of researchers during the week of May 8th to conduct the second review.

Following the second review, the contractor will revise its draft reports based on the comments it receives. The contractor will present its draft reports on Provisional Voting and Voter Identification to the EAC Advisory Board at its May 25th meeting in Washington, DC. The contractor will revise both draft reports, taking into account the EAC’s Advisory Board’s comments and submit the final reports to the EAC toward the end of June.

Recommendation:
The EAC recommends that contract E4014127 be modified at no cost to allow the contractor to complete their work by June 30, 2006.

14. DESCRIPTION OF AMENDMENT/MODIFICATION (Organized by UCF section headings, including solicitation/contract subject matter where feasible.)

Pursuant to the terms of the above-referenced contract, the contractor was to present the EAC with draft reports that would form the basis for recommended best-practices for provisional voting. The documents were to be published in mid-October after EAC review. The contractor did not receive EAC comments on the draft document until October. As a result, additional time is required to complete the work on provisional voting and analysis of Voter Identification issues. The extension will entail additional personnel time, but not additional funds to complete the work. The contractor anticipates that it will be able to complete its work during the week of February 13, 2006.

Except as provided herein, all terms and conditions of the document referenced in Item 9A or 10A, as hereinafter changed, remains unchanged and in full force and effect.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

On May 24, 2005 the U.S. Election Assistance Commission awarded an eight month contract (December 30, 2005) in the amount of $560,002.00 to the Eagleton Institute of Politics (Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey) to provide research assistance to support development of guidelines on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification procedures.

On November 15, 2005, John Weingart, Associate Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics, requested via e-mail, a no-cost extension on this contract (E4014127). Mr. Weingart has requested an extension to complete the work of this contract to February 28, 2006.

In subsequent correspondence, Mr. Weingart notes the following as the reason for the request:

"The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October, voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting, based on Eagleton’s research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication..... The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report of that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid-January”.

He further notes:

"If EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work... “The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $300,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project”.

Karen Lynn-Dyson, the EAC’s Contracting Officer Representative assigned to this contract has reviewed this request, the rationale and authority for it (FAR 43.103(a)(3)) and finds it to be appropriate. To-date the Eagleton Institute has consistently met its deadlines for major project deliverables and stayed within the project budget. To grant the Eagleton Institute a two month extension on this contract in order to obtain the necessary feedback on major documents it has produced will be within the best interests of the Election Assistance Commission, and thus, the federal government.

EAC’s Contracting Officer Representative finds that to grant the Eagleton Institute a no-cost extension for the modification of its contract with the EAC is within the scope of the original agreement and is recommending that this modification to the contract be made.

Karen,

I have looked into the matter noted below. Bottom line is that you are looking to make a number of changes to this contract:

1. Drop two requirements (public hearings)
2. Add labor hours
3. Change date the deliverables are due.

The result is a change which increases the cost of the contract but does not exceed the contractually set ceiling. My review of fiscal law in this area has led me to conclude that this modification may be made using the FY 05 funds originally obligated to the contract. (see 61 Comp. Gen. 609 (1982) & 65 Comp. Gen. 741 (1986)). However, if the labor costs exceed the original contractual ceiling, FY 06 will have to be used as the modification did not constitute an antecedent liability (i.e. once the total value of this time and materials contract was reached neither party had any further obligation or liability and therefore the modification will be a new agreement).

Given the above, your modification memo and the form must reflect the 3 changes noted above. It must contain an analysis of the additional cost specifically justifying the amount and reasons for this modification (this is required by the FAR). See the FAR and form instructions for guidance on the Mod form.

I am somewhat concerned about the limited explanation below. If he wants additional labor hours (and labor dollars) he should be able to provide the labor hours (and frankly, rates) needed to complete the task just like I presume he did for the initial contract. The general numbers he provides below are not specific enough for my taste. We need to make sure we are being charged the same rates as in the original contract and that the number of labor hours the contractor expects to expend are appropriate. Also, I am still not sure from the below why the original estimates were off. You are going to have to justify for the commission the additional payments (ultimately signed by both you and the chair). The bottom line is that you will want enough information so that you are confident in making this call. One tactic would be to look at the previous labor expenditures in connection with the work done to get a sense of whether the labor amounts set for the amendment are justifiable. (I assume we have his previous invoices stating expended hours.)

Let me know if you have any questions.

The public meeting hours that he is "using." Is this a deliverable that you cancelled? What is a deliverable that was performed for less labor hours than estimated, or was it never a deliverable?

Gavin-

Just spoke with John Weingart- he explains that it will be the same work and tasks (no new or additional products) and merely work that will now extend for an additional two months rather than ending December 31.

John - I will send you Connie's address on Tuesday morning when both she and I are back in our offices. Thanks. Hope you get a little time off and have a great new year.

A quick request- May I get Connie Bornheimer e-mail address (again). You may recall I had an incorrect one.

I have received the invoice for November services and cannot process it until it has the breakdown of salaries for particular personnel.

This request is along the lines of that I have requested from you in order to extend the contract.

Thanks

Karen - Turns out I could locate Connie's email though most likely she won't see mail until Tuesday: Bornhein@rci.rutgers.edu.

To clarify your phone message, do you need us to provide the number of hours for each staff person and consultant going forward from January 1st onward or going back to the start of the project?

Thanks.

EAGLETON INSTITUTE OF POLITICS

Request to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission
for a No-Cost Extension and Reallocation of Funds

November 30, 2005

Why we need a no-cost extension

The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting based on our research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication. The draft was complete in August, but the EAC’s schedule did not permit us to brief the commissioners and staff until early September. We did not receive EAC comments until October, making it impossible to complete the work on the original schedule. Taking account of those comments and guidance from EAC required several weeks. The EAC did not receive our final draft report and recommendations for best practices until late November. We are now awaiting the EAC’s comments on that final draft, which we have been told to expect in January.

The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report on that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid January.

Because the EAC has decided to issue recommendations for best practices on these topics, rather than voluntary guidance, we will finish the work within two months of the original completion date since the adoption process will be shorter. Note that meeting this schedule is dependent on the time needed by the EAC to review our work.

This extension will entail additional personnel time but, since no public hearings on “best practices” are required, if the EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work.

When will work be completed and funds fully expended?

As shown on the attached schedule, work on this contract will be completed in three phases. The EAC will receive our final report and recommendations for best practices in provisional voting during the week of January 23, 2006 (assuming that we receive the EAC’s comments on the draft report submitted on November 28 by January 9).

We will submit our draft report, alternative approaches, and compendium of statutes, regulations, and litigation on Voter Identification Issues during the week of January 16, 2006. If the EAC is able to return comments to us no later than the week of January 30, we will have submit the final report and recommendations for best practices on Voter Identification to the EAC during the week of February 13.

The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $399,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project.

New Brunswick, New Jersey 08901

Dear Mr. Osterhage:

Enclosed is a signed contract in the amount of $560,002.00 for the provision of research assistance to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) for the development of voluntary guidance on provisional voting and voter identification procedures. The EAC has accepted the basic proposal submitted by the Eagleton Institute of Politics and has also elected to include the optional survey of local election officials. This proposal was evaluated as providing the best value to the government through a competitive source selection process. The proposal is incorporated by reference into the contract.

The U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) was created by the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) and is charged with assisting the States in meeting the election reform requirements mandated by this legislation. One of the EAC's principal tasks is to provide guidance to the States on the interpretation of HAVA and its requirements. The provisional voting and voter identification effort that will be supported by this contract is a major element of EAC's Fiscal Year 2005 research agenda. The objective of this work is to develop guidance on these topics that States can utilize in the 2006 election cycle.

To acknowledge your receipt and acceptance of this contract, please countersign and date below and return one copy of this letter to the attention of Carol A. Paquette, Interim Executive Director.

We look forward to working with Rutgers University and the Eagleton Institute on this very important research effort.

Sincerely,

Gracia Hillman, Chair

FROM CAROL PAQUETTE, INTERIM EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
MEMORANDUM

April 29, 2005

TO: EAC Commissioners

FROM: Carol A. Paquette, Interim Executive Director
U.S. Election Assistance Commission

Sec. 302 (a) of the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) requires that all states allow the casting of provisional ballots in instances where a voter declares his/her eligibility to vote but his/her names does not appear on the official list of eligible voters, or an election official asserts that a voter is not eligible to vote. In addition, Sec. 303(B) provides for provisional ballot fail-safe voting for first time voters who do not provide appropriate identification at the time of voting. The U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) seeks to examine how provisional voting was implemented in the 2004 election cycle and to prepare guidance on this topic for the 2006 election.

HAVA Sec. 303 (b) mandates that first time voters who register by mail are required to show proof of identify before being allowed to cast a ballot. The EAC seeks to examine how these voter identification requirements were implemented in the 2004 election cycle and to prepare guidance on this topic for the 2006 elections.

As noted above, one of the remedies for a voter not having an acceptable proof of identity is to allow the voter to cast a provisional ballot, either at the polling place or by mail. This linkage between the rights and responsibilities of the voter provides a rationale for conducting research on these topics in parallel. However, separate guidance documents on each of these topics will be developed.

The EAC issued a Request for Proposal (RFP-05-01) to obtain research assistance to support the EAC in its development of this guidance. Six proposals were received and reviewed by a Source Selection Board (SSB) comprised of EAC staff and an election administration expert.

Three of the proposals did not conform to the proposal instructions in some significant manner and were eliminated without detailed assessment. One proposal addressed only the provisional voting portion of the work and did not discuss the voter identification portion, except for holding a public hearing. They proposed doing an analysis of only 6-10 States rather than all States as the Statement of Work required. Another proposal was submitted by a company with no prior experience in conducting public policy research, nor did any of the proposed personnel have any experience with election administration, public policy research, or legal research. Their methodology consisted almost entirely of repeating the Statement of Work provisions and asserting they would do this work, but with no explanation of how. The third proposal discussed data collection activities very generically, but did not address how the information collected would be analyzed. There was no mention of doing legislative and litigation analysis, nor did any of the proposed personnel have appropriate qualifications or experience in this area.

The SSB assessed the remaining three proposals using the attached Technical Evaluation Criteria that were defined and assigned possible point values prior to reading any of the proposals. These proposals received average ratings of 44, 45, and 78, out of a possible 100. Cost proposals were reviewed only by the EAC members of the SSB. The associated cost proposals were respectively $708,730; $148,500; and $560,002. Reference checks on the highest rated bidder were consistently favorable regarding the excellent quality of their work and their performance on time and within budget.

RECOMMENDATION:

Approve the award of a contract for RFP-05-01 to the highest rated bidder, Eagleton Institute of Politics, Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, in the amount of $560,002. Eagleton Institute has formed a consortium with the Moritz College of Law, The Ohio State University, to perform this work in support of the EAC.

Evaluator: Date:

CONTRACT TO PROVIDE RESEARCH ASSISTANCE TO THE EAC FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF VOLUNTARY GUIDANCE ON PROVISIONAL VOTING AND VOTER IDENTIFICATION PROCEDURES

0.0 Background: Sec. 302(a) of HAVA requires that all States allow the casting of provisional ballots in instances where a voter declares their eligibility to vote but their name does not appear on the official list of eligible voters, or an election official asserts that a voter is not eligible to vote. This section describes several requirements for implementation of provisional voting, but the States have considerable latitude in specifying how to carry out these requirements. The EAC seeks to examine how provisional voting was implemented in the 2004 general election and to prepare guidance for the States on this topic for the 2006 Federal elections.

HAVA Sec. 303(b) mandates that first time voters who register by mail are required to show proof of identity before being allowed to cast a ballot. The law prescribes certain requirements concerning this section, but also leaves considerable discretion to the States for its implementation. The EAC seeks to examine how these voter identification requirements were implemented in the 2004 elections and to prepare guidance on this topic for the 2006 elections.

One of the remedies for a voter not having an acceptable proof of identity is to allow the voter to cast a provisional ballot, either at the polling place or by mail. This linkage between these two HAVA sections provides a rationale for conducting research on these topics in parallel. However, it is anticipated that two separate guidance documents will result.

1.0 Objective: The objective of this contract is for EAC to obtain assistance with the collection, analysis and interpretation of information regarding HAVA provisional voting and voter identification requirements for the purpose of drafting guidance on these topics in time for implementation for the 2006 Federal elections. The anticipated outcome of this activity is the generation of concrete policy recommendations to be issued as voluntary guidance for States.

2.0 Scope: In general the Contractor shall be responsible for all research and analysis activities, including the conduct of public hearings for fact finding and public comment purposes. However, in light of the need to get started on this work, the EAC conducted a public hearing on provisional voting on February 23, 2005.

An initial framework for provisional voting policy has been set by the court decisions rendered on the election procedures utilized in the 2004 election. The 6th Circuit decision, in particular, has drawn some boundaries which must be given due regard in the course of considering future policy alternatives for provisional voting.

Notice of public meetings and hearings is required to be published in the Federal Register. The Contractor shall be responsible for preparing the notice documents, and the EAC will submit the notices and cover the cost of publication. In addition, draft guidance documents must be published in the Federal Register to obtain public comment prior to their adoption. Again, the Contractor will work with the EAC to prepare the draft documents for publication, which the EAC will submit and pay for the cost of publication. Comments received will be provided to the Contractor for analysis and incorporation into the final guidance documents, as appropriate.

3.0 Specific Tasks

For ease of reference, following task 3.3 the remaining tasks are listed separately under the headings of Provisional Voting and Voter Identification Requirements. It is anticipated that the work on these two topics will be conducted essentially concurrently.

3.1 Update the project work plan, as required. The Contractor shall update and deliver the Project Plan not later than 10 days after contract award. This plan shall describe how the Contractor will accomplish each of the project tasks, including a timeline indicating major milestones. A single document will be prepared to include both provisional voting and voter identification tasks. The updated Project Plan shall be formally briefed to the EAC Project Manager and lead Commissioner.

3.2 Submit monthly progress reports. The Contractor shall submit a monthly progress report within 2 weeks of the end of each month. This report shall provide a brief summary of activities performed and indicate progress against the timeline provided in the Project Plan. Any issues that could adversely affect schedule should be identified for resolution. Budget status shall also be provided.

3.3 Conduct periodic briefings for the EAC. The Contractor shall periodically meet with the EAC Project Manager and the lead Commissioner for this work to discuss research findings and progress. The Project Plan should make allowance for this activity. The number and frequency of briefings will be determined by the Contractor Project Manager and the EAC Project Manager as the work progresses. The Contractor may also be required to periodically brief the full Commission on their work.
Provisional Voting

3.4 Collect and analyze State legislation, administrative procedures, and court cases. An understanding of the disparities and similarities of how provisional voting was implemented around the country will provide a baseline for the consideration of future approaches. Seventeen States never had provisional voting before HAVA was enacted, while many other States did. A State-by-State compendium of the legislation, procedures, and litigation reviewed shall be delivered along with the analysis results.

Topics of particular interest include the following:
- How did States prepare for the onset of the HAVA provisional ballot requirement?
- How did this vary between States that had previously had some form of provisional ballots and those that did not?
- How did litigation affect the implementation?
- How effective was provisional voting in enfranchising qualified voters?
- Did State and local processes provide for consistent counting of provisional ballots?
- Did local election officials have a clear understanding of how to implement provisional voting?

3.5 Recommend alternative approaches for future implementation of provisional voting. The Contractor shall conduct a literature review to identify other research results and data available on this topic. The EAC Election Day Survey, for example, contained several questions on provisional voting. The EAC will make these survey data available to the Contractor. Based on their analysis of available research and the results of Task 4.5, the Contractor shall diagnose the problems and challenges of provisional voting implementation and hypothesize alternative approaches.

The Contractor shall assess the efficacy of these alternatives in relation to the following inter-related policy objectives: (1) enabling the maximum number of eligible voters to cast ballots that will be counted; (2) providing procedural simplicity for voters, poll workers, and election officials; (3) minimizing opportunity for voter fraud; and (4) maintaining a reasonable workload for election officials and poll workers. Additional policy considerations may be identified in the course of this research effort. The Contractor shall document and brief these alternatives to the Commission.

3.6 Prepare preliminary draft guidance document. Based on the feedback received from the Commission, the Contractor shall prepare a draft guidance document for review and comment by the EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Board. EAC will convene a meeting or teleconference of the Boards for the discussion of this document. The Contractor shall provide the document in advance and participate in the meeting to answer questions and
3.7 Revise draft guidance for publication in the Federal Register. The Contractor shall revise the guidance document as appropriate to reflect the comments of the EAC, the Board of Advisors and the Standards Board and prepare the draft guidance for publication in the Federal Register by the EAC.

3.8 Arrange one public hearing for receiving public comment on draft guidance. This hearing should be scheduled 30 days after the initial publication date. The Contractor shall select the location in consultation with the EAC. EAC will handle publicity for the meeting.

3.9 Prepare final guidance document for EAC adoption. Review all comments received in response to Federal Register publication and at public hearing and revise guidance document as appropriate. Provide final version to EAC for adoption.

Voter Identification Requirements

3.10 Collect and analyze State legislation, administrative procedures, and court cases. It is assumed that the collection of information for analysis of voter identification requirements will be performed concurrently with the research for Task 4.5. An understanding of the disparities and similarities of how voter identification requirements were implemented around the country will provide a baseline for the consideration of future approaches. A State-by-State compendium of the legislation, procedures, and litigation reviewed shall be delivered along with the analysis results.

3.11 Convene a half day public hearing on the topic of voter identification requirements. This hearing should occur early in the research process as an informational hearing where all points of view on this topic can be aired. The Contractor shall be responsible for all aspects of planning and conducting this hearing in consultation with the EAC. The Contractor shall identify three panels of three to four speakers each. The Contractor shall arrange for speaker attendance to include travel and per diem expenses. The EAC will provide publicity for the hearing. The Contractor shall prepare a document summarizing the proceedings and containing all testimony provided.

3.12 Recommend alternative approaches for future implementation of HAVA voter identification requirements. The Contractor shall conduct a literature review to identify other research results and data available on this topic. Based on their analysis of available research and the results of Task 4.11, the Contractor shall diagnose the problems and challenges of voter identification and hypothesize alternative approaches. The Contractor shall coordinate with the EAC to identify appropriate policy objectives by which to assess these alternatives. The Contractor shall document and brief these alternatives to the Commission.

3.13 Prepare preliminary draft guidance document. Based on the feedback received from the Commission, the Contractor shall prepare a draft guidance document for review and comment by the EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Board. EAC will convene a meeting or teleconference of the Boards for the discussion of this document. The Contractor shall provide the document in advance and participate in the Board meeting to answer questions and record comments.

3.14 Revise draft guidance for publication in the Federal Register. The Contractor shall revise the guidance document as appropriate to reflect the comments of the EAC, the Board of Advisors and the Standards Board and prepare the draft guidance for publication in the Federal Register by the EAC.

3.15 Arrange a second public hearing for receiving public comment on the draft guidance. This hearing should be scheduled 30 days after the initial publication date. The Contractor shall select the location in consultation with the EAC. EAC will handle publicity for the hearing.

3.16 Prepare final guidance document for EAC adoption. Review all comments received in response to Federal Register publication and at public hearing and revise guidance document as appropriate. Provide final version to EAC for adoption.

4.0 Contract Type. The contract type will be Time and Materials in the amount of $560,002.00.

5.0 Place of performance. The principal place of performance will be the Contractor’s place of business. Meetings and occasional work efforts may be performed at the EAC offices. Some travel will be required.

GSA FORM 2951 (REV. 12-94)

Prepared by COM P 4261.1
Karen - We are requesting a no-cost extension on the EAC contract to the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University to have the contract's concluding date move from March 31, 2006 to June 30, 2006. As I indicated earlier, it would be very helpful if we could receive approval of this request no later than April 28th.

This extension is necessary to enable the following activities:

1. The EAC has informed us that it will assemble a panel of researchers the week of May 8th to review the Eagleton/Moritz draft background report on Voter Identification. The EAC wishes to supplement the review of this draft already conducted by the Peer Review Group called for in the contract. The Eagleton/Moritz research team, as well as at least some of the Peer Review Group will participate in the conference call or meeting of the EAC's reviewers;

2. Eagleton/Moritz will revise the draft Voter Identification report based upon comments made by the two sets of reviewers, and distribute the revised report to the EAC and its Advisory Board in mid-May.

3. Eagleton/Moritz will present its draft reports on Provisional Voting and Voter Identification to the EAC Advisory Board at its May 25th meeting in Washington, D.C.;

4. Eagleton/Moritz will revise both draft reports to take into account comments made by the EAC Advisory Board, and submit printed final reports to the EAC before June 23rd. Eagleton/Moritz will also prepare a PowerPoint presentation for both reports.

5. Eagleton/Moritz will present both reports at the EAC public meeting in Washington, D.C. on June 23rd, thus concluding its work under this contract.

Please let me know if you need any additional information.

Thanks,

John

Glad to help. I don't want to step on toes, but I'd recommend that you think about some sort of single-blind peer review, of the sort that is employed by many research journals and other organizations (like the NSF or National Academies of Science). I think that if you offer them a modest honoraria (perhaps $100) I think you'll find that the folks on that list would be likely to provide quick and thorough feedback to you.

Again, let me know if there is more that I can do to help.

I'm also willing to do a review for you myself. The issue is that I feel somewhat conflicted, given that I'm on their "peer review" panel. But on the other hand that does mean that I'm very well aware of the background of this project. I'd leave it up to you as to whether you think that a review from me would be appropriate or not.

Hi -- nice to meet you in person, finally!

And thanks for inviting me to your gathering, I enjoyed it and hope I was helpful. Of course, anytime you want anything, you do know where to track me down.

As to the potential reviewers of the Eagleton Voter ID study, here are my suggestions, in order:

- Jonathan Nagler, New York University
- Jan Leighley, University of Arizona
- Ben Highton, UC-Davis
- Adam Berinsky, MIT
- Bernard Grofman, UC-Irvine

All have worked with the CPS turnout/registration data, and are very familiar with this research literature.

If these don't work, or you want more recommendations, let me know.

Certifying receipt and processing payments for procurements requiring a written purchase order (GSA Form 300 or 300-1).

(1) When supplies or services are received, the contracting/ordering office or designated program office will certify receipt and acceptance and indicate the amount approved for payment on copy 6, Receiving Report, of

GSA FORM 300 (REV. 2-93)
52.229-70 FEDERAL, STATE, AND LOCAL TAXES (APR 1984)

The contract price includes all applicable Federal, State, and local taxes. No adjustment will be made to cover taxes which may subsequently be imposed on this transaction or changes in the rates of currently applicable taxes. However, the Government will, upon the request of the Contractor, furnish evidence to establish exemption from any tax from which the Government is exempt and which was not included in the contract price.

52.210-79 PACKING LIST (DEC 1989)

(a)(4) An invoice shall be prepared and submitted to the designated billing office specified in the contract. A proper packing list or other suitable shipping documentation shall accompany each shipment and shall indicate (1) Name and address of consignor; (2) Name and address of consignee; (3) Government order or requisition number; (4) Government lot or lading number covering the shipment (if any); and (5) Description of the material shipped, including item number, quantity, number of containers, and package number (if any).

(b) When payment will be made by Government commercial credit card, in addition to the information in (a) above, the packing list or shipping document shall include: (1) Cardholder name and telephone number and (2) the term "Credit Card".

52.232-1 PAYMENTS (APR 1984)

The Government shall pay the Contractor, upon the submission of proper invoices or vouchers, the prices stipulated in this contract for supplies delivered and accepted or services rendered and accepted, less any adjustment in the contract. Unless otherwise specified in this contract, payment shall be made on partial deliveries accepted by the Government if: (a) The amount due on the deliveries warrants it and the amount due on the deliveries is at least $1,000 or 50 percent of the total contract price.

52.232-8 DISCOUNTS FOR PROMPT PAYMENT (APR 1989)

(a) Discounts for prompt payment will not be considered in the evaluation of offers. However, any offered discount will form a part of the award, and will be taken if payment is made within the discount period indicated in the offer by the offeror. As an alternative to offering a prompt payment discount in conjunction with the offer, offerors awarded contracts may include prompt payment discounts on individual invoices.

(b) In connection with any discount offered for prompt payment, time shall be computed from the date of the invoice. For the purpose of computing the discount earned, payment shall be considered to have been made on the date of the payment check or the date on which an electronic funds transfer was made.

PROMPT PAYMENT

Prompt Payment clause 52.232-26 is incorporated in this contract by reference. The clause contains information on payment due date, invoice requirements, constructive acceptance and interest penalties. Certain portions of the clause regarding payment date, invoice requirements and constructive acceptance have been extracted for your convenience. All dates referred to in the extracts below are calendar days.

(a)(2) ... The due date for making invoice payments by the designated billing office shall be the later of the following two events:

(i) The 30th day after the designated billing office has received a proper invoice from the Contractor.

(ii) The 30th day after Government acceptance of supplies delivered or services performed by the Contractor.

(a)(4) ... An invoice shall be prepared and submitted to the designated billing office specified in the contract. A proper invoice must include the items listed in . . . (i) through . . . (vii). If the invoice does not comply with these requirements, then the Contractor will be notified of the defect within 7 days after receipt of the invoice at the designated billing office. . . . Unilateral notification will be taken into account in the computation of any interest penalty owed the Contractor.

(i) Name and address of the Contractor.

(ii) Invoice date.

(iii) Contract number or other authorization for supplies delivered or services performed (including order number and contract line item number).

(iv) Description, quantity, unit of measure, unit price, and extended price of supplies delivered or services performed.

(v) Shipping and payment terms (e.g., shipment number and date of shipment, prompt payment discount terms). Bill of lading number and weight of shipment will be shown for shipments on Government bills of lading.

(vi) Name and address of Contractor official to whom payment is to be sent (must be the same as that in the contract or in a proper notice of assignment). (vii) Name (where practicable), title, phone number, and mailing address of person to be notified in event of a defective invoice.

NOTE: Invoices must include the ACT number (block 4) and shall be submitted in an original or as a carbon copy and mailed to the billing office designated in block 24 to receive invoices. The "remittance address" must correspond to the remittance address in block 12.

(a)(b)(ii) For the sole purpose of computing an interest penalty that might be due the Contractor, Government acceptance shall be deemed to have occurred constructively on the 7th day (unless otherwise specified in block 20) after the Contractor delivered the supplies or performed the services in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract, unless there is a disagreement over interest, quantity, quality or contractor compliance with a contract provision.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

Background

On May 24, 2005 the U.S. Election Assistance Commission awarded an eight month contract (December 30, 2005) in the amount of $560,002.00 to the Eagleton Institute of Politics (Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey) to provide research assistance to support development of guidelines on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification procedures.

Contractor's Request for a No-Cost Extension

On November 15, 2005, John Weingart, Associate Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics, requested via e-mail, a no-cost extension on this contract (E4014127). Mr. Weingart had requested an extension to complete the work of this contract to February 28, 2006.

In response to EAC's requests for additional information related to the no-cost extension, in a January 13, 2006 e-mail, Mr. Weingart revised the request for the extension to March 31, 2006. Mr. Weingart did note that he would still like to conclude the project's work by the end of February.

In various correspondences, Mr. Weingart notes the following reasons for the request:

"The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October, voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting, based on Eagleton's research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication.....The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report of that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid-January".

"Our request for a no-cost, reallocation of resources is based on (a) the fact that our personnel costs have already been higher than we anticipated and (b) the reality that keeping the project operating for at least nine months, instead of the seven as planned, will require the participants to devote more time than anticipated. While we are not producing more product than originally promised, the time involved in our work continues to increase... We anticipate this research monitoring and revising to continue for the months added to the project, necessitating significantly more hours by all members of the project team than anticipated”.

The contractor anticipates reallocating funds primarily from the public hearings line item ($81,120) and spending approximately $33,750 more than originally budgeted on personnel, $23,171 more on the subcontract with Ohio State and $20,250 more on consultants. The EAC elected to not hold public hearings on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification.

Specifics of the Extension

The contractor has provided the following breakdown and explanation of the personnel and consultant costs, associated with this extension.

1. Eagleton Institute of Politics personnel:

   Original budgeted project personnel costs- $110,695 (May-December)
   Revised project personnel costs- $144,444 (May-February)

2. Consultant Services:

   Original budgeted costs: $79,500 (May-December)
   Revised costs -$99,750 (May-February)

3. Moritz School of Law personnel and overhead:

   Original budgeted costs: $84,744 (May-December)
   Revised costs- $107,915 (May-February)

Total project budget:

Original budgeted costs: $560,002 (May-December)
Revised project cost: $549,831 (May-February)

EAC Staff Recommendation

Karen Lynn-Dyson, the EAC’s Contracting Officer Representative assigned to this contract has reviewed this request, the rationale and authority for it (FAR 43.103(a)(3)) and finds it to be appropriate. To date the Eagleton Institute has consistently met its deadlines for major project deliverables and stayed within the project’s overall budget.
Based upon the work products provided to the EAC, thus far, the additional personnel expenses which the contractor has incurred appear to be reasonable. To grant the Eagleton Institute a three-month extension on this contract in order to obtain the necessary feedback on major documents it has produced will be within the best interests of the Election Assistance Commission, and therefore, the federal government.

EAC's Contracting Officer Representative finds that to grant the Eagleton Institute a no-cost extension for the modification of its contract with the EAC is within the scope of the original agreement and is recommending that this modification to the contract be made.

Signed

14. DESCRIPTION OF AMENDMENT/MODIFICATION (Organized by UCF section headings, including solicitation/contract subject matter where feasible.

Pursuant to the terms of the above-referenced contract, the contractor was to present the EAC with draft reports that would form the basis for recommended best practices for provisional voting. The documents were to be published in mid-October after EAC review. The contractor did not receive EAC comments on the draft document until October, 2005. As a result, additional time is required to complete the work on provisional voting and analysis of Voter Identification issues. This extension will entail additional personnel time, but no additional funds to complete the work. The contractor anticipates that it will be able to complete its work during the week of March 31, 2006.

Except as provided herein, all terms and conditions of the document referenced in Item 9A or 10A, as hereafter changed, remain unchanged and in full force and effect.

Do you still believe that everything will be finalized today and if so, when will we get to review our contracts?

Tova-

The contracts are completed, although not formally signed by the Chair of the Commission (a formality)

As discussed, the contract will be for six months-September 26- February 28 for a fixed contract fee of $50,000 plus additional $5,000 for expenses.

$10,000 has been set aside in the FY 05 EAC budget to cover working group costs.

Gavin Gilmour will be the EAC staff project manager, to whom you and Job will be reporting.

Gavin should be in touch in the next day or so, with more details and specifics related to getting the project started.

Thanks

Hi Karen and Nicole,

I know you guys have been swamped, but I wanted to check in because I haven't heard from you and I am getting all sorts of information from Job, second hand. I would rather not operate that way. Is it the case that the contracts have been finalized? Can you give me a hint about the terms? When might I be seeing a copy? Thanks so much.

Best wishes,

Karen:

What time will you be getting with us today on our contracts. I do not want to be out when you do.

Job
Steve, Tova and Job,

We at the EAC are sorry to hear that Steve will need to withdraw from the Voter Fraud project but understand that he is doing what he feels is in the best interest of himself and his colleague.

Karen has asked me to let you know that she and Tom will meet at some juncture today to discuss further strategy of this project. They have asked me to ensure both Tova and Job that this change in the team will in no way change the EAC's commitment to this project or to the two of you. We will be back in touch with you in the next two days with further information on contracting and pay as well as other aspects of the project.

Thanks so much.

Subject Re: The $10,000 for the Voting Fraud/Intimidation Working Group

Carol,

There is a mechanism in place which could have obligated the $10,000. Since the end of August, I have been sending out to all personnel those "End of Fiscal Year 05" reminder emails which spell out that folks should advise me of any "expected expenditures" to be paid from FY05 funds. It cannot be obligated if I am not advise of it.

Karen, Peg -

This is to confirm that the $10,000 for the meeting was not obligated because there was no mechanism to do so (e.g., no contract vehicle). However, it is my understanding from Julie and Tom that OMB said we could go ahead with contracting that needs to get underway before final budget is passed, so I would assume we could devote some funding to this. We will have to look at the dollar level that we're receiving nder the CR and see how that has to be allocated to on-going expenses versus new items.

Peg and Diana-

It's very likely that the $10,000 that was to be set aside for the Voting Fraud and Intimidation Working Group's expenses did not get obligated, and that only funds to pay the consultants were obligated.

The amount to be obligated for this project was to be $120,000. $55,000 was to be given to Tova Wang and $55,000 to Job Sereborv.

It's likely that Tova and Job will have to wait until 2006 funds are available, to hold their working group meeting. Alternatively, Peg, perhaps you'll want to have a series of conference calls with their working group until there is money for them to meet in-person?

I understand this is an issue. This is the reason we include the task to revise the project plan, so deliverable dates can get adjusted, if needed, based on when the work was actually begun.

Carol:

This updated version is helpful to me but may be problematic for our contractors, who do not have a final contract and (I think) are unaware of the deliverable dates listed in this version. Of course, I did not inform them of these deadlines because I did not have them until today.

Unfortunately, the delay in getting the signed contracts out to our selected contractors has already adversely impacted deliverable dates for the contracts to which I have been assigned. Most contractors cannot hire researchers or commit funds without having a contract in hand, so they have had to delay their work.

--- Peggy

The SOWs that Karen provides below were revised for these contracts. I have attached one of these for your information, since they are identical.
Gavin-

A few answers to your questions:

They have not received contracts but did receive a Statement of Work about a month ago.

That Statement of Work does not reference use of Westlaw or a law clerk. I have no recollection of offering such services. I have, however, had many conversations with Tova and Job. At some point I may have said that because the EAC has Westlaw and legal interns, there may or may not be a way from Job and Tova to avail them of these services.

The Statements of Work developed (see draft attached) were used in place of an RFP. Tova and Job are to serve as consultants on a project that may or may not result in their developing an RFP on voting fraud and intimidation for the EAC.
Karen/Tom,

Peggy held a meeting with voting fraud/intimidation contractors. In this meeting they noted that despite the fact that the contract requires them to perform legal research, they do not have the means to do so (no access to Westlaw, etc.). They noted that in discussions with the two of you, they were told that the EAC would provide them access to West Law and, possibly, a law clerk with office space. None of this is noted in the contract. They claim to have never seen the contract? Do we have their response to our RFP? We will all need to meet to clarify this.

Summary of Election Activities of Job Serebrov

Background to Election Problems in Arkansas

Ever since Reconstruction, Arkansas has had a history of election problems. The election fraud that gave rise to the Brooks-Baxter War in Arkansas in the 1870s involved people from both sides of the aisle voting more than once, the dead rising to cast a ballot or two, destroying ballots, creating ballots and making ballot boxes disappear. A strong one-party system perpetuated this tradition into modern times.

In 1995, I met with Arkansas Supreme Court Justice Tom Glaze to discuss voting issues and my efforts to clean up the electoral process. Although supportive, Justice Glaze encouraged me to proceed with caution. Before being elected to the Supreme Court, Justice Glaze had been employed in the 1960s by Gov. Win Rockefeller to clean up ballot fraud throughout Arkansas. He was nearly disbarred in the process by those involved in ballot fraud in a small, rural county.

Shortly after my discussion with Justice Glaze, I discovered how pervasive the election problems were in the state. For instance, ballot boxes were stuffed or disappeared into the night only to return altered. Contrary to state law, county sheriffs running in contested elections maintained custody of the ballot boxes. In one instance, 20 voted ballot boxes were found in the attic of a sheriff’s deputy after he died.

In my private practice as an attorney, I represented numerous clients in county election contests throughout Arkansas. I also represented clients in matters before the Federal Election Commission. I have never lost an election case. Finally, I was hired as a consultant to a major nonprofit legal organization to review and summarize the 2002 amendments to federal election laws and apply the new law to 10 scenarios.

Member, Washington County Board of Election Commissioners, Fayetteville, Arkansas (1990-1996)

This board consisted of three commissioners; I was the lone Republican. We were charged with supervising the training of poll workers, evaluating voting systems and then purchasing an optical scan system to be used countywide, preparing and justifying our annual budget before the Washington County Quorum Court, hiring and supervising staff and sitting as an administrative tribunal.

When I first came on the board, Washington County was primarily a one-party county and the Democrats were used to running elections according to tradition rather than the law. I had to battle with the two Democrats on the board to enforce election laws within the county. As I started to force the issue in the courts, the Republican Party gained strength. Four years later and after outlasting eight Democrat commissioners, I was able to work with new Democrat commissioners who recognized the need to enforce the law. At this point, the commission requested that I draft administrative regulations for the board. These remain in place today.

Founder, President, General Counsel; Arkansans for Fair Elections (1994-1999)

In 1994, Gov. Mike Huckabee (R), then a candidate for lieutenant governor, asked me to serve as his general counsel for ballot fraud protection. Thinking it best to act independently of any candidate, I formed Arkansans for Fair Elections. I served as the organization’s president and, later, general counsel. This group launched a statewide educational campaign to train poll watchers to recognize irregular or fraudulent electoral procedures; this included the creation of literature and a video. Our extensive public relations campaign brought media attention to the issue. We also organized a statewide team of citizen poll watchers and attorneys to ensure that the election laws were fairly enforced. We were so successful in the lieutenant governor’s race that Arkansans for Fair Elections was asked to continue the effort until 1999 when I moved to Louisiana.

General Counsel - Ballot Fraud Protection Committee, Republican Party of Arkansas (1995-1999)

In late 1995, Asa Hutchinson, chairman of the Republican Party of Arkansas, appointed me as general counsel for the newly formed Ballot Fraud Protection Committee of the state party. I retained this position until 1999. I was responsible for coordinating statewide enforcement efforts and directing a legal team to respond to problematic situations prior to and on election day.

(Through my role with Arkansans for Fair Elections and the Ballot Fraud Protection Committee, I successfully sued or negotiated a settlement in more than two-thirds of the 75 counties in Arkansas over electoral irregularities.)
Republicans in the General Assembly requested that I review and draft suggested changes to Arkansas election law. Based on my personal experience as an election commissioner and as an election attorney, I identified a number of areas of concern and drafted new statutes modeled on the best examples that I could find from other states. My proposal was not passed by the Democrat-controlled General Assembly as a package, however, several of its components were passed into law.

I drafted five redistricting bills and maps for the constitutionally required redistricting of the Arkansas Court of Appeals. These bills were based on current U.S. Supreme Court precedent regarding gerrymandering. I had to present each bill and give supporting testimony to the commission.

Part of my duties as director was to develop international cooperative projects. The theme of several of these proposals was democratization. In each case, I required review of the national election code of the country involved.

My activities in Namibia led to a request by the director of the Namibian Election Commission, Joram Rukambe and the Speaker of the Namibian National Assembly, Dr. Mose Tjitendero to review and suggest changes to the Namibian election code. This review took three months and resulted in proposed alterations a number of code sections. These suggestions were considered by the Namibian National Assembly and a number were incorporated into the code revisions. Additionally, I drafted legislation for the Speaker to guarantee voting rights to agricultural workers that were being denied by the owners of the farms. This legislation also was passed into law.

During this time, I was qualified as an election expert and placed on an election consultant list by the United Nations, IFES and the Electoral Institute of Southern Africa.

This issue will be discussed on Monday. The problem is that lawyers generally should not take on this role... Such mixing of roles creates problems. But, again this will be discussed next week.

Next week promises to be quite busy... To the extent we can avoid last minute action I would appreciate it.

Thanks

Gg

All this can wait until next week.

At that time I will of course bring you up to speed on the project. The overriding concern Tom Wilkey and the Commissioners have is that this project really needs close management and supervision. It really should be overseen by a lawyer and by an EAC staff person with an understanding of the political sensitivities and issues that will surround the topic.

Hopefully this management/oversight issue can be successfully resolved.

Thanks

K
Karen,

I will not be in until next week. Presently I do not know a thing about this program. Further, there are some concerns regarding counsel taking this role. Julie and I will be addressing them on my return.

Also, use of the term salary concerns me... These are contractors, correct? As such that term is most likely inappropriate.

Finally, if this is a question that needs to be answered in the short term (as your response suggest) please respond. I am sure carol and diane will assist you.

Thanks

I'm afraid my haste and the happy juice they gave me at yesterday morning's session caused be to double the labor costs expected for the Serebrov and Wang personal services contracts. The costs should be as follows:

Labor Cost (FY06):
If the consultants are paid $111 per hour and each is expected to work 230 more hours, then we will need to set aside $25,530 each for Tova Wang and Job Serebrov (or a total of $51,060 for both).

(Please note that Gavin suggested that I put in a four month period (top of page 2), although we have budgeted only for 230 hours for each consultant. He thought that would take care of us if we need a few more days out of them and don't want to have to modify the contract.)

I had estimated that we would need $50,000 in FY06 Research Funds (in addition to the $5,000 per consultant in FY06 Research funds to cover travel) to bring this project to a logical stopping point. (I had also requested $250,000 in research funds for any follow up RFP stage, but I know that Tom had to postpone any such RFP until FY07.)

As we would like the new contract period to begin this Sunday, February 26, I need to know what you need from me to help expedite this matter.
Diana:

OK. Here are the contracts for Tova Wang and Job Serebrov, revised per our discussion. The costs for each should be as follows:

Tova Wang
- Labor Cost - $24,975 (which is $111 per hour X 225 hours maximum)
- Travel Cost - $6,500 maximum for FY06 (she has already spent or obligated $3,037.09 of this.)

Job Serebrov
- Labor Cost - $24,975 (which is $111 per hour X 225 hours maximum)
- Travel Cost - $3,500 maximum for FY06 (he has spent no travel funds so far this FY)

Total Costs for the Two Consultants: Labor Under these Contracts=$49,950; Travel in FY06=$10,000

--- Peggy
All,

Per our meeting this afternoon, the consensus was that Peggy needed a total of $60,000 to fund the contracts for Tova Wang and Job Serebrov ($50,000 for labor and $10,000 for travel expenses). Since only $25,000 was budgeted for both these 2 contractors, an additional $35,000 is needed. Tom directed that the additional required funds be taken from the $150,000 budgeted for the Improving Election Data Collection project. According to Tom, this project will be now be done in-house and so the budgeted funds far exceeds projected expenditures. Therefore, revised budgeted (maximum) amounts are as follows:

- Improving Election Data Collection: $115,000
- Tova Wang: $30,000
- Job Serebrov: $30,000

Plz let me know if the above differs in any way with your understanding. Thanks.

The money was on the list of items that I submitted to you in hard copy earlier this year (estimated at $50,000 each), because we knew in December 2005 that we would need to pay for approximately three more months of personal services for these folks in order to get to a logical stopping point. Is it just that we do not have confirmation that the request for the additional amount for personal services was approved and included in the Research Budget? --- Peggy

All-

Indeed, to my knowledge this money hasn't been set aside - at least not in the research budget. I await guidance from Diana and Tom.

Attached are the new contracts for the continuation of personal services from Tova Wang and Job Serebrov on the Voting Fraud/Voter Intimidation research project. They each need an ACT #. (Julie gave me the EAC Contract #s.)

As we would like the new contract period to begin this Sunday, February 26, I need to know what you need from me to help expedite this matter.

Labor Cost (FY06):
If the consultants are paid $111 per hour and each is expected to work 230 more hours, then we will need to set aside $51,060 each for Tova Wang and Job Serebrov.

(Please note that Gavin suggested that I put in a four month period (top of page 2), although we have budgeted only for a three month period. He thought that would take care of us if we need a few more days out of them and don't want to have to modify the contract.)

Travel Cost (FY06):
Tova Wang has used/obligated all but about $1,962.91 of the $5,000 allocated from the FY06 budget. Job Serebrov still should have all of the $5,000 allocated to him from the FY06 budget.

--- Peg
Peg:

Following is the guidance that the commissioners are providing with respect to the composition of the working group for the Voter Fraud/Voter Intimidation project and the selection process.

8 Member Working Group

Participants to be chosen by the two consultants in consultation with you. There are two slots that will require consensus. If consensus can't be reached, then you should make the decision. If there is real disagreement among the three of you, then the commissioners will make the selection.

The participation process prescribed below provides for political balance. As always, we ask that the group be diverse with respect to participation of men, women and minorities.

4 people from the Academic, Legal and Advocacy sectors - 2 to be chosen by Tova and 2 to be chosen by Job. We support your recommendation that there be at least one academic in the working group to help advise and comment on the construct of the database and you should provide that guidance to Tova and Job.

2 State Level Election Officials - 1 selected by Tova and 1 selected by Job

1 Nonpartisan local election official (selected by you or by consensus among the 3 of you)

1 Representative from DOJ - you had recommended a man who was retired from the Voting Section or perhaps someone else with similar credentials to be selected by you or by consensus among the three of you. We assume that Craig Dosantos (?sp) will participate in this project as an "advisor" and therefore would not take up a slot on the working group.

I will be on travel on Friday (tomorrow), however please feel free to call me on my cell should you have questions or need additional clarification.

The estimated additional hours needed to bring the Voting Fraud/Voter Intimidation Project to a logical stopping point (without requiring a draft statement of work for any future RFPs on the topic) are:

Wang's travel so far, is coming out of FY06. I am only responding to the comment you had in your respond "It does not reflect travel costs incurred against Wang's contract (see attached).

[Attachment: Wang Travel Cost Tracking.xls]

If Wang's travel is coming out of FY06, then why are you deducting it from FY05? Does Wang have a travel fund in FY06?

Our attorneys have said that the travel expenses for these consultants have to come out of FY06 funds, so we bill their travel expenses against the FY06 Research budget and use the travel authorization/travel voucher process (at least for non-local travel). The pay for the consultants' personal services still comes from the FY05 Research budget. --- Peggy

Hello everyone,
I'm sure you have read the article in today's NYT about the voter fraud report this agency issued. Today, Congressman Hinchey and Serrano have issued the following statement. Very shortly, EAC will post and distribute the attached statement to articulate our role and approach to conducting research and the steps we will take to improve our process. Please let me know if you have any questions about this, as I am sure we will all receive phone calls today about this issue. You may also direct people with questions to the statement that will be on the website. I will keep everyone informed as this situation evolves.

Hinchey, Serrano Urge Non-Partisanship, Greater Transparency at Election Assistance Commission

Washington, DC - Today, Congressmen Maurice Hinchey (NY-22) and José E Serrano (NY-16) urged the Election Assistance Commission (EAC) to act with greater transparency and without partisanship. The comments from the congressmen came as the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Financial Services and General Government released a draft version of an EAC report on voter fraud and intimidation that shows significant changes were made to the findings of outside experts before the final report was released.

"The EAC has an obligation to be forthright with the American people and operate transparently and in a non-partisan manner," said Congressman Hinchey, who requested the draft report from EAC Commissioner Donetta L. Davidson during subcommittee hearing last month. "The draft report was commissioned with taxpayer dollars upon a mandate from Congress so that we could learn more about voter fraud and intimidation. The need for this report is even more clear when we see the way in which the Bush administration is carrying out the electoral process and how this system is sliding towards corruption. In hiding a draft report from the public that is significantly different from the final version, the EAC has created a lot more questions than it has answered while stunting debate on the issue. In order for our democracy to function properly it is essential that our elections are free of any corruption and that includes ensuring that the EAC does not work to benefit one political party over the other. To achieve that goal we must have all the facts and opinions on the table, not just some of them. The EAC must never limit discussion and debate."
"The EAC is charged with helping to ensure our elections are trustworthy and administered fairly," said Congressman Serrano, who is Chair of the Appropriations Subcommittee that oversees the EAC budget. "I'm concerned it changes were made to the report on voter fraud because of partisan bias rather than impartial analysis. When you read the draft report side-by-side with the final version, it is clear that important conclusions of the experts who wrote the draft report were excluded from the final product. Among the excluded information—an analysis that undermines the notion that voter fraud is rampant.

"I am concerned that the EAC did not publicly release the taxpayer-funded draft report, and I worry that political considerations may have played a role. We cannot have a politicized EAC, or one that yields to outside pressure. Our democracy, and the American people's faith in it, is far more important than a short-term political advantage."

The draft report was written by outside experts under contract with the EAC. The final report was entitled "Election Crimes: An Initial Review and Recommendations for Future Study" and was issued on December 7, 2006.

The EAC is an independent bipartisan commission created by the 2002 Help America Vote Act in order to disburse funds to the states for the purchase of voting systems, certify voting technologies, develop guidelines and serve as an information resource for election administration.

In an article in USA Today (10/10/2006), is this quote: "Advocates of registration and photo identification laws say they are needed to prevent fraud."

Another quote in the same article is: "Paul DeGregorio, chairman of the Election Assistance Commission, says the laws should not discourage citizens from voting. Far worse, he says, would be for states to ignore problems that cause Americans to distrust the process."

In my opinion as an American citizen who carries all the required papers, DeGregorio is right.

It doesn't matter who votes, since our votes don't count anyway. Politicians do as they please no matter what the people want. As we have seen in the past eight years, the past four years in particular, politicians will do or say anything that will further their personal agendas.

I don't believe enough voting fraud happens to make any kind of difference. And since what the voters want doesn't count anyway, it doesn't actually matter. But what a convenient thing it is on which to focus attention and argument for the very people who don't want their own fraud and dishonesty to be remembered come voting day.

I am an example of exactly what DeGregario spoke of: a citizen who carries all the now-required paperwork, and has finally realized that the system is completely bogus.

All,

Per our meeting this afternoon, the consensus was that Peggy needed a total of $60,000 to fund the contracts for Tova Wang and Job Serebrov ($50,000 for labor and $10,000 for travel expenses). Since only $25,000 was budgeted for both these 2 contractors, an additional $35,000 is needed. Tom directed that the additional required funds be taken from the $150,000 budgeted for the Improving Election Data Collection project. According to Tom, this project will be now be done in-house and so the budgeted funds far exceeds projected expenditures. Therefore, revised budgeted (maximum) amounts are as follows:

- Improving Election Data Collection: $115,000
- Tova Wang: $30,000
- Job Serebrov: $30,000

Plz let me know if the above differs in any way with your understanding. Thanks.

Jeannie:

Karen asked me to provide a response to the following question you received from Roy Saltman:

(2) On p. 27 of the 2005 Annual Report, it states that EAC contracted with two consultants to conduct preliminary research on the issues of voting fraud and voter intimidation. Can you tell me who these organizations or individuals are, and when their reports might be available? If they are available now, how can I obtain them?

The two consultants are Tova Wang and Job Serebrov. We expect the consultants to file a report with the EAC in May. EAC Commissioners will have to review and accept the report before it can be released.

Hope this works for you. --- Peggy
Peggy:

I was just processing your email properly - light bulb moment! The 2 trips of Wang is not coming out of this contract because the 2 trips were processed like any regular travel and they were assigned new/different Act numbers. For Wang's travel to come out of this contract, her travel cannot be processed as a regular travel. If memory serves me correctly, I believe this was the reason why Diana was asking you where these funds was coming out from and I believe she was told - Research.

To date, Wang's travel has been expensed or charged against Research (Survey/Surveys - Contractual services). For Wang's travel to come out of the allocated $5,000, she will have to provide an invoice with all her travel expense. She could either submit this separately or she can add her travel expense with her monthly invoice.

The same applies to Serebrov. So long as they get a different Act number for their travel, their travel expense will not be coming out of the allocated travel fund.

I will be more than happy to answer any questions.

The following members of the Working Group for our Voting Fraud/Voter Intimidation research project will need to make travel arrangements in order to attend an afternoon meeting of the group on May 18 in Washington, DC:

Mark "Thor" Hearne - St Louis, MO
J.R. Perez - Seguin, TX
The Honorable Todd Rokita - Indianapolis, IN Kathy Rogers - Atlanta, GA

I may have one additional member from Albuquerque, NM confirmed early next week.

May these people use Adventure Travel to make these arrangements in the same manner as the Asian Language Working Group? I understand the members of that group made hotel and flight arrangements through Adventure Travel and that these costs were billed directly to EAC. We did plan for EAC to pay for the travel of the Voting Fraud/Voter Intimidation Working Group (budgeted under Research). Devon will prepare their travel authorizations.

I wanted to toss in my vote for the week of our first working meeting. The week of Sept 12 works best for me as far as scheduling things. I don't image that right before or right after Labor Day will really be good for everyone as that is the final vacation time of the summer.

What are your thoughts? I have been writing down various ideas, problems, and possible solutions that I thought of regarding vote fraud potentially for discussion at this meeting. It would be good if the three of us who were hired had a short backgrounder on the other two.

Job
Hi Karen,

Here is the one page vita describing my relevant expertise for the fraud study, as well as a brief letter on my availability and consulting rates.

I will be away from Thursday through Monday, and will be in DC August 31 and September 1 and 2. I will swing by the EAC when I'm there. I look forward to meeting you in person.
I'm going to talk to Bert Benevides this morning about her possibly helping me work on some of these contracts on an ongoing basis.

Will keep you informed.

P.S. Are you going to bring me a present??? I'm about the only staff person here today. (sigh)

Hi Steve and Job,

Steve, below is the bulk of our exchange of emails from the weekend.

With respect to setting up a time to talk in the next day or two, let me throw out two possibilities and see if they work for you: tomorrow, Wednesday at 4 or Thursday at 10:30. Do either of you have conference call capability? Let me know. If necessary, I can do it. And if you have any thoughts in between feel free to email. Thanks.

Hi Job,

These are all good ideas and I would just sort of add to and expand upon them.
First, at the outset, I think we need to be clear about how we are defining fraud. I actually was pleased that the project was called fraud and intimidation because I believe that acts of intimidation -- as well as deceptive practices, eg willfully and knowingly providing false information to voters about the voting process -- are also election fraud. Illegally keeping certain voters from voting has the same distorting impact on election outcomes as ineligible voters casting ballots or some form of modern ballot box stuffing.

Second, we need to research and to the extent possible quantify (here is where Steve may be helpful) what kinds of fraud are -- and are not -- really being committed before we assess the legal system's handling of such cases or make recommendations for how the states and the justice system can better address the problem. In other words we need to break down specifically how much fraud is actually taking place by type of activity, such as:

- absentee/mail ballot fraud
- ex-felons knowingly casting illegal ballots
- voting more than once
- noncitizen voting
- false registration
- intimidating practices (perhaps including legal grey areas like inappropriate challenges at the polls)
- deceptive practices
- fraud by election administrators in the handling or counting of ballots
- machine tampering

This is obviously a tall order, but to me it is only then that we will be in a position to evaluate whether states are treating and remedying the fraud issue appropriately and effectively. We could then, perhaps simultaneously or subsequently, undertake your excellent idea of analyzing the performance of all 50 states and their legal systems in this regard. In addition to nexis or westlaw searches, I suggest it might also be necessary to interview attorneys general, prosecutors, and attorneys to get the information we will require. My concern is that not every case will show up in these databases.

I also strongly recommend we also analyze how the federal system, ie the Department of Justice, both the criminal and civil rights divisions, is handling these issues. It is unclear to me that DOJ is effectively pursuing fraud cases as I defined the term above.

With respect to the working group, I don't know what Karen and Tom have in mind, but I would just add that I think we should have at least one academic, a couple of members of third party organizations, and at a couple of local election officials.

That's all I can think of for now. Let me know what you think. Hope you are enjoying the weekend.

Hi Job,

Thats a good idea, especially given Karen's most recent email. The only problem I have is that the scope of the project is a little unclear to me still. I can come up with lots of topics I'd like to look at, but don't really have a sense of what is feasible in this first stage. I also am unsure whether they would like us to work together or actually split up duties. Do you have a better understanding of this?

I did not know Patricia Young, but I really only worked for Jackson during that one election cycle. I'd love to know more about your work at some point too. And I likewise look forward to meeting you soon!

Dear Tova:

Since we will be doing the lion's share of work on the vote fraud project and in the interest of efficiency, I think it would be a good idea if we could create a topic list for the work division discussion on Tuesday. What do you think? I am looking forward to meeting you.
in the later part of September. Did you know Patricia Young who worked for Jesse Jackson some time ago? We were friends while I was getting my LLM and she was getting her JD at University of Arkansas School of Law. Regards, Job Serebrov
Hi all,

Sorry to have bolted from our phone meeting at 5 today. My wife sang the national anthem at Fenway Park this evening, and I had to take her to the stadium.

Steve
Hi Karen and Tom,

As we discussed yesterday, attached is a preliminary work plan/division of labor for your review. Please let us know if this is sufficient for the present and if you have any comments or questions.

In terms of hours dedicated to the project, Job and Tova are able to commit to 15-20 hours per week assuming that includes reimbursed periodic travel. Steve can do approximately 2 hours per week. We have tentatively scheduled to meet at your offices in DC, if that is convenient for you, on September 20. We will be able to confirm that within the next day or so.

All of us are very eager to get started on this important work as soon as possible. However, because we also have other work related responsibilities, we are a bit reluctant to do so before having an opportunity to review our contracts. We look forward to receiving them so we can get going right away.

Thanks so much. Speak to you soon.

All-

In anticipation of our 45-minute conference call scheduled for Tuesday, September 6 at 4:00 PM, I would ask the three consultants (Steve, Job and Tova) to come prepared to talk about the following:

The major topics and issues which you see as needing immediate attention, definition, delineation, etc.
Rough timelines and timeframes for addressing these major issues and topics
Your major roles and responsibilities and the timelines you envision for meeting your major deliverables

We all realize that this conversation is just a start; I look forward to this beginning and to framing the tasks that lie ahead of us between now and September 30.

Have a wonderful holiday!!
Tova, Job and Steve,

Tom and Karen would like to schedule a conference call with the three of you on Monday, September 12 at 9:30 a.m. for about 20 minutes to discuss the following:

- Finalize contracts
- Finalize consulting hours
- Define Individual roles and responsibilities
- Begin review of Working Group members

Please let me know by COB today if you can do this. Feel free to call if you don't have time to e-mail.

Many thanks.

Hi Karen,

I haven't heard back from you about consulting fees and contracts for the fraud project.

Things seem to be moving ahead. Does that mean that the EAC has approved hiring me at my consulting rate of $250/hour, $2500/day?

Steve
Karen,

The national anthem was great. She described it as "an out of body experience."

I won't be able to make the conference call. I teach M and W 9 to 11 and W 1 to 4. I'll catch up with you after the call.

Thanks,

Steve

Tova and Steve--I just talked with Karen and she does not see a reason why our first meeting has to be in DC. As long as the travel payment is worked out, how do you two feel about coming to Little Rock? Tova, I know you were looking for a reason to come here. I think I could arrange for a meeting room for us, perhaps in the Clinton School of Public Service.

The Monday telephone meeting is essential to contract completion.

Nicole:

Tom and Karen have my resume. I don't know if Diana has it but it would be easier for me if Tom or Karen could make a copy for Diana. This is because I sent Karen, who made Tom a copy of both my resume and a separate document called Election Activities. Can you look into this?

The number of hours we will work on this depends on the funds available for a potential law clerk and most of all travel. Both Tova and I agreed that we will have to interview others, not to mention travel for a potential working group. Tova and I envisioned working 15-20 hours per week with Steve working 2 hours per week. The reason we gave for 15 instead of 20 is to leave room for a law clerk and travel in the budget.

I don't know if you will have much success staying within the budget Karen is talking about ($60,000-$75,000) with hourly consulting rates either. For instance, before serving as a federal judicial law clerk my consulting fees were $175 per hour and now I would charge $200. If you figure that at 20 hours for 4 months you get $64,000 or $48,000 at 15 hours for 4 months. While I do believe that $75,000 may be too low for this project, hourly rates may never get you where you want to go.

What do you think?

Please, each of you, send to Karen (klynndyson@eac.gov), Tom Wilkey (twilkey@eac.gov) and Diana Scott (dscott@eac.gov):

- your resume
- your consulting fees or rates
- the number of hours per week you anticipate working on this project

The EAC staff will finalize your contracts on Monday and need this information to complete the process.

Regarding a conference call: Please advise as to whether 1pm on Tuesday or 9:30 am on Tuesday September 13 are feasible. Thank you.

In any case, my resume and bio are attached. I do not have a set rate, but my understanding is that project will be $500 per 8 hour day. I anticipate working an average of 15 - 20 hours per week.

Either of those times on Tuesday work for me. FYI, Steve is unable to do a meeting on the 20th, and since he teaches Tuesday and Thursday, I'm not sure he'll be around for a call Tuesday.

Let me know if you need anything else. Have a great weekend.

Hi everyone,

This is disappointing because Steve is so qualified and respected. For what its worth, I would strongly support his suggestion of Mike Alvarez. I have actually spoken to Mike about doing a similar study in the past, and he already has ideas about some possible methodologies. Also, he knows everyone in the academic community and is similarly widely respected in the field. His being in LA is an obstacle, but I think not an insurmountable one by any means.

Let us know if we will be speaking tomorrow.

Thanks.

Karen, Tova, and Job,

I'm going to have to withdraw from the Fraud study. I found out this past week that one of my colleagues is very ill and I have agreed with my department head to take over some of his teaching and administrative responsibilities. This will effectively squeeze out any of my remaining free time over the remainder of the Fall semester.

I am disappointed to not be able to continue, but I feel that this is a time when I need to pitch in a little extra at home.

Let me recommend several alternative academic voices whom you might bring in.

Michael Alvarez at Caltech (my counterpart on the Caltech/MIT project) Thad Hall at University of Utah (he was one of the administrative/research assistants on the Ford-Carter commission and has been very active on this subject)
Richard Niemi at Rochester University
Paul Herrnson at Maryland
James Gimpel at Maryland
David Leal at American University
Jonathan Katz at Caltech

Thanks Karen. Looking forward to hearing from you.

Thanks ever so much for following up. Indeed, the Commissioners have reviewed the issue and have agreed in principle, to an approach that would entail hiring a consultant or consultants to help the EAC study and frame the issues of voter fraud and intimidation.

The idea would be that after a period of time, the consultants, and, perhaps, a working group of the EAC, would make a series of recommendations on next steps for the agency to take regarding voter fraud and intimidation.

Thanks for your patience; I hope to have a definitive answer for you by mid-July at the latest.

Ray,

Before I read Rick’s message, Steve Ansolabehere was the first name that came to my mind. This assumes you are looking for part-time, not full-time consultants. I would categorize Steve as very moderate left. I am not certain he is Democrat but would be very surprised to learn he is not. But the main thing about him is that he calls things as he sees them. So if you found a Republican with the same characteristics, that would be ideal. Charles Bullock of the University of Georgia would be a possibility. (Actually, I am not sure of his party either, but I think he may be a Republican.)
I would also suggest you talk to Bruce Cain in the Institute of Governmental Studies at Berkeley. He is very savvy and knows more political scientists than Rick and I do. When I have questions about the political science profession, he's usually the person I go to. His phone number is 510-642-1739. He is also going to be running a UC office in Washington, so he will be more or less living there for the indefinite future. He is someone you ought to get to know.

We are now editing articles for our next issue, which is due out in October. We need to get everything to the printer for this issue in mid-July. So we'd need something from you by early July if it were to make it into that issue. Our deadlines after that are about three months later for each issue.

As far as researchers, I give my highest recommendation to Steve Ansolabehere of MIT, who has already done a bit of research on this issue. He is truly one of the top political scientists in the country working in this field, and he is careful and very fair (I don't know whether I'd count him as "left" or "right").

Dan may have other ideas.

Thanks for the follow-up. As I mentioned to Dan in La Jolla, I do want to commit to doing a paper for ELJ. Aside from my own interest in election law and election administration, I think it is important for your readers to gain a better understanding of the role of the EAC and all that we are doing, particularly in the area of voting system standards and certification. Please tell me what the new deadline is and I will make sure to get you an outline of my intended submission, and of course, a timely draft for your consideration. Thanks again to both of you for the continued opportunity.

On a related note, in Section 241 of HAVA, Congress gives the EAC a laundry list of possible research topics related to improving the process of election administration. Among the suggested topics are the following:

"(6) Nationwide statistics and methods of identifying, deterring, and investigating voting fraud in elections for Federal office;
(7) Identifying, deterring, and investigating methods of voter intimidation."

In order to get this research project started, the EAC would like to engage two research consultants who could bring some level of knowledge and expertise to the table and help the commissioners to come to an agreement on the framework and/or scope of such a research project. Rather than sending something out on the listserv, I thought I would directly solicit your opinions about any names in the academic field that you think we ought to consider. The reason we are looking to employ two consultants is because we would like to achieve a political balance -- one from the left, and one from the right, so to speak. Any thoughts you have on this would be greatly appreciated.

Getting to DC before the second week in August is not possible. First, there is no way that I could get a ticket in any acceptable price range that quick. More importantly, I am in the last month of my judicial clerkship and committed to the judge that I would be here until August 15th to finish all of my cases and anything else for this court term. My official last day is August 19th.

I think it may be a good idea for us to talk about this.

Thanks for getting back to me with your August time schedule and availability. We have several candidates we are considering for this position and plan to interview them in the next 2-3 weeks.

Perhaps we will able to arrange a date and time in late August, when you might be available to come to Washington to meet with the EAC staff and Commissioners. Let me know what dates and times work for you.

Carol and Karen,

Please find attached my memo concerning areas of study the EAC may wish to pursue and trends in voter fraud concerns. In the summary, I have made recommendations for three possible areas of study.

If I can help in any other way on this project, please let me know. I will be in the office Monday and Tuesday of next week.

Also, the stack of papers on which my recommendations are based is on my desk should you need it before I see you again.

Have a great weekend.

Monday is fine. When are good times?

As for an in person meeting, I will be in DC over the Labor Day weekend, from Wed. Aug. 31 through Sat. Sept. 3 for the annual meeting of the American Political Science Association. We can meet then or I can come to DC for a day trip before then if necessary.

In the absence of being able to touch base via telephone-

The EAC is currently seeking several consultants who could work parttime for a six month period (Sept-Feb) to help the agency development a work plan and statement of work around a project the agency might do related to voter fraud and voter intimidation.

For a number of reasons the EAC is interested in involving several consultants in this initial look at the topic. This initial exploration will help the Agency determine how, if at all, it would want to put together a larger project that would be given to an institution or organization to conduct.

I am putting the finishing touches on a consultant statement of work and will send it out to you in the next week to ten days.

It is important for the EAC to contract with these consultants by early September so that they can begin work on this initial work plan before the end of the Federal fiscal year, which is September 30.

Do let me know a particular time and date when we might be able to speak to one another.

I got your phone messages, but missed you when I've called back. I've been in the office intermittently this month (family vacations), but I'm regularly on email. My email address is sda@mit.edu.

I would very much like to work with the EAC as you develop procedures for detecting fraud. Could you give me a sense of what you seek to do and what time commitments and research would be involved?

This morning the Commissioners approved the Statement of Work for the Voter Fraud/Voter Intimidation project consultants, with the caveat that some additional language would be added and the SOW polished up.

Tom, Peg and I are scheduled to interview the first candidate tomorrow morning at 10:00 am and will need your edits to this SOW by COB today.

I am attaching the item again, just in case you don't have a copy. Since I have an appointment out of the office and will be leaving at 4:00 today, I ask that you get your changes and edits to Nicole so that she may enter them and get the revised copy to the candidate first thing in the morning.

Karen,

I have purposely not directed this response to Nicole. The GSA contact is out of the office until tomorrow, 8,17. Based on how Dan's compensation was derived at, he receives $52.083/hour. Perhaps it would be comparable for this individual to get $50/hour. If that is the case, then the total contract amount would be $10,000. Since we haven't spoken, how does that compare to what you had in mind?

Summary of Election Activities of Job Serebrov

Background to Election Problems in Arkansas

Ever since Reconstruction, Arkansas has had a history of election problems. The election fraud that gave rise to the Brooks-Baxter War in Arkansas in the 1870s involved people from both sides of the aisle voting more than once, the dead rising to cast a ballot or two, destroying ballots, creating ballots and making ballot boxes disappear. A strong one-party system perpetuated this tradition into modern times.

In 1995, I met with Arkansas Supreme Court Justice Tom Glaze to discuss voting issues and my efforts to clean up the electoral process. Although supportive, Justice Glaze encouraged me to proceed with caution. Before being elected to the Supreme Court, Justice Glaze had been employed in the 1960s by Gov. Win Rockefeller to clean up ballot fraud throughout Arkansas. He was nearly disbarred in the process by those involved in ballot fraud in a small, rural county.

Shortly after my discussion with Justice Glaze, I discovered how pervasive the election problems were in the state. For instance, ballot boxes were stuffed or disappeared into the night only to return altered. Contrary to state law, county sheriffs running in contested elections maintained custody of the ballot boxes. In one instance, 20 voted ballot boxes were found in the attic of a sheriff's deputy after he died.

In my private practice as an attorney, I represented numerous clients in county election contests throughout Arkansas. I also represented clients in matters before the Federal Election Commission. I have never lost an election case. Finally, I was hired as a consultant to a major nonprofit legal organization to review and summarize the 2002 amendments to federal election laws and apply the new law to 10 scenarios.

Member, Washington County Board of Election Commissioners, Fayetteville, Arkansas (1990-1996)

This board consisted of three commissioners; I was the lone Republican. We were charged with supervising the training of poll workers, evaluating voting systems and then purchasing an optical scan system to be used countywide, preparing and justifying our annual budget before the Washington County Quorum Court, hiring and supervising staff and sitting as an administrative tribunal.

When I first came on the board, Washington County was primarily a one-party county and the Democrats were used to running elections according to tradition rather than the law. I had to battle with the two Democrats on the board to enforce election laws within the county. As I started to force the issue in the courts, the Republican Party gained strength. Four years later and after outlasting eight Democrat commissioners, I was able to work with new Democrat commissioners who recognized the need to enforce the law. At this point, the commission requested that I draft administrative regulations for the board. These remain in place today.

Founder, President, General Counsel; Arkansans for Fair Elections (1994-1999)

In 1994, Gov. Mike Huckabee (R), then a candidate for lieutenant governor, asked me to serve as his general counsel for ballot fraud protection. Thinking it best to act independently of any candidate, I formed Arkansans for Fair Elections. I served as the organization's president and, later, general counsel. This group launched a statewide educational campaign to train poll watchers to recognize irregular or fraudulent electoral procedures; this included the creation of literature and a video. Our extensive public relations campaign brought media attention to the issue. We also organized a statewide team of citizen poll watchers and attorneys to ensure that the election laws were fairly enforced. We were so successful in the lieutenant governor's race that Arkansans for Fair Elections was asked to continue the effort until 1999 when I moved to Louisiana.
General Counsel - Ballot Fraud Protection Committee, Republican Party of Arkansas (1995-1999)

In late 1995, Asa Hutchinson, chairman of the Republican Party of Arkansas, appointed me as general counsel for the newly formed Ballot Fraud Protection Committee of the state party. I retained this position until 1999. I was responsible for coordinating statewide enforcement efforts and directing a legal team to respond to problematic situations prior to and on election day.

(Through my role with Arkansans for Fair Elections and the Ballot Fraud Protection Committee, I successfully sued or negotiated a settlement in more than two-thirds of the 75 counties in Arkansas over electoral irregularities.)

Legal Consultant to Republican Members of the Arkansas General Assembly (1994-1996)

Republicans in the General Assembly requested that I review and draft suggested changes to Arkansas election law. Based on my personal experience as an election commissioner and as an election attorney, I identified a number of areas of concern and drafted new statutes modeled on the best examples that I could find from other states. My proposal was not passed by the Democrat-controlled General Assembly as a package, however, several of its components were passed into law.

Consultant to the Arkansas Court of Appeals Redistricting Commission (1996-1999)

I drafted five redistricting bills and maps for the constitutionally required redistricting of the Arkansas Court of Appeals. These bills were based on current U.S. Supreme Court precedent regarding gerrymandering. I had to present each bill and give supporting testimony to the commission.

Director of International Development - Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, Louisiana (2000-2003)

Part of my duties as director was to develop international cooperative projects. The theme of several of these proposals was democratization. In each case, I required review of the national election code of the country involved.

My activities in Namibia led to a request by the director of the Namibian Election Commission, Joram Rukambe and the Speaker of the Namibian National Assembly, Dr. Mose Tjitendero to review and suggest changes to the Namibian election code. This review took three months and resulted in proposed alterations to a number of code sections. These suggestions were considered by the Namibian National Assembly and a number were incorporated into the code revisions. Additionally, I drafted legislation for the Speaker to guarantee voting rights to agricultural workers that were being denied by the owners of the farms. This legislation also was passed into law.

During this time, I was qualified as an election expert and placed on an election consultant list by the United Nations, IFES and the Electoral Institute of Southern Africa.

The EAC is currently seeking several consultants who could work parttime for a six month period (Sept-Feb) to help the agency develop a work plan and statement of work around a project the agency might do related to voter fraud and voter intimidation.

For a number of reasons the EAC is interested in involving several consultants in this initial look at the topic. This initial exploration will help the Agency determine how, if at all, it would want to put together a larger project that would be given to an institution or organization to conduct.

I am putting the finishing touches on a consultant statement of work and will send it out to you in the next week to ten days.

It is important for the EAC to contract with these consultants by early September so that they can begin work on this initial work plan before the end of the Federal fiscal year, which is September 30.

Do let me know a particular time and date when we might be able to speak to one another.

Hi,

I got your phone messages, but missed you when I’ve called back. I’ve been in the office intermittently this month (family vacations), but I’m regularly on email. My email address is sda@mit.edu.

I would very much like to work with the EAC as you develop procedures for detecting fraud. Could you give me a sense of what you seek to do and what time commitments and research would be involved?

I will be in DC at the end of August for the annual meeting of the American Political Science Association. I am personally very committed to helping the EAC succeed.

Hi Karen,

I am still in St. Paul but I got your message. The best date for me to come down would be August 23 with August 25 as my second choice. Let me know if either of these works for you. I very much look forward to seeing you and talking to you more about this project.

I'll be back in the office tomorrow if you would like to talk.

Thanks so much.

You'll notice from the e-mails to Tova, Job and Steve, that I've staggered the calls within 30 minutes of one another.

I did this, because it occurred to me that we may want to interview them all at once or in succession, one after another.

Once they tell us a date, then you can decide how best to conduct the interviews. And, once that's decided I'll go back to them and give them a precise time when we'll be talking to them.

Thanks

Greetings-

Tom Wilkey and I are working to schedule a series of conference calls with three consultants we have identified to work with us to help us develop the voter fraud and voter intimidation project.

We have tentatively scheduled a series of telephone interviews with these three consultants (all of whom would be hired to work on this project) for August 17, 18 and 19.

Attached you will find a draft of a Statement of Work that has been developed for these consultants. Dan Murphy's contract was used as a template for this.

I've sent this document to you all because I need your edits and corrections to this document, based on your expertise either in contracting, human resources or the subject area.

Since Tom and I will be interviewing the candidates in two weeks, I'm hoping you can react to the document and get to Tom and Nicole your changes by mid-week next week.

I will then ask Nicole to send the draft statement of work to the three candidates, so they might refer to it, prior to our interviews.

Thanks for your input and assistance.

I write to see if you might be available to come to Washington on Monday, August 1 to meet with several EAC staff and Commissioners to discuss the voter fraud/voter intimidation project and your possible work as a consultant on the project.

I'd like to schedule this 1-2 hour meeting for sometime between 1 and 3 in the afternoon.

Might you be available to come to Washington for this?

Karen:

Getting to DC before the second week in August is not possible. First, there is no way that I could get a ticket in any acceptable price range that quick. More importantly, I am in the last month of my judicial clerkship and committed to the judge that I would be here until August 15th to finish all of my cases and anything else for this court term. My official last day is August 19th.

I think it may be a good idea for us to talk about this.

As I mentioned in my message, I'm putting the finishing touches on the Statement of Work and will get that to you shortly.

At the moment, we have several other consultant candidates for this project. Ideally, you all could/would work as a team on the project.

One of the candidates has suggested that we might be able to set up a series of conference calls in lieu of in-person interviews, that may prove very difficult to schedule in August.

I'm working on this as a possibility for that third week in August, as well.

Will be in touch.

Hi All-

Well, I have the unhappy task of trying to identify a date and time when we might schedule a series of conference calls with the consultants we've identified as possible candidates to work on the voter fraud/intimidation project.

Since August is impossible and horrible in terms of everyone being in the same place, I thought it might be easier to try and schedule three calls—one hour each in duration—in which the Commissioners could talk to these candidates.

I'd like to "start the bidding" for the week of August 15.

Actually, I happen to know that all of the candidates could be available August 22 or 23 at some point in the day.

Let me know if your folks could be available by phone at any of these days and times.

I've placed another call to Dr. Steve and still have not touched base with him.

I'd like to propose that, should I not hear from him by Wednesday of this week, we go ahead with the idea of a Job Sebarov/ Tova Wang consulting team to develop a project scope of work for the EAC around voter fraud and intimidation.

I'd like to further suggest that we bring them in for interviews with Ray, Paul and other key EAC staff on Monday August 1.

If we are able to line up Dr. Steve as a consultant on this project, I would suggest he also be brought in for an interview on this day.

Thoughts?

Tom and Carol-

Who should do the interviewing? Paul, Ray, Tom, Julie, others? Is this a panel interview or interviews with individual EAC staff? Shall we have them interview separately or together?

I will then check the schedules of the EAC interviewers to determine if August 1, say 2:00-4:00, works for them.

Job Description
U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) Voter Fraud Project Consultant

The U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) seeks to identify a senior-level project consultant to assist with the oversight and development of a study and possible project examining U.S. election voter fraud.

The consultant must have a knowledge of voter fraud and an understanding of the complexities, nuances and challenges which surround the topic. The EAC is particularly interested in candidates with experience in elections, with public policy and the law. The consultant must be able to demonstrate an ability to approach the issue of voter fraud in a balanced, nonpartisan fashion.

This consultant, whose contract would run for the period June-November, 2005, would be responsible for conceptualizing a project scope of work around the issue and from that, developing a statement of work for a research project around the topic.

In consultation with EAC staff, EAC Commissioners, and other key EAC stakeholders, the consultant will develop a project plan around voter fraud. The consultant will recommend certain EAC project activities related to voter fraud and will develop a scope of work for an EAC research study on voter fraud. The consultant will oversee and manage various processes related to EAC contracts awarded for work related to voter fraud.

EAC’s consultant fees are competitive and are awarded based on the candidates’ relevant background and experience.
Karen:

I do have some changes to suggest to the language of this job description... I may not get to it this morning, but should get to it by early afternoon. Has Paul given you any comments on this?? Since Paul is the one pushing for this study to be conducted, it seems to me that he should do the "heavy lifting" on moving this forward. Just a thought.

I'll get back to you this afternoon.

Thanks.

Dear Karen:

Thanks for calling about the potential voter fraud project. I spoke to Julie this morning and indicated that I had done some voter fraud research in the late 90s while proposing revisions in statutory language and criminal penalties for criminal election violations in Arkansas. I would be interested in the contract for this project.

I am looking forward to discussing the with you in the next few weeks.

Per our discussion, I should have some names later today of possible academic researchers for the voter fraud/voter intimidation study. I assume you are collecting names from the other commissioners as well. Additionally, I ran across the article below in today's Seattle Times...

6 accused of casting multiple votes

By Keith Ervin
Seattle Times staff reporter

Criminal charges have been filed against six more King County voters for allegedly casting more than one ballot under a variety of circumstances in last November's election, prosecutors said yesterday.

Two defendants, William A. Davis of Federal Way and Grace E. Martin of Enumclaw, were accused of casting absentee ballots in the names of their recently deceased spouses, Sonoko Davis and Lawrence Martin, respectively.

A mother and daughter were also charged with casting a ballot in the name of the mother's dead husband. The mother, Harline H.L. Ng, and her daughter, Winnie W.Y. Ng, both of Seattle, signed their names as witnesses to the "X" marked on the ballot of Jacob Ng, who had died in February 2004.

Jared R. Hoadley of Seattle was accused of casting a ballot in the name of Hans Pitzen, who had lived at the same Seattle address as Hoadley and who died last May.

Dustin S. Collings, identified as a homeless Seattle resident, was charged with casting two ballots, both using the alias of Dustin Ocoilain, a name that was listed twice on the voter-registration rolls.

The defendants are charged with repeat voting, a gross misdemeanor that carries possible jail time of up to one year and a fine of up to $5,000.
Election officials asked prosecutors to investigate the voters after news reporters and a blogger reported that they may have voted twice. The voters will be arraigned July 5 in King County District Court.

Two other voters previously received deferred sentences — and avoided jail time — after they pleaded guilty to charges of repeat voting.

The King County Sheriff's Office is investigating several other cases, prosecutors reported yesterday. The investigations resulted from the intense scrutiny surrounding the governor's election in which Democrat Christine Gregoire defeated Republican Dino Rossi by 129 votes after he narrowly won two earlier vote counts.

After the November election, prosecutors also successfully challenged the voter registrations of 648 felons whose right to vote had not been restored.

Vote Buying a Way of Life in W.Va. County

By LAWRENCE MESSINA
The Associated Press
Monday, June 20, 2005; 5:09 PM

HAMLIN, W.Va. -- According to political lore, just before John F. Kennedy's momentous win in the 1960 West Virginia primary, the Democratic boss of Logan County asked the Kennedy campaign for "35"—meaning $3,500—to buy votes for the presidential candidate. In an apparent misunderstanding, Kennedy's people delivered $35,000 in cash in two briefcases.

West Virginia's coal country has a long and rich history of vote-buying—which explains why many folks in Lincoln County all but shrugged over the indictment last month of five people on federal charges they secured votes for liquor or a $20 bill or two.

Sharrell Lovejoy, 83, said he has heard rumors of vote-buying since he opened his Bobcat Restaurant on Hamlin's main drag, in 1948.

"It's gone on for ages," said Lovejoy, behind his diner's hand-cranked register. "I'm sure they're still doing it. They're just more careful about it."

As with past election fraud probes, the latest case targets solely Democrats, who dominate the voter rolls and local governments through the region. In Lincoln County, population 22,100, Democrats outnumber Republicans 4-to-1; the indictment focuses largely on the party's primary elections, going back to 1990.

Not that the GOP has clean hands. Republican former Gov. Arch Moore pleaded guilty to five corruption-related charges in 1990, including one that alleged he spent $100,000 in unreported campaign cash during his successful 1984 campaign.

"This seems to be something that is just in the blood of people in southern West Virginia. They're always looking for ways to get away with this," said Ken Hechler, who fielded election fraud complaints as West Virginia's secretary of state from 1985 to 2000.

With Hechler's help, a state-federal task force secured more than two dozen election-related convictions in Mingo County in the 1980s. Ensnared officials included a former sheriff, a county commissioner, a school board president and a Democratic Party chairman.

In the 1990s, politicians in neighboring Logan County found themselves on the defensive. Two state legislators, the county assessor and a Circuit Court judge, among others, went to jail on corruption charges that included vote-buying.

Federal investigators revisited Logan County last year. The sheriff and a city police chief resigned and pleaded guilty to exchanging money for votes. Three other people were convicted on related charges.

The current case targets Circuit Court clerk Greg Stowers, 48, the son of Lincoln County’s longtime Democratic Party chairman; his deputy, Clifford Odell "Groundhog" Vance, 49; Jackie David Adkins, 36, a state highway worker; Wandell "Rocky" Adkins, 49, no relation; and Toney "Zeke" Dingess, 34.

All five have pleaded not guilty. The defense alleges that two convicted felons used by the government as informants lied to investigators to avoid stiff sentences on weapons charges.

The defense also says the government used illegal tactics during its investigation, intimidating voters by filming at polling places and trailing voters home. Prosecutors countered that the U.S. Justice Department's Public Integrity Section approved the investigators' techniques.

Prosecutors allege the defendants enlisted precinct captains to pay off voters and hand out slates listing the preferred candidates. Most votes were bought for $20 apiece, prosecutors said. The indictment also said Stowers drove to Kentucky and filled his pickup truck with booze for distribution to voters during the 1994 primary.

The indictment cites 16 voters who were allegedly paid off. Prosecutors have not said just how many voters, all told, were supposedly bought or how much was spent, but said the conspirators assembled $25,000 for one election alone to bribe voters.

The evidence includes footage from a hidden camera and microphone that informant Wayne Watts wore during the 2004 primary as he tried to get people to talk about buying votes.

"Man," Watts is heard muttering as he walks away from one group of locals who professed to know nothing about money and candidate lists changing hands, "this ain't no way to run an election."

Re: Communication of Award of Contracts EAC 05-66 and EAC 05-67, Personal Services Contracts with Tova Wang and Job Serebrov

In late August and early September 2005 a series of emails and phone calls were exchanged with Job Serebrov and Tova Wang in order to communicate the details of personal services contracts that were awarded to them. The substance of these e-mails and phone calls related to Mr. Serebrov and Ms. Wang’s contracts, described the various services they would perform for EAC related to researching and possibly developing a future project that would study and analyze voting fraud and intimidation. These emails included transmitting a statement of work that would govern their work as well as emails and phone calls to establish a kick-off meeting that would provide information to them so that Mr. Serebrov and Ms. Wang could begin work.

Since that time, Ms. Wang and Mr. Serebrov have engaged in substantial work on this project. This has included developing, outlining and providing to EAC staff, a work plan for the project, meeting and conversing with one another to discuss the focus and work of the project, interviewing prospective persons who would serve on the project’s review panel and presenting this initial list of persons to the EAC to be considered as members of this project review panel who would assess and review the project’s work.

Section 241 of HAVA enumerates a number of periodic studies of election administration issues in which the U.S. Election Assistance Commission may elect to engage. In general “On such periodic basis as the Commission may determine, the Commission shall conduct and make available to the public studies regarding the election administration issues described in subsection (b)”

Sections 241(b) (6) and (7) list the following election administration issues:

The consultant(s) must of have knowledge of voting fraud and voter intimidation along with an understanding of the complexities, nuances and challenges which surround the topics. The EAC is particularly interested in candidates with experience in elections, with public policy and with the law. The consultant(s) must be able to demonstrate an ability to approach the issues of voting fraud and voter intimidation in a balanced, nonpartisan fashion.

A written summary of this research, and a copy of any source documentation used, will be presented to EAC.

3. Identifying, in consultation with EAC, and convening a working group of key individuals and representatives of organizations knowledgeable about the topics of voting fraud and voter intimidation. The working group's goals and objectives and meeting agendas will be vetted with key EAC staff.

4. Developing a project scope of work and a project work plan related to voting fraud and voter intimidation. The consultants (s) will develop a draft scope of work and project work plan for EAC's consideration based on research into the topics, the deliberations and findings of the working group, and the consultants' understanding of EAC's mission and agency objectives.

5. Authoring a report summarizing the key findings of this preliminary study of voting fraud and voter intimidation. The report will also include suggestions for specific activities that EAC may undertake to address these topics.

From this initial research and exploration of these topics the consultant (s) may be retained to help oversee follow-on research projects and contracts EAC may pursue on the topics of voting fraud and voter intimidation.

Hi Karen and Nicole,

I know you guys have been swamped, but I wanted to check in because I haven't heard from you and I am getting all sorts of information from Job, second hand. I would rather not operate that way. Is it the case that the contracts have been finalized? Can you give me a hint about the terms? When might I be seeing a copy? Thanks so much.

Hi Karen,

I haven't heard back from you about consulting fees and contracts for the fraud project.

Things seem to be moving ahead. Does that mean that the EAC has approved hiring me at my consulting rate of $250/hour, $2500/day?

Job-

Tell me again, what your normal compensation rates are (hourly, weekly or monthly). I thought you had sent me an e-mail on this but can't locate one.

Tom Wilkey and I must wrap this up by Thursday (so that we can commit the necessary funds).

You and Tova will know, by then, how we will be proceeding with the voting fraud consulting team and what your compensation will be.

Thanks for your patience.

Statement of Work
Assistance with developing an Election Assistance Commission (EAC) Voter Fraud and Voter Intimidation Project

Background

Section 241 of HAVA enumerates a number of periodic studies of Election Administrations issues in which the U.S. Election Assistance Commission may elect to engage. In general “On such periodic basis as the Commission may determine, the Commission shall conduct and make available to the public studies regarding the election administration issues described in subsection (b), with the goal of promoting methods of voting and administering elections....”

Specifically, Section 241b 6 and 7 describes Election administration issues such as:

6. Nationwide statistics and methods of identifying, deterring and investigating voting fraud in election for Federal offices and

7. Identifying, deterring and investigation methods of voter intimidation.

Building on this HAVA reference to studies of voter fraud and voter intimidation, the EAC Board of Advisors has indicated a priority interest in further study of these issues to determine how the EAC might respond to them.

The U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) seeks to identify senior-level project consultants to develop various project activities and studies related to U.S. election voter fraud and voter intimidation.

The consultant(s) must of have knowledge of voter fraud and intimidation along with an understanding of the complexities, nuances and challenges which surround the topics. The EAC is particularly interested in candidates with experience in elections, with public policy and the law. The consultant (s) must be able to demonstrate an ability to approach the issues of voter fraud and intimidation in a balanced, nonpartisan fashion.
Duties

The consultant (s), whose contract would run for the period September-February, 2005, would be responsible for the following.

1. Performing background research, including a state-by-state administrative and case law review related to voter fraud and intimidation, and a review of current voter fraud and intimidation activities taking place with key government agencies, civic and advocacy organizations. This review will be summarized and presented to the EAC.

2. Identifying and convening a working group of key individuals and organizations knowledgeable about the topics of voter fraud and intimidation. The list of working group members and the methods used to identify the groups members will be shared with EAC staff prior to the confirmation of the working group. The working group’s goals and objectives and meeting agendas will be vetted with key EAC staff.

3. Developing a project scope of work and a project work plan related to voter fraud and intimidation. Based on research into the topics, the deliberations and findings of the working group, and the consultants’ understanding of the EAC’s mission and agency objectives, the consultants will develop a draft scope of work and project work plan for the EAC’s consideration.

4. Authoring a report summarizing the key findings of this preliminary study of voter fraud and intimidation. The report will also include suggestions for specific activities the EAC may undertake around these topics.

From this initial research and exploration of these topics the consultant (s) may be retained to help oversee follow-on research projects and contracts EAC may develop on the topics of voter fraud and intimidation.

Subject Re: project

Job-

Thanks ever so much for following up. Indeed, the Commissioners have reviewed the issue and have agreed in principle, to an approach that would entail hiring a consultant or consultants to help the EAC study and frame the issues of voter fraud and intimidation.

The idea would be that after a period of time, the consultants, and, perhaps, a working group of the EAC, would make a series of recommendations on next steps for the agency to take regarding voter fraud and intimidation.

Thanks for your patience; I hope to have a definitive answer for you by mid-July at the latest.

Tom and Jeannie-

At yesterday's research briefing, the Commissioners approved the concept of a series of scholarly articles that would cover various "Trends in Election Administration"

There was general agreement that the EAC would produce, by the end of this year, two of these articles that might be on topics such as early voting, restoration of felon rights, vote centers, etc.

I'd like to have a brief meeting the end of this week or the beginning of next with you, Jeannie and myself to go over some of the finer points of this idea and to put in place a process to get this project moving.

Shall we meet Friday morning at 11:00?

I'd like for us to identify the writers we want to use and the process we will use to determine the selection of topics for articles. As the Chair suggested, we should also discuss in some detail, the editorial guidelines we will use that will guide the work that our writers will do for us.

Thanks

I know that People For the American Way delivered petitions to EAC about release of the Fraud report but I need to know what other communications EAC has had with People For about the study.

Was it represented on the study's working group? If so, by whom? Did they write to us and did we answer? Did anybody from there talk with anybody at EAC about the study and our work? Thanks.
Please print for Paul to take on the trip.

Chair Davidson and Tom-

You may recall that during your last Commissioner's meeting you requested that a draft of the EAC Voter ID report be ready by January 5. Attached please find the first draft of such a report that I have prepared, based on the Eagleton Voter ID report and study.

There are several points in the document where I raise questions about the data or Eagleton's findings from their analysis. Certainly, before we would publish this report, we would need Eagleton to review it and to verify that we have accurately represented their findings and conclusions.

Hopefully, this is a first good step towards publishing something on voter identification. I look forward to your suggestions for next steps.
EAC Report on Voter Identification

Executive Summary

The Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) authorizes the United States Election Assistance Commission (EAC) to conduct periodic studies of election administration issues. HAVA Section 303 (b) mandates that first time voters who register by mail are required to show proof of identity before being allowed to cast a ballot. The law prescribes certain requirements concerning this section, but also leaves considerable discretion to the States for its implementation. The EAC sought to examine how these voter identification requirements were implemented in the 2004 general elections and to prepare guidance for the states on this topic.

In May 2005 EAC entered into a contract with the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey and the Moritz College of Law at the Ohio State University to perform a review and legal analysis of state legislation, administrative procedures and court cases, and to perform a literature review on other research and data available on the topic of voter identification requirements. Further, the contractor was to analyze the problems and challenges of voter identification, to hypothesize alternative approaches and recommend various policies that could be applied to these approaches.

The contractor also performed a statistical analysis of the relationship of various requirements for voter identification to voter turnout in the 2004 election. Using two sets of data, aggregate turnout data at the county level for each state, and reports of individual voters collected in the November 2004 Current Population Survey conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau, the contractor found the overall relationship between the stringency of ID requirements and turnout to be fairly small, but statistically significant.

Based on The Eagleton Institute year-long inquiry into voter identification requirements EAC will implement one or more of the following recommendations:

- Further research into the connection between voter ID requirements and the number of ballots cast and counted;

- A state-by-state review of the impact that voter ID requirements are having on voter’s participation;

- A state-by-state review of the relationship between ballot access and ballot security and the number of voters whose ballot is counted;

- A state-by-state review of time periods between voters casting of provisional ballots and the time allowed to return with an ID as well as a review of acceptable forms of identification other than photo ID.
Introduction

This study was conducted at a time in which considerable attention is being paid to the issue of voter identification. Proponents of stricter identification requirements base their case on improving the security of the ballot by reducing opportunities for multiple voting or voting by those who are not eligible. The goal is to ensure that only those legally entitled to vote do so, and do so only once at each election. Opponents of stricter ID requirements seek to ensure board access to a regular ballot. There is a fear that some voters -- racial and ethnic minorities, young and elderly voters-- lack convenient access to required ID documents, or that these voters may be fearful of submitting their ID documents for official scrutiny.

This report considers policy issues associated with the voter ID debate. It examines the relationships between voter ID requirements and voter turnout along with the various policy implications of the issue.

Methodology of the Study

In May 2005, under contract with the EAC, the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, and the Moritz College of Law at the Ohio State University undertook a review and legal analysis of state statutes, regulations and litigation concerning voter identification and provisional voting as well as a statistical analysis of the relationship of various requirements for voter identification to turnout in the 2004 election. The contract also included research and study related to provisional voting requirements. These research findings were submitted and reviewed by the EAC as a separate study.

The Eagleton Institute of Politics gathered information on the voter identification requirements in 50 states and the District of Columbia for 2004. Based on interpretations of state statutes and supplemental information provided through conversations with state election officials, state ID requirements were divided into five categories, with each category of identification more rigorous than the one preceding: stating name, signing name, signature match, presenting an ID, and the most rigorous, presenting a government photo ID. The Eagleton Institute also categorized and identified each state according to maximum and minimum identification requirements. Maximum requirements refer to the most that voters may be asked to do or show at the polling place. Minimum requirements refer to the most that voters can be required to do or show in order to cast a regular ballot. These definitions and the subsequent state-by-state analysis of voter identification requirements omitted those cases in which a particular voter's eligibility might be questioned using a state's voter ballot challenge process.

Two data sets were used to apply the criteria (variables) that were developed above: aggregate voter turnout data at the county level which was gathered from the EAC's 2004 Election Day Survey and; reports of individual voters collected through the November 2004 Current Population Survey administered by the U.S. Census Bureau. Use of EAC survey data and Census Bureau CPS data provided a way to cross-check the validity of the analysis and conclusions that would be drawn regarding the effect of voter ID requirements on voter turnout.

Study Oversight and Methodological Review

A draft of the Eagleton Institute report and findings on voter identification requirements was critiqued by a peer review group convened by the Eagleton Institute. A second review of the study's research and statistical methodologies was conducted using a group of research and statistical experts independently convened by the EAC. Comments and insights of the peer review group members were taken into account in the drafting of a study report although there was not unanimous agreement among the individual reviewers regarding the study findings and recommendations.

Summary of the Research

Maximum and Minimum Voter Identification Requirements

In order to analyze what, if any, correlation may exist between a State’s voter identification requirements and voter turnout, the Eagleton Institute first coded a state according to how demanding its voter ID requirement was. The voter ID requirement, ranked from lowest to highest was as follows: stating one’s name, signing one’s name, matching one’s signature to a signature on file, providing a form of identification and, providing a form of photo identification. Several possible caveats to this ranking system were noted. For all states which had photo identification requirements in 2004, voters without a photo ID were permitted to cast a regular ballot after signing an affidavit regarding his or her identity and eligibility. These voters were also allowed to provide other forms of ID. The researchers also noted that while each state may be assigned to a category, that categorization may not reflect the actual practice related to voter identification that may or may not have taken place at many polling places.

Research performed for this study by the Moritz College of Law found that states had five different types of maximum identification requirements in place on Election Day 2004. For the purposes of this study a requirement that called for a signed affidavit or the provision of other forms of ID was considered the most rigorous or the “maximum” requirement. At the polling place voters were asked to:

- State his or her name (10 states)
- Sign his or her name (13 states and the District of Columbia)
- Sign his or her name, which would be matched to a signature on file (seven states)
- Provide a form of identification that did not necessarily include a photo (15 states)
- Provide a photo identification (five states)

Using the same criteria, but applying them as minimum rather than maximum criteria for voting the research showed: (check this section- it doesn’t really make sense)

- State his or her name (12 states)
- Sign his or her name (14 states and the District of Columbia)
- Matching the voter’s signature to the signature on file (6 states)
- Provide a non-photo identification (14 states)
- Swear by an affidavit (4 states)

The results of the research are summarized in Table 1.

Election laws in several states offer exceptions to these ID requirements if potential voters lack the necessary form of identification. Laws in these states set a minimum requirement that a voter may be required to satisfy in order to vote using a regular ballot. In 2004 none of the states required photo identification as a minimum standard for voting with a regular ballot. That is, voters who lacked photo ID were allowed to vote in all states, if he or she was able to meet another ID requirement.

The Relationship of Voter Identification Requirements to Voter Turnout

A statistical analysis examining the variation in turnout rates based on the type of voter ID required by each state in the 2004 election was conducted using two sets of data: 1) aggregate turnout data at the county level for each state (compiled by the Eagleton Institute of Politics—footnote about how they collected the data) and 2) individual level survey data included in the November 2004 Current Population Survey (CPS), conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau.
The analysis looked at the voter identification requirements as a continuous variable and as a series of discrete variables. As a continuous variable the maximum voter identification requirements were ranked according to how demanding they were judged to be, with photo identification considered to be the most demanding requirement (what about affidavit?????). Used as discrete variable, the statistical analysis considered stating the name as the least demanding ID requirement; the other ID requirements were then compared to that requirement.

The statistical analysis performed by the Eagleton Institute of Politics found that when averaging across counties in each state, statewide turnout is negatively correlated to maximum voter identification requirements \((r = -0.30, p \text{ less than } .05)\). When a statistical analysis is performed on the other minimum voter ID requirements (with affidavit being the most demanding requirement), the correlation between voter identification and turnout is negative, but not statistically significant \((r = -0.20, p = .16)\). These findings would suggest that the relationship between turnout rates and minimum requirements may not be linear.

The aggregate data show that 60.9 percent of the estimated citizen voting age population voted in 2004. Taking into account the maximum requirements, an average of 64.6 percent of the voting age population turned out in states that required voters to state their names, compared to 58.1 percent in states that required photo identification. A similar trend was found when analyzing minimum ID requirements. Sixty-three percent of the voting age population turned out in states requiring voters to state their name, compared to 60.1 percent in states that required an affidavit from voters. This analysis showed there was not a clear, consistent linear relationship between turnout and minimum identification requirements.

(insert table 2- Variation in 2004 State Turnout Based on Voter Identification Requirements)

Multivariate models of analysis using aggregate-level data

The Eagleton Institute of Politics performed an additional analysis that would estimate the effects of voter identification requirements, that took into account the electoral context in 2004 and, the demographic characteristics of the population in each county. The model also considers such variables as whether or not the county was 1) in a presidential battleground state, 2) if the county was in a state with a competitive race for government and/or the U.S. Senate, 3) the percentage of voting-age population in each county that was Hispanic or African-American 4) the percentage of county residents age 65 and older, 5) the percent of county residents below the poverty line, and 6) the number of days between each state's registration deadline and the election.
The results of this statistical modeling and subsequent analysis indicated that the stricter voter ID requirements of matching a voter’s signature to a signature on file or with presenting a non-photo identification are associated with lower voter turnout when compared to voter turnout in states that required voters to simply state his or her name. These conclusions were reached when variables 1-5 listed above were held constant.

Other results from the Eagleton Institute analysis of stricter voter identification requirements showed that:

- Increased voter turnout was associated with whether the county was in a battleground state or whether that state have a competitive race for governor and/or U.S. Senate.
- A slight negative effect on turnout was correlated with those state’s with a longer time between the closing date for registration and the election.
- Voter turnout declined as the percentage of Hispanics in a county’s population increased.
- Higher turnout (and a positive correlation) was associated with a higher percentage of senior citizens and household median income.
- The percentage of African-Americans in the county did not have a significant effect on turnout.

The Eagleton Institute analysis of minimum voter identification requirements showed that:

- A relationship between minimum voter ID requirements and turnout was not demonstrated.
- Battleground states and those with competitive state races had a significant and positive correlation to turnout.
- A higher percentage of senior citizens in the county and higher household median income were associated with higher turnout and showed a positive correlation to turnout.
- The percentage of Hispanics in the county was associated with reduced turnout.
- The increased number of days between the closing date for registration was associated with reduced turnout.

The analysis of these aggregate, county-level data showed a significant correlation, between maximum voter identification requirements (a signature match and non-photo identification, but not a photo identification) and lower turnout in the 2004 election. This correlation was also significant when compared to the minimum voter ID requirement of the voter simply having to state his or her name.

Multivariate analysis using individual level turnout data

This analysis which used November 2004 Current Population Survey data conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau is based on reports from self-described registered voters. Not included in the analysis are persons who said they are not registered to vote, those who said they cast absentee ballots and those who said they were not U.S. citizens. The CPS' Voting and Registration Supplement consisted of interviews, either by telephone or in person, with 96,452 respondents. (why is the N is Table 3 54,973?)

In addition to the five maximum voter identification requirements (enumerated on page XX) the analysis performed included other socioeconomic, demographic and political factors that could have influenced turnout in the 2004 election. These independent variables were analyzed against the dependent variable of whether or not the respondent said he or she voted in the November 2004 election.

In this analysis three of the voter identification requirements were shown to have a statistically significant correlation with whether or not the survey respondents said they have voted in 2004. Lower voter turnout was associated with:

- those states with maximum voter requirements to sign one’s name,
- those states with maximum voter requirements to provide a non-photo ID or photo ID, or
- those states with the minimum voter requirement to swear by an affidavit in order to cast a ballot without the state-required identification

Increased voter turnout showed:

- A significant correlation with the competitiveness of the Presidential race (explain).
- African-American voters were more likely than white or other voters to say they have voted.
- Income and marital status were positive predictors of voting (high income or low income, single, married?),
- Women were more likely to say they voted than men.
- Those ages 45 to 64 and 65 and older were more likely to say they voted than those ages 18 to 24.
- Those who earned a high school diploma, attended some college, graduated from college or attended graduate school were more likely to say they have voted than those who had not finished high school.
Analysis of the predicted probability of voter turnout using the individual data

Using this Census Bureau Current Population Survey data the Eagleton Institute of Politics performed an additional statistical analysis in which they calculated the effect of various independent variables on the probability that a respondent said he or she voted. This analysis, involving 54,973 voters cross-tabulated the maximum and minimum voter identification requirements in each state with the five levels of voting requirements: stating name, signing name, matching the signature, a non-photo ID, photo-ID signing an affidavit. The results of these Predicted Probability of Voter Turnout for all Voter tabulations are summarized in Table 3 below:

From this analysis, the Eagleton Institute of Politics found that three of the voter identification requirements (which ones?) exerted a statistically significant, negative effect on whether or not the CPS survey respondents said they had voted in 2004. That is, compared to states that require voters to only state their name, those states which require the voter to sign his or her name, to provide a non-photo ID, or to provide a photo ID as a maximum requirement, were shown to have a negative influence on turnout. Also, a negative influence on turnout was found when comparing those states that require voters to only state their name, as compared to those states which have as a minimum requirement for verifying voter ID, signing an affidavit.

This probability analysis also found that the competitiveness of the presidential race had a significant effect on turnout as well as some significant demographic and educational effects. For the entire voting population signature, non-photo identification and photo identification requirements were all associated with lower turnout rates compared to the requirements that voter simply state their names. The analysis further found that:

- The predicted probability that Hispanics would vote in states that required non-photo identification was about 10 percentage points lower than in states where Hispanic voters gave their names and that Hispanic voters were less likely to vote in states that required non-photo identification as opposed to only having to state one’s name.

- Hispanic voters were 10 percent less likely to vote in non-photo identification states compared to states where voters only had to give their name. African American and Asian-American voters were about 6 percent less likely, while white voters were about 2 percent less likely.

- Asian-American voters were 8.5 percent less likely to vote in states that required non-photo identification compared to states that require voters to state their names under the maximum requirements, while they were 6.1 percent less likely to vote where non-photo identification was the minimum requirement.

- For those with less than a high school diploma, the probability of voting was 5.1 percent lower in states that required photo identification as the maximum requirement and 7 percent lower in those states that required an affidavit as the minimum requirement. These percentages were arrived at when comparing these states to ones that use as a minimum or maximum requirement, the voter to merely state his or her name.

Conclusions from the statistical analysis

The statistical analysis found that as voter identification requirements vary, so do voter turnout rates. These findings were borne out through analyses conducted on aggregate data and individual-level data. There were, however, some distinctions found depending upon whether or not the state’s particular voter identification requirements were set as minimums or maximums.

- The overall relationship between voter identification requirements and turnout for all registered voters was found to be small but statistically significant.
- Using the aggregate data the signature match and the non-photo identification requirement correlated with lower turnout. The photo identification requirement did not have a statistically significant effect.
- In the individual-level data the signature, no-photo identification and photo identification requirement were all correlated with lower turnout when compared to the requirements that voter simply state their names.
- Across various demographic groups (African-Americans, Asian-Americans and Hispanics) a statistically significant relationship was found between the non-photo identification requirement and voter turnout.

Caveats to the Analysis

The Eagleton Institute for Politics and the EAC make note that while this analysis is a good beginning, significant questions remain regarding the relationship between voter identification requirements and turnout. These analyses are unable, for example, to capture how or why identification requirements might lower turnout. That is, is it because voters are aware of the identification requirements and stay away from the polls because of them? Alternatively, do the requirements result in some voters being turned away when they cannot provide the identification, or must cast a provisional ballot?
Knowing more about the "on the ground" experience of voters regarding various identification requirements will guide state and local level policy markers in their efforts to educate voters about the requirements. These experiences could also help instruct election judges on how to handle questions and possible disputes over voter identification requirements.

Public Policy and Administrative Considerations

Voter Identification, often described as the critical step in protecting the integrity of the ballot, is a process which can ensure that the potential voter is eligible and, if eligible, is permitted to cast one ballot. A voting system that requires voters to produce an identification document or documents may prevent the ineligible from voting, but also may prevent the eligible from casting a ballot.

Evaluating the effect of different voter identification regimes can be most effective when based on clear legal, equitable and practical standards. The questions outlined below might point policymakers to standards that can be created around voter identification requirements.

1. Is the voter ID system designed on the basis of valid and reliable empirical studies the will address concerns regarding certain types of voting fraud?
2. Does the voter ID requirement comply with the letter and spirit of the Voting Rights Act?
3. How effective is the voter ID requirement on increasing the security of the ballot and can it be coordinated with the statewide voter registration database?
4. How feasible is the voter identification requirement? That is, are there administrative or budgetary considerations or concerns? How easy or difficult will it be for pollworkers who must administer the requirement?
5. How cost effective is the voter ID system? That is, what are the monetary and non-monetary costs to the voter and to the state for implementing the ID system?
6. If voter ID requirements are shown to reduce voter turnout (generally, or with some particular groups), what possible steps should be taken to ameliorate this problem?

Recommendations and Next Steps

As the Federal agency charged with informing election officials and the public about various issues related to the administration of elections EAC believes it should, in its capacity as a supporter of elections research, undertake additional study into the topic of voter identification requirements and the implementation of them in the following ways:

- Longitudinal studies of jurisdictions that have changed voter identification requirements.
• State-by-state and precinct-level analyses that will examine the correlations between various voter identification requirements and voter registration and turnout.

• Alternative forms and methods for verifying a voter's identity.

• Continuing research into the connection between various voter identification requirements and the number of ballots cast and counted.

• A continuing state-by-state update on changes to voter identification requirements.

• Continued collection of state-by-state data which will help examine the impact that voter identification requirements are having on the number of voters who are casting provisional ballots because of voter identification verification issues.

Commissioners,

Commissioner Davidson asked that I forward to each of you the following questions that I drafted at her request last week. She also asked that I let you know that she is interested in asking questions 3, 5, and 7.

1. What is meant by "statistically significant"? Please explain in plain language when a result is considered statistically significant. Also, please provide an academic definition of that term. How did you calculate the mean and standard deviations from the mean?
2. What data was used to derive these research findings?
3. Did you attempt to find information or data related to elections prior to 2004 in states that have voter identification requirements?
4. What other variables other than voter identification were tested? Contested race? Historical voter turnout? Weather? Media attention to the area? Candidate activities/campaign?
5. What was the impact (positive or negative) of these other factors on voter turnout?
6. How did you control these variables/factors when measuring the impact of voter ID on voter turnout or on prospective voter turnout? For example, did you only apply the factor to like circumstances — similar historical turnout, same level of contention in the races of the ballot, etc.
7. Would the study and your conclusions have been more reliable if additional data had been analyzed? Data such as voter turnout in states that have had voter ID in past Federal elections?
8. What data did you use to identify voter turnout?
9. What data did you use to identify whether people or groups of people were more or less likely to vote when identification is required?
10. Why did you use census data as opposed to data on registered voters? Doesn’t census data also include information from people who are not registered voters and people who are not even eligible to be registered voters?

In addition to the questions above, I provided the following feedback to Commissioner Davidson concerning the draft report provided by Eagleton:

- I am troubled by the concept that Eagleton compared states as if they were equal. They assume that, all factors being equal, that the voter turn out in each state would be equal. I am not at all certain that this is the case. Further, there is no evidence that the statistician actually compared previous years' turnout in the same state to determine whether 2004 was some sort of anomaly for that state (high or low). Long story short, I am very skeptical of the data that they used to draw conclusions. We should ask questions about what data they used, how they parsed it, why they used the data, what other data could have been used to provide better, more reliable results.
- My second concern is how they (statistically speaking) differentiate between a minimum requirement
(i.e. state name, photo i.d., etc) and a maximum requirement (i.e., state name, photo i.d., etc.). It makes no sense to me how they could possibly arrive at a different percentage for these requirement levels.

- My third issue is the persistent use of the phrases "ballot access" and "ballot integrity" without some definition or some explanation of what those concepts are.

Commissioner Davidson also asked that I ask some questions related to the first bullet, above, specifically relating to the comparison of states without validation that the state's turn out for 2004 was "normal" for that state as opposed to an anomaly.

Last, Commissioner Davidson asked that you all coordinate your selected questions to avoid having two commissioners wanting to ask the same question.

Please let me know if you have any questions or concerns about these questions or if I can explain my reasoning behind the questions.

5. What was the impact (positive or negative) of these other factors on voter turnout?
6. How did you control these variables/factors when measuring the impact of voter ID on voter turnout or on prospective voter turnout? For example, did you only apply the factor to like circumstances — similar historical turnout, same level of contention in the races of the ballot, etc.
7. Would the study and your conclusions have been more reliable if additional data had been analyzed? Data such as voter turn out in states that have had voter ID in past Federal elections?
8. What data did you use to identify voter turnout?
9. What data did you use to identify whether people or groups of people were more or less likely to vote when identification is required?
10. Why did you use census data as opposed to data on registered voters? Doesn’t census data also include information from people who are not registered voters and people who are not even eligible to be registered voters?

In addition to the questions above, I provided the following feedback to Commissioner Davidson concerning the draft report provided by Eagleton:

- I am troubled by the concept that Eagleton compared states as if they were equal. They assume that, all factors being equal, that the voter turn out in each state would be equal. I am not at all certain that this is the case. Further, there is no evidence that the statistician actually compared previous years’ turnout in the same state to determine whether 2004 was some sort of anomaly for that state (high or low). Long story short, I am very skeptical of the data that they used to draw conclusions. We should ask questions about what data they used, how they parsed it, why they used the data, what other data could have been used to provide better, more reliable results.
- My second concern is how they (statistically speaking) differentiate between a minimum requirement
Matt (and Amy) are working on a speech for the Chairman to deliver at the Vote Fraud conference in Utah at the end of the week. Matt has asked for the consultants' definition of vote fraud/voter intimidation and the draft recommendations. As neither have been through full Commission review, I would like to speak with one or both of you before I drop this information in any one Commissioner's lap. Matt is looking for this information today. FYI, attached are copies of the consultants' definition and the draft recommendations from the consultants and others from the working group. Also attached is a summary of concerns expressed by the working group. --- Peggy

We suspect that someone from the Voting Fraud-Voter Intimidation Project Working Group has been talking to reporters, tipping them off about what we are finding in our preliminary study, and referring them to our consultants (although the information could have come from anyone on the EAC boards, too). Apparently, the U.S. News & World Report reporter who contacted me also contacted both consultants working on the project.

Based on my recommendation, Tova Wang and, possibly, Job Serebrov, who are on EAC personal services contracts for our voting fraud and voter intimidation research, will seek further clarification from you about what they can and cannot say to reporters and in public fora about vote fraud and voter intimidation and about EAC's research. I have previously advised Tova and Job not to discuss the work they are doing for us as this is EAC research, the Commissioners have not yet received and accepted the final report, and the Commission has not approved their speaking about the EAC research.

Tova plans to call you tomorrow (Tuesday, June 27) about the issue. In addition to the reporter's inquiry, she has been invited to speak on the subject at the summer conference of the National Association of State Legislatures. She has plenty of knowledge of the subject in her own right (apart from our study), but is having trouble differentiating between her own work and the work she is doing for us. Please, just let me know what you advise her to do.

I received pieces of the draft final report on voting fraud-voter intimidation this morning. If it is OK with you, I'll hold it until all I have all of the pieces, so that you can review it as a whole document. --- Peggy

Subject Standards Board and Study on Voting Fraud

Dear Ms. Layson:
I have two questions about the 2005 Annual Report that you gave me.

(1) Who are, currently, the nine members of the Executive Board of the Standards Board?

(2) On p. 27 of the 2005 Annual Report, it states that EAC contracted with two consultants to conduct preliminary research on the issues of voting fraud and voter intimidation. Can you tell me who these organizations or individuals are, and when their reports might be available? If they are available now, how can I obtain them?

Regards,
Roy Saltman
Sounds good. Would later this afternoon work for you? Right now I'm working on the management guidelines with Brian. Let me know, thank you!

FYI-

On the budget figure for Improving Election Data Collection

Also, when you're ready let's go through more of the detail on your proposed agenda.

For example, I'd like for us to have some presentations (brief) on various subject areas, so that folks have a basis for their discussion and conclusions.

As we discussed, I think we also will want to have some breakout working groups which focus on particular issues/areas of concern.

Let me know when you're ready to pursue.

What Paul V said is NOT at all an accurate statement of what Tova said. I was there. This is very disappointing to read. I may call Mr. V myself.

I watched and heard what was said and by whom. I will be glad to brief you tomorrow morning.

Subject: Call from Paul Vinovich

I took a telephone call this morning from Paul Vinovich. He had attempted to reach Gracia, but since she was not here, he asked Sheila if I was in the office so he spoke to me.

Paul was very upset with comments that Tova Wang had made at yesterday's AEI's meeting in which she basically indicated that voter fraud did not exist in the USA. He asked how a person who believes that voter fraud does not exist--or not seem at least willing to listen to both sides--can be hired by the EAC to do a study on voter fraud/voter intimidation. I explained to Paul (as I have now had to explain to many others) that Tova was "balanced" on the study with Job Severbrov. He did not know Job but was well-aware of Tova's positions and was concerned that her public comments indicate that she will not be fair in looking at this issue. I explained to Paul that we were monitoring the work of our consultants on this study and no report would be issued publicly without the support of at least three commissioners. I sent him some background information on Job. I think this study will need close monitoring.

Tom's response was that the letter looked fine. Setting aside NAS, I wanted to make certain that pilot projects on list sharing were a part of our thinking on this study, irrespective of who handles the project for us. You will notice that I did not mention NAS in my letter to Linda.

Tom-

I'll defer to you on this one since I'm not at all aware of how things have been left with NAS (what, if anything, has been said to Herb Lin) and what the timelines are for possibly working with him on the technology refresh project.

Did some tightening up on language in this SOW. Let me know if you have any changes you want to make ASAP so this can go in for contract processing tomorrow. Thanks!

I have attached a draft proposed schedule of events for our discussion today. Please keep in mind that this is only a proposal but I thought that we needed somewhere to start from.

Job Task Contractor Deadline EAC
Gaylin -

There are 3 files of reference materials for this RFP: the spreadsheet of vote definitions and two summaries of statutory provisions on recounts (which are not consistent in information provided, e.g., one provides statutory language without commentary - the other provides summarized commentary without statutory language). We need a brief paragraph to accompany each to explain what the Offeror can glean from it. For example, the spreadsheet on vote definitions has references in it such as "See pdf of Arkansas statutes in file.", "There is a pdf of the manual in the document folder", "See .doc in file." "I was not able to find copies of these manuals." So this is clearly an internal working draft, not really a final product. How would the Offeror use this in preparing their proposal? Similarly, the two disparate summaries of statutes on recounts - we need to explain that this is a preliminary collection of information and that the two files are different in terms of content. Again, how would the Offeror use this information in preparing their proposal? Also, the title that printed out on first file citing statutory language is not correct and needs to be changed. It currently reads "Voting System Certification by State as of April 22, 2005." There is no heading on the second file.

This is a voluminous amount of information. We need to think about whether it is needed for the preparation of proposals. I will be considering this point this evening when I review the SOW and proposal instructions. Would appreciate your thoughts on this tomorrow.

Please see suggested changes in the attached (highlighted as tracked changes). In some cases, I could only note that we should insert something to address a particular issue. I don't have specifics for the inserts because we have not had time to discuss or confirm exactly what should be added. --- Peggy

You've probably seen this already, but I wanted to toss it your direction. It's an interesting report on the topic that Demos did last year. Might not be a bad starting point for ideas, ect.

Commissioner Hillman:

PFAW was not represented on the Working Group for the Voting Fraud-Voter Intimidation research project. Also, I have had no communications with the organization about the study. I did work with Jeannie and Gavin on a response to PFAW’s FOIA request for the study. Jeannie should have the final copy of that reply.

I know that People For the American Way delivered petitions to EAC about release of the Fraud report but I need to know what other communications EAC has had with People For about the study.

Was it represented on the study's working group? If so, by whom? Did they write to us and did we answer? Did anybody from there talk with anybody at EAC about the study and our work? Thanks.

Dear Mr. Donsanto:

The U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) has undertaken a short term project to research voting fraud and voter intimidation. As an expert in the prosecution of election crimes, your expertise and unique experience would be a valuable resource as we move forward. I am writing to ask if you will be available to advise and inform our efforts.

As you know, EAC is a federal agency established in accordance with section 201 of the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA), Public Law 107-252. HAVA requires EAC to conduct research regarding election administration issues. The election administration issues itemized in the statute include:

- Collecting nationwide statistics and methods of identifying, deterring, and investigating voting fraud in elections for federal office [section 241(b)(6)]
- Identifying, deterring, and investigating methods of voter intimidation [section 241(b)(7)]

The EAC Board of Advisors, established in accordance with HAVA section 211, recommended that EAC place a high priority on these topics when initiating our research projects. Subsequently, EAC obtained the services of two consultants (Tova Wang and Job Serebrov) to:

- Define Voting Fraud and Voter Intimidation - develop a comprehensive description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation in the context of federal elections;
- Research Available Resources - perform background research (including federal and state administrative and case law review), identify current activities of key government agencies, and civic and advocacy organizations regarding these topics, and summarize this research and all source documentation;

- Establish a Project Working Group - in consultation with EAC, establish a working group composed of key individuals and representatives of organizations knowledgeable about voting fraud and voter intimidation, provide a description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation and the results of the background research to the group, and convene the group to discuss potential avenues for future EAC research on this topic;

- Produce a Report - Provide a report to EAC summarizing the preliminary research and working group deliberations, including recommendations for future EAC research, if any;

- Assist EAC in Initiating Future Research - if EAC decides to pursue one or more recommendations for future research, draft the project scope and statement of work for the request for proposals.

The EAC manager for this project is Peggy Sims. It would be most helpful if you could offer your expertise to Ms. Sims and our team of consultants. Ms. Sims will contact you to follow up on this request. If you are able to assist us, she will set up an initial interview, which will focus on the identification and prosecution of offenses involving voting fraud and voter intimidation, as well as possible resources on these subjects for our consultants' review. Our consultants and project manager may have follow up questions as the research proceeds. It also would be helpful if you would be able to attend the working group meeting to contribute to its discussion. This meeting will likely be held in February 2006.

If you have any questions about the research or this request, please contact Peggy Sims by email at psims@eac.gov or by phone at 202-566-3120.

Thank you so much for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely yours,

Gracia Hillman

Dear Madam Chair:

I am in receipt of your letter of November 23, 2005 requesting my assistance in the development of a statutorily mandated report on voter fraud and intimidation that the Commission is currently undertaking.

I would be pleased, indeed honored, to assist you and the Commission in this matter and invite Ms. Sims of your staff to contact me at her convenience to discuss this matter further with me.
