PURCHASE ORDER TERMS AND CONDITIONS

52.229-70 FEDERAL, STATE, AND LOCAL TAXES (APR 1984)

The contract price includes all applicable Federal, State, and local taxes. No adjustment will be made to cover taxes which may subsequently be imposed on this transaction or changes in the rates of currently applicable taxes. However, the Government will, upon the request of the Contractor, furnish evidence appropriate to establish exemption from any tax from which the Government is exempt and which was not included in the contract price.

52.210-79 PACKING LIST (DEC 1989)

a) A packing list or other suitable shipping document shall accompany each shipment and shall indicate (1) Name and address of consignor; (2) Name and address of consignee; (3) Government order or requisition number; (4) Government bill of lading number covering the shipment (if any); and (5) Description of the material shipped, including item number, quantity, number of containers, and package number (if any).

b) When payment will be made by Government commercial credit card, in addition to the information in (a) above, the packing list or shipping document shall include: (1) Cardholder name and telephone number and (2) the term "Credit Card".

52.232-1 PAYMENTS (APR 1984)

The Government shall pay the Contractor, upon the submission of proper invoices or vouchers, the prices stipulated in this contract for supplies delivered and accepted or services rendered and accepted, less any deductions provided in this contract. Unless otherwise specified in this contract, payment shall be made on partial deliveries accepted by the Government if: (a) The amount due on the deliveries warrants it; or (b) The Contractor requests it and the amount due on the deliveries is at least $1,000 or 50 percent of the total contract price.

52.232-8 DISCOUNTS FOR PROMPT PAYMENT (APR 1989)

a) Discounts for prompt payment will not be considered in the valuation of offers. However, any offered discount will form a part of the award, and will be taken if payment is made within the discount period indicated in the offer by the offeror. As an alternative to offering a prompt payment discount in conjunction with the offer, offerors awarded contracts may include prompt payment discounts on individual invoices.

b) In connection with any discount offered for prompt payment, time shall be computed from the date of the invoice. For the purpose of computing the discount earned, payment shall be considered to have been made on the date which appears on the payment check or the date on which an electronic funds transfer was made.

PROMPT PAYMENT

Prompt Payment clause 52.232-25 is incorporated in this contract by reference. The clause contains information on payment due date, invoice requirements, constructive acceptance and interest penalties. Certain portions of the clause regarding payment due date, invoice requirements, and constructive acceptance have been extracted for our convenience. All days referred to in the extracts below are calendar days.

a)(2) . . . The due date for making invoice payments by the designated payment office shall be the later of the following two events:

- (i) The 30th day after the designated billing office has received a proper invoice from the Contractor.
- (ii) The 30th day after Government acceptance of supplies delivered or services performed by the Contractor . . .

a)(4) . . . An invoice shall be prepared and submitted to the designated billing office specified in the contract. A proper invoice must include the items listed in . . . (i) through . . . (viii) . . . If the invoice does not comply with these requirements, then the Contractor will be notified of the defect within 7 days after receipt of the invoice at the designated billing office . . . Untimely notification will be taken into account in the computation of any interest penalty owed the Contractor . . .

(i) Name and address of the Contractor.

(ii) Invoice date.

(iii) Contract number or other authorization for supplies delivered or services performed (including order number and contract line item number).

(iv) Description, quantity, unit of measure, unit price, and extended price of supplies delivered or services performed.

(v) Shipping and payment terms (e.g., shipment number and date of shipment, prompt payment discount terms), Bill of lading number and weight of shipment will be shown for shipments on Government bills of lading.

(vi) Name and address of Contractor official to whom payment is to be sent (must be the same as that in the contract or in a proper notice of assignment).

(vii) Name (where practicable), title, phone number, and mailing address of person to be notified in event of a defective invoice.

NOTE: Invoices must include the ACT number (block 4) and shall be submitted in an original only, unless otherwise specified, to the billing office designated in block 24 to receive invoices. The "remit to" address must correspond to the remittance address in block 12.

(a)(6)(i) For the sole purpose of computing an interest penalty that might be due the Contractor, Government acceptance shall be deemed to have occurred constructively on the 7th day (unless otherwise specified in block 20) after the Contractor delivered the supplies or performed the services in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract, unless there is a disagreement over quantity, quality or contractor compliance with a contract provision . . .

52.222-40 SERVICE CONTRACT ACT OF 1965, AS AMENDED - - CONTRACTS OF $2,500 OR LESS (MAY 1989)

Except to the extent that an exception, variation, or tolerance would apply if this contract were in excess of $2,500, the Contractor and any subcontractor shall pay all employees working on the contract not less than the minimum wage specified under Section 6 a) (1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (29 U.S.C. 201-208). Regulations and interpretations of the Service Contract Act of 1965 are contained in 29 CFR Part 4.

ACT NUMBER E4019905; EAC CONTRACT NUMBER 06-05
Personal Services Contract for Interim Expert Services

Background

Section 241 of HAVA lists a number of election administration topics on which the U.S. Election Assistance Commission may elect to do research. In particular, Section 241(b) (6) and (7) state the two topics of nationwide statistics and methods of identifying, deterring and investigating voting fraud in elections for Federal offices; and identifying, deterring and investigating methods of voter intimidation. The EAC Board of Advisors has recommended that the EAC make research on these topics a high priority.

The EAC seeks to obtain consulting services from an individual who can provide advice drawn from broad professional and technical experience in the area of voter fraud and intimidation. The EAC needs this expert to conduct a preliminary examination of these topics to determine if a larger research project might be warranted. To promote a balanced and non-partisan approach to this effort, EAC is contracting with two experts, who will work jointly to perform the work described below. This contract is a follow-on agreement to EAC Contract Number 05-67. That agreement for non-severable services expires February 25, 2006, without completion of the project. The originally estimated labor hours for the project were insufficient. As such, the EAC seeks to continue the work started in the previous contract but has changed the scope (or duties) of the contractor to limit project costs. This change is reflected in the scope of work section, below.

Nature of the Appointment

The EAC enters into this contract pursuant to its authority to contract for consultants and experts under 5 U.S.C. §3109 (See 42 U.S.C. §15324(b)). As such, this contract is for personal services and creates a limited employment relationship. (See 5 C.F.R. §304). The initial appointment under this agreement shall be for the intermittent employment of an expert as defined by 5 C.F.R. §304.102(d) and (e). The expert (hereinafter "contractor") shall work as required by the EAC, without a regularly scheduled tour of duty. Under no circumstances may contractor work more than 225 hours during the term of this agreement (5 C.F.R. §304.103(c)(2)(i)).

Supervision and Management.

The EAC Manager and Contracting Officer's Representative (COR) for this effort is Peggy Sims. Ms. Sims will provide taskings, and authorize, supervise, review and approve all work and performance. She will also approve all labor hours on invoices and travel vouchers submitted for compensation under this agreement.

Period of Appointment.

The appointment under this contract is temporary and shall be for a period of up to four months. The contract period shall begin February 26, 2006. The contract may be extended and contractor reappointed for an additional period (not exceed one year) upon agreement of both parties. (See 5 C.F.R. §304.103(c)).

Compensation

The consultant shall be paid at a rate of $111 per hour. Contractor shall perform the services prescribed by this agreement as directed by the COR on an intermittent basis. However, in any event, the contractor shall not work more that [41 hours] in either of the 2 two week periods that make up each four week pay period. Further, as aforementioned, the contractor may not work more than 225 hours during the term of this agreement. The dates of performance are flexible but shall be based upon the needs of the project and the EAC. COR shall provide contractor notice and authorization when performance under this agreement is required.

The consultant shall not incur overtime and is not eligible for premium pay under subchapter V of chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code. (5 C.F.R. §304.106(b)). The contractor, as an intermittent appointee, is also not entitled to sick or annual leave. Contractor will not receive compensation for Federal holidays when no work is performed. (5 C.F.R. §304.106(b)). The contractor shall not receive automatic adjustments of pay based upon 5 U.S.C. §5303. Contractor's pay rate may be increased at the sole discretion of the Contracting Officer, consistent with Federal regulations. Contractor may be reimbursed for other costs, such as local travel, consistent with this agreement if approved by the COR and submitted in writing via invoice.

Travel

The contractor may be required to travel on a periodic, as needed basis, throughout the duration of their appointment. All travel must be pre-approved by the EAC COR. The contractor will be reimbursed for hotel and ground transportation costs, proper incidental expenses, and per diem while on official, pre-approved EAC travel. Compensation for travel shall be made in accordance with the rates set forth in the Federal Travel Regulation. The amount reimbursed for travel shall not exceed $3,500 in Federal Fiscal Year 2006.

Release of Information

As a result of the limited employment relationship created by this agreement, and pursuant to this agreement, you are required to follow all Federal laws and regulations as they relate to the release of agency documents and information. All research, information, documents and any other intellectual property (including but not limited to policies, procedures, manuals, and other work created at the request or otherwise while laboring for the EAC) shall be owned exclusively by the EAC, including copyright. All such work product shall be turned over to the EAC upon completion of your appointment term or as directed by the EAC. The EAC shall have exclusive rights over this material. You may not release government information or documents without the express written permission of the EAC.

Compensation Procedures

Compensation shall be made for work done (labor hours) by submitting invoices. Invoices shall be submitted every four weeks from the date of award. A week shall be from Sunday to Saturday. The first pay period shall begin February 26, 2006. Invoices must be submitted every 4 weeks when compensable work under this contract has been performed. The COR will provide the contractor with an invoice schedule, identifying each of the invoice periods, and model invoice forms. Invoices shall be delivered to the COR for review and approval. Each invoice shall:

- (1) Identify each day (by date) that work was performed and the number of labor hours performed that day. Briefly describe the nature of the work performed for that day;
- (2) State the total number of labor hours that have been expended under the agreement for the invoice period;
- (3) State the total number of hours worked for each of the two week periods that make up the total invoice time;
- (4) Provide a cumulative total of hours worked during the entire contract performance period (one year);
- (5) Submit, as a separate line item, all reimbursable travel costs for approval. The submission must provide dates of travel, receipts and other information as required by the Federal Travel Regulation.
- (6) Include the contractor's signature, affirming that information contained in the invoice is accurate.

Duty Location

Contractor's duty station shall be his/her home or place of business. The contractor has access to and shall supply common office equipment to include telecommunications, internet access, a computer, office supplies, facsimile machine and common workplace software (including Microsoft Word, Project and Excel). All other resources will be provided by the EAC as needed and at its discretion.

Notices

Any notice, given by any of the parties hereunder, shall be sufficient only if in writing and delivered in person or sent by telegraph, telegram, registered, or regular mail as follows:

To EAC: 1225 New York Avenue, Suite 1100, Washington, DC 20005,
Attention: Contracting Officer Representative, Peggy Sims.

To Contractor: At EAC and at the Contractor's address shown on the Cover Page of this contract or to such other address as either of such parties shall designate by notice given as herein required. Notices hereunder shall be effective in accordance with this clause or on the effective date of the notice whichever is later.

Areas of Responsibility (Statement of Work)

1. Submit a revised work plan reflecting revised due dates for deliverables.
2. Develop a comprehensive description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation in the context of Federal elections.
3. Using the description developed for 2 above, perform background research, including both Federal and State administrative and case law review, and a summation of current activities of key government agencies, civic and advocacy organizations regarding these topics. Deliver a written summary of this research and all source documentation.
4. Work in consultation with other EAC staff and the Commissioners to identify a working group of key individuals and representatives of organizations knowledgeable about the topics of voting fraud and voter intimidation. The Working Group will be provided with the results of the consultant's research (discussed in 2 and 3, above) as background information. The consultant will be responsible for developing a discussion agenda and convene the Working Group with the objective of identifying promising avenues for future research by EAC.
5. The consultant shall be responsible for creating a report summarizing the findings of this preliminary research effort and Working Group deliberations. This report should include any recommendations for future EAC research resulting from this effort.

Terms and Conditions

The following additional terms and conditions shall apply to this personal services contract:

a. Federal Acquisition Regulation Clauses Incorporated by Reference:

This contract incorporates the following clauses by reference with the same force and effect as if they were given in full text. Upon request, the Contracting Officer will make their full text available. These clauses may be obtained on the internet at <http://farsite.hill.af.mil/>.

52.203-7 Anti-Kickback Procedures (JUL 1995)

52.203-12 Limitation on Payments to Influence Certain Federal Transactions (Sept 2005)

52.215-2	Audit and Records -- Negotiation (Jun 1999)
52.224-1	Privacy Act Notification (APR 1984)
52.224-2	Privacy Act (APR 1984)
52.232-17	Interest (JUN 1996)
52.246-25	Limitation of Liability-Services (FEB 1997)
52.252-4	Alterations in Contract (APR 1984)

b. Federal Acquisition Regulation Clauses in Full Text:

Contract Termination (FAR 52.249-12)

The Government may terminate this contract at any time upon at least 15 days' written notice by the Contracting Officer to the Contractor. The Contractor, with the written consent of the Contracting Officer, may terminate this contract upon at least 15 days' written notice to the Contracting Officer. (End of Clause)

Site Visit (FAR 52.237-1)

Offerors or quoters are urged and expected to inspect the site where services are to be performed and to satisfy themselves regarding all general and local conditions that may affect the cost of contract performance, to the extent that the information is reasonably obtainable. In no event shall failure to inspect the site constitute grounds for a claim after contract award. (End of Clause)

Protection of Government Buildings, Equipment, and Vegetation (FAR 52.237-2)

The Contractor shall use reasonable care to avoid damaging existing buildings, equipment, and vegetation on the Government installation. If the Contractor's failure to use reasonable care causes damage to any of this property, the Contractor shall replace or repair the damage at no expense to the Government as the Contracting Officer directs. If the Contractor fails or refuses to make such repair or replacement, the Contractor shall be liable for the cost, which may be deducted from the contract price. (End of Clause)

Covenant Against Contingent Fees (FAR 52.203-5)

(a) The Contractor warrants that no person or agency has been employed or retained to solicit or obtain this contract upon an agreement or understanding for a contingent fee, except a bona fide employee or agency. For breach or violation of this warranty, the Government shall have the right to annul this contract without liability or, in its discretion, to deduct from the contract price or consideration, or otherwise recover, the full amount of the contingent fee.

(b) "Bona fide agency," as used in this clause, means an established commercial or selling agency, maintained by a contractor for the purpose of securing business, that neither exerts nor proposes to exert improper influence to solicit or obtain Government contracts nor holds itself out as being able to obtain any Government contract or contracts through improper influence.

"Bona fide employee," as used in this clause, means a person, employed by a contractor and subject to the contractor's supervision and control as to time, place, and manner of performance, who neither exerts nor proposes to exert improper influence to solicit or obtain Government contracts nor holds itself out as being able to obtain any Government contract or contracts through improper influence.

"Contingent Fee," as used in this clause, means any commission, percentage, brokerage, or other fee that is contingent upon the success that a person or concern has in securing a Government contract.

"Improper influence," as used in this clause, means any influence that induces or tends to induce a Government employee or officer to give consideration or to act regarding a Government contract on any basis other than the merits of the matter.
(End of Clause)

Disputes (FAR 52.233-1), Alternate I

(a) This contract is subject to the Contract Disputes Act of 1978, as amended (41 U.S.C. 601-613).

(b) Except as provided in the Act, all disputes arising under or relating to this contract shall be resolved under this clause.

(c) "Claim," as used in this clause, means a written demand or written assertion by one of the contracting parties seeking, as a matter of right, the payment of money in a sum certain, the adjustment or interpretation of contract terms, or other relief arising under or relating to this contract. However, a written demand or written assertion by the Contractor seeking the payment of money exceeding $100,000 is not a claim under the Act until certified. A voucher, invoice, or other routine request for payment that is not in dispute when submitted is not a claim under the Act. The submission may be converted to a claim under the Act, by complying with the submission and certification requirements of this clause, if it is disputed either as to liability or amount or is not acted upon in a reasonable time.

(d) (1) A claim by the Contractor shall be made in writing and, unless otherwise stated in this contract, submitted within 6 years after accrual of the claim to the Contracting Officer for a written decision. A claim by the Government against the Contractor shall be subject to a written decision by the Contracting Officer.

(i) The contractor shall provide the certification specified in paragraph (d)(2)(iii) of this clause when submitting any claim exceeding $100,000.

(ii) The certification requirement does not apply to issues in controversy that have not been submitted as all or part of a claim.

(iii) The certification shall state as follows: "I certify that the claim is made in good faith; that the supporting data are accurate and complete to the best of my knowledge and belief; that the amount requested accurately reflects the contract adjustment for which the Contractor believes the Government is liable; and that I am duly authorized to certify the claim on behalf of the Contractor."

(3) The certification may be executed by any person duly authorized to bind the Contractor with respect to the claim.

(e) For Contractor claims of $100,000 or less, the Contracting Officer must, if requested in writing by the Contractor, render a decision within 60 days of the request. For Contractor-certified claims over $100,000, the Contracting Officer must, within 60 days, decide the claim or notify the Contractor of the date by which the decision will be made.

(f) The Contracting Officer's decision shall be final unless the Contractor appeals or files a suit as provided in the Act.

(g) If the claim by the Contractor is submitted to the Contracting Officer or a claim by the Government is presented to the Contractor, the parties, by mutual consent, may agree to use alternative dispute resolution (ADR). If the Contractor refuses an offer for ADR, the Contractor shall inform the Contracting Officer, in writing, of the Contractor's specific reasons for rejecting the offer.

(h) The Government shall pay interest on the amount found due and unpaid from

(1) the date that the Contracting Officer receives the claim (certified, if required); or

(2) the date that payment otherwise would be due, if that date is later, until the date of payment.

With regard to claims having defective certifications, as defined in FAR 33.201, interest shall be paid from the date that the Contracting Officer initially receives the claim. Simple interest on claims shall be paid at the rate, fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in the Act, which is applicable to the period during which the Contracting Officer receives the claim and then at the rate applicable for each 6-month period as fixed by the Treasury Secretary during the pendency of the claim.

(i) The Contractor shall proceed diligently with performance of this contract, pending final resolution of any request for relief, claim, appeal, or action arising under or relating to the contract, and comply with any decision of the Contracting Officer.
(End of Clause)

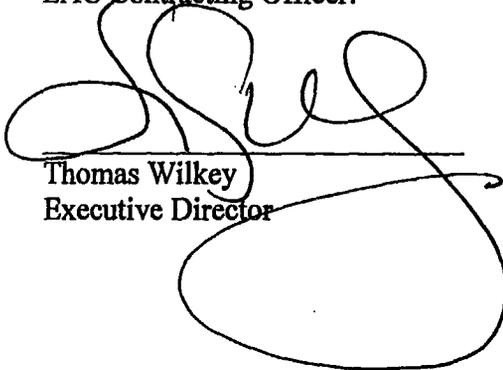

By signing below, contractor agrees to furnish the personal services set forth or otherwise identified, above, consistent with the conditions noted above and for the consideration stated herein.

The contract price includes all applicable Federal, State, and local taxes. No adjustment will be made to cover taxes which may subsequently be imposed on this transaction or changes in the rates of currently applicable taxes. However, the Government will, upon the request of the Contractor, furnish evidence appropriate to establish exemption from any tax from which the Government is exempt and which was not included in the contract price.

552.210-79 PACKING LIST (DEC 1989)

(a) A packing list or other suitable shipping document shall accompany each shipment and shall indicate (1) Name and address of consignor; (2) Name and address of consignee; (3) Government order or requisition number; (4) Government bill of lading number covering the shipment (if any); and (5) Description of the material shipped, including item number, quantity, number of containers, and package number (if any).

(b) When payment will be made by Government commercial credit card, in addition to the information in (a) above, the packing list or shipping document shall include: (1) Cardholder name and telephone number and (2) the term "Credit Card".

The Government shall pay the Contractor, upon the submission of proper invoices or vouchers, the prices stipulated in this contract for supplies delivered and accepted or services rendered and accepted, less any deductions provided in this contract. Unless otherwise specified in this contract, payment shall be made on partial deliveries accepted by the Government if: (a) The amount due on the deliveries warrants it; or (b) The Contractor requests it and the amount due on the deliveries is at least $1,000 or 50 percent of the total contract price.

2.232-8 DISCOUNTS FOR PROMPT PAYMENT (APR 1989)

a) Discounts for prompt payment will not be considered in the valuation of offers. However, any offered discount will form a part of the award, and will be taken if payment is made within the discount period indicated in the offer by the offeror. As an alternative to offering a prompt payment discount in conjunction with the offer, offerors awarded contracts may include prompt payment discounts on individual invoices.

b) In connection with any discount offered for prompt payment, time shall be computed from the date of the invoice. For the purpose of computing the discount earned, payment shall be considered to have been made on the date which appears on the payment check or the date on which an electronic funds transfer was made.

PROMPT PAYMENT

Prompt Payment clause 52.232-25 is incorporated in this contract by reference. The clause contains information on payment due date, invoice requirements, constructive acceptance and interest penalties. Certain portions of the clause regarding payment due date, invoice requirements, and constructive acceptance have been extracted for your convenience. All days referred to in the extracts below are calendar days.

(2) . . . The due date for making invoice payments by the designated payment office shall be the later of the following two events:

(i) The 30th day after the designated billing office has received a copy invoice from the Contractor.
(ii) The 30th day after Government acceptance of supplies delivered services performed by the Contractor . . .

(4) . . . An invoice shall be prepared and submitted to the designated billing office specified in the contract. A proper invoice must include items listed in . . . (i) through . . . (viii) . . . If the invoice does not comply with these requirements, then the Contractor will be notified of defect within 7 days after receipt of the invoice at the designated billing office . . . Untimely notification will be taken into account in the computation of any interest penalty owed the Contractor . . .

i) Name and address of the Contractor.

ii) Invoice date.

iii) Contract number or other authorization for supplies delivered or services performed (including order number and contract line item number).

v) Description of quantity, unit of measure, unit price, and extended price of supplies delivered or services performed.

v) Shipping and payment terms (e.g., shipment number and date of payment, prompt payment discount terms), Bill of lading number and weight of shipment will be shown for shipments on Government bills of lading.

vi) Name and address of Contractor official to whom payment is to be sent (must be the same as that in the contract or in a proper notice assignment).

vii) Name (where practicable), title, phone number, and mailing address of person to be notified in event of a defective invoice.

NOTE: Invoices must include the ACT number (block 4) and shall be submitted in an original only, unless otherwise specified, to the billing office designated in block 24 to receive invoices. The "remittance to" address must correspond to the remittance address in block 12.

(a)(6)(ii) For the sole purpose of computing an interest penalty that might be due the Contractor, Government acceptance shall be deemed to have occurred constructively on the 7th day (unless otherwise specified in block 20) after the Contractor delivered the supplies or performed the services in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract, unless there is a disagreement over quantity, quality or contractor compliance with a contract provision . . .

52.222-40 SERVICE CONTRACT ACT OF 1965, AS AMENDED - - CONTRACTS OF $2,500 OR LESS (MAY 1989)

Except to the extent that an exception, variation, or tolerance would apply if this contract were in excess of $2,500, the Contractor and any subcontractor shall pay all employees working on the contract not less than the minimum wage specified under Section 6 a) (1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (29 U.S.C. 201-208). Regulations and interpretations of the Service Contract Act of 1965 are contained in 29 CFR Part 4.

ACT NUMBER E4019904; EAC CONTRACT NUMBER 06-04
Personal Services Contract for Interim Expert Services

Background

Section 241 of HAVA lists a number of election administration topics on which the U.S. Election Assistance Commission may elect to do research. In particular, Section 241(b) (6) and (7) state the two topics of nationwide statistics and methods of identifying, deterring and investigating voting fraud in elections for Federal offices; and identifying, deterring and investigating methods of voter intimidation. The EAC Board of Advisors has recommended that the EAC make research on these topics a high priority.

The EAC seeks to obtain consulting services from an individual who can provide advice drawn from broad professional and technical experience in the area of voter fraud and intimidation. The EAC needs this expert to conduct a preliminary examination of these topics to determine if a larger research project might be warranted. To promote a balanced and non-partisan approach to this effort, EAC is contracting with two experts, who will work jointly to perform the work described below. This contract is a follow-on agreement to EAC Contract Number 05-66. That agreement for non-severable services expires February 15, 2006, without completion of the project. The originally estimated labor hours for this project were insufficient. As such, the EAC seeks to continue the work started in this previous contract but has changed the scope (or duties) of the contractor to limit project costs. This change is reflected in the scope of work section, below.

Nature of the Appointment

The EAC enters into this contract pursuant to its authority to contract for consultants and experts under 5 U.S.C. §3109 (See 42 U.S.C. §15324(b)). As such, this contract is for personal services and creates a limited employment relationship. (See 5 C.F.R. §304). The initial appointment under this agreement shall be for the intermittent employment of an expert as defined by 5 C.F.R. §304.102(d) and (e). The expert (hereinafter "contractor") shall work as required by the EAC, without a regularly scheduled tour of duty. Under no circumstances may contractor work more than 225 hours during the term of this agreement (5 C.F.R. §304.103(c)(2)(i)).

Supervision and Management.

The EAC Manager and Contracting Officer's Representative (COR) for this effort is Peggy Sims. Ms Sims will provide taskings, and authorize, supervise, review and approve all work and performance. She will also approve all labor hours on invoices and travel vouchers submitted for compensation under this agreement.

Period of Appointment.

The appointment under this contract is temporary and shall be for a period of up to four months. The contract period shall begin February 26, 2006. The contract may be extended and contractor reappointed for an additional period (not exceed one year) upon agreement of both parties. (See 5 C.F.R. §304.103(c)).

Compensation

The consultant shall be paid at a rate of $111 per hour. Contractor shall perform the services prescribed by this agreement as directed by the COR on an intermittent basis. However, in any event, the contractor shall not work more than [41 hours] in either of the 2 two week periods that make up each four week pay period. Further, as aforementioned, the contractor may not work more than 225 hours during the term of this agreement. The dates of performance are flexible but shall be based upon the needs of the project and the EAC. COR shall provide contractor notice and authorization when performance under this agreement is required.

The consultant shall not incur overtime and is not eligible for premium pay under subchapter V of chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code. (5 C.F.R. §304.106(b)). The contractor, as an intermittent appointee, is also not entitled to sick or annual leave. Contractor will not receive compensation for Federal holidays when no work is performed. (5 C.F.R. §304.106(b)). The contractor shall not receive automatic adjustments of pay based upon 5 U.S.C. §5303. Contractor's pay rate may be increased at the sole discretion of the Contracting Officer, consistent with Federal regulations. Contractor may be reimbursed for other costs, such as local travel, consistent with this agreement if approved by the COR and submitted in writing via invoice.

Travel

The contractor may be required to travel on a periodic, as needed basis, throughout the duration of their appointment. All travel must be pre-approved by the EAC COR. The contractor will be reimbursed for hotel and ground transportation costs, proper incidental expenses, and per diem while on official, pre-approved EAC travel. Compensation for travel shall be made in accordance with the rates set forth in the Federal Travel Regulation. The amount reimbursed for travel shall not exceed $6,500 in Federal Fiscal Year 2006.

Release of Information

As a result of the limited employment relationship created by this agreement, and pursuant to this agreement, you are required to follow all Federal laws and regulations as they relate to the release of agency documents and information. All research, information, documents and any other intellectual property (including but not limited to policies, procedures, manuals, and other work created at the request or otherwise while laboring for the EAC) shall be owned exclusively by the EAC, including copyright. All such work product shall be turned over to the EAC upon completion of your appointment term or as directed by the EAC. The EAC shall have exclusive rights over this material. You may not release government information or documents without the express written permission of the EAC.

Compensation Procedures

Compensation shall be made for work done (labor hours) by submitting invoices. Invoices shall be submitted every four weeks from the date of award. A week shall be from Sunday to Saturday. The first pay period shall begin February 26, 2006. Invoices must be submitted every 4 weeks when compensable work under this contract has been performed. The COR will provide the contractor with an invoice schedule, identifying each of the invoice periods, and model invoice forms. Invoices shall be delivered to the COR for review and approval. Each invoice shall:

- (1) Identify each day (by date) that work was performed and the number of labor hours performed that day. Briefly describe the nature of the work performed for that day;
- (2) State the total number of labor hours that have been expended under the agreement for the invoice period;
- (3) State the total number of hours worked for each of the two week periods that make up the total invoice time;
- (4) Provide a cumulative total of hours worked during the entire contract performance period (one year);
- (5) Submit, as a separate line item, all reimbursable travel costs for approval. The submission must provide dates of travel, receipts and other information as required by the Federal Travel Regulation.
- (6) Include the contractor's signature, affirming that information contained in the invoice is accurate.

Duty Location

Contractor's duty station shall be his/her home or place of business. The contractor has access to and shall supply common office equipment to include telecommunications, internet access, a computer, office supplies, facsimile machine and common workplace software (including Microsoft Word, Project and Excel). All other resources will be provided by the EAC as needed and at its discretion.

Notices

Any notice, given by any of the parties hereunder, shall be sufficient only if in writing and delivered in person or sent by telegraph, telegram, registered, or regular mail as follows:

To EAC: 1225 New York Avenue, Suite 1100, Washington, DC 20005,
Attention: Contracting Officer Representative, Peggy Sims.

To Contractor: At EAC and at the Contractor's address shown on the Cover Page of this contract or to such other address as either of such parties shall designate by notice given as herein required. Notices hereunder shall be effective in accordance with this clause or on the effective date of the notice whichever is later.

Areas of Responsibility (Statement of Work)

1. Submit a revised work plan reflecting revised due dates for deliverables.
2. Develop a comprehensive description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation in the context of Federal elections.
3. Using the description developed for 2 above, perform background research, including both Federal and State administrative and case law review, and a summation of current activities of key government agencies, civic and advocacy organizations regarding these topics. Deliver a written summary of this research and all source documentation.
4. Work in consultation with other EAC staff and the Commissioners to identify a working group of key individuals and representatives of organizations knowledgeable about the topics of voting fraud and voter intimidation. The Working Group will be provided with the results of the consultant's research (discussed in 2 and 3, above) as background information. The consultant will be responsible for developing a discussion agenda and convene the Working Group with the objective of identifying promising avenues for future research by EAC.
5. The consultant shall be responsible for creating a report summarizing the findings of this preliminary research effort and Working Group deliberations. This report should include any recommendations for future EAC research resulting from this effort.

Terms and Conditions

The following additional terms and conditions shall apply to this personal services contract:

a. Federal Acquisition Regulation Clauses Incorporated by Reference:

This contract incorporates the following clauses by reference with the same force and effect as if they were given in full text. Upon request, the Contracting Officer will make their full text available. These clauses may be obtained on the internet at <http://farsite.hill.af.mil/>.

52.203-7 Anti-Kickback Procedures (JUL 1995)

52.203-12 Limitation on Payments to Influence Certain Federal Transactions (Sept 2005)

- 52.215-2 Audit and Records -- Negotiation (Jun 1999)
 52.224-1 Privacy Act Notification (APR 1984)
 52.224-2 Privacy Act (APR 1984)
 52.232-17 Interest (JUN 1996)
 52.246-25 Limitation of Liability-Services (FEB 1997)
 52.252-4 Alterations in Contract (APR 1984)

b. Federal Acquisition Regulation Clauses in Full Text:

Contract Termination (FAR 52.249-12)

The Government may terminate this contract at any time upon at least 15 days' written notice by the Contracting Officer to the Contractor. The Contractor, with the written consent of the Contracting Officer, may terminate this contract upon at least 15 days' written notice to the Contracting Officer. (End of Clause)

Site Visit (FAR 52.237-1)

Offerors or quarters are urged and expected to inspect the site where services are to be performed and to satisfy themselves regarding all general and local conditions that may affect the cost of contract performance, to the extent that the information is reasonably obtainable. In no event shall failure to inspect the site constitute grounds for a claim after contract award. (End of Clause)

Protection of Government Buildings, Equipment, and Vegetation (FAR 52.237-2)

The Contractor shall use reasonable care to avoid damaging existing buildings, equipment, and vegetation on the Government installation. If the Contractor's failure to use reasonable care causes damage to any of this property, the Contractor shall replace or repair the damage at no expense to the Government as the Contracting Officer directs. If the Contractor fails or refuses to make such repair or replacement, the Contractor shall be liable for the cost which may be deducted from the contract price. (End of Clause)

(a) The Contractor warrants that no person or agency has been employed or retained to solicit or obtain this contract upon an agreement or understanding for a contingent fee, except a bona fide employee or agency. For breach or violation of this warranty, the Government shall have the right to annul this contract without liability or, in its discretion, to deduct from the contract price or consideration, or otherwise recover, the full amount of the contingent fee.

(b) "Bona fide agency," as used in this clause, means an established commercial or selling agency, maintained by a contractor for the purpose of securing business, that neither exerts nor proposes to exert improper influence to solicit or obtain Government contracts nor holds itself out as being able to obtain any Government contract or contracts through improper influence.

"Bona fide employee," as used in this clause, means a person, employed by a contractor and subject to the contractor's supervision and control as to time, place, and manner of performance, who neither exerts nor proposes to exert improper influence to solicit or obtain Government contracts nor holds itself out as being able to obtain any Government contract or contracts through improper influence.

"Contingent Fee," as used in this clause, means any commission, percentage, brokerage, or other fee that is contingent upon the success that a person or concern has in securing a Government contract.

"Improper influence," as used in this clause, means any influence that induces or tends to induce a Government employee or officer to give consideration or to act regarding a Government contract on any basis other than the merits of the matter.
(End of Clause)

(a) This contract is subject to the Contract Disputes Act of 1978, as amended (41 U.S.C. 601-613).

(b) Except as provided in the Act, all disputes arising under or relating to this contract shall be resolved under this clause.

(c) "Claim," as used in this clause, means a written demand or written assertion by one of the contracting parties seeking, as a matter of right, the payment of money in a sum certain, the adjustment or interpretation of contract terms, or other relief arising under or relating to this contract. However, a written demand or written assertion by the Contractor seeking the payment of money exceeding $100,000 is not a claim under the Act until certified. A voucher, invoice, or other routine request for payment that is not in dispute when submitted is not a claim under the Act. The submission may be converted to a claim under the Act, by complying with the submission and certification requirements of this clause, if it is disputed either as to liability or amount or is not acted upon in a reasonable time.

(d) (1) A claim by the Contractor shall be made in writing and, unless otherwise stated in this contract, submitted within 6 years after accrual of the claim to the Contracting Officer for a written decision. A claim by the Government against the Contractor shall be subject to a written decision by the Contracting Officer.

(i) The contractor shall provide the certification specified in paragraph (d)(2)(iii) of this clause when submitting any claim exceeding $100,000.

(ii) The certification requirement does not apply to issues in controversy that have not been submitted as all or part of a claim.

(iii) The certification shall state as follows: "I certify that the claim is made in good faith; that the supporting data are accurate and complete to the best of my knowledge and belief; that the amount requested accurately reflects the contract adjustment for which the Contractor believes the Government is liable; and that I am duly authorized to certify the claim on behalf of the Contractor."

(3) The certification may be executed by any person duly authorized to bind the Contractor with respect to the claim.

(e) For Contractor claims of $100,000 or less, the Contracting Officer must, if requested in writing by the Contractor, render a decision within 60 days of the request. For Contractor-certified claims over $100,000, the Contracting Officer must, within 60 days, decide the claim or notify the Contractor of the date by which the decision will be made.

(f) The Contracting Officer's decision shall be final unless the Contractor appeals or files a suit as provided in the Act.

(g) If the claim by the Contractor is submitted to the Contracting Officer or a claim by the Government is presented to the Contractor, the parties, by mutual consent, may agree to use alternative dispute resolution (ADR). If the Contractor refuses an offer for ADR, the Contractor shall inform the Contracting Officer, in writing, of the Contractor's specific reasons for rejecting the offer.

(h) The Government shall pay interest on the amount found due and unpaid from

(1) the date that the Contracting Officer receives the claim (certified, if required); or

(2) the date that payment otherwise would be due, if that date is later, until the date of payment.

With regard to claims having defective certifications, as defined in FAR 33.201, interest shall be paid from the date that the Contracting Officer initially receives the claim. Simple interest on claims shall be paid at the rate, fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in the Act, which is applicable to the period during which the Contracting Officer receives the claim and then at the rate applicable for each 6-month period as fixed by the Treasury Secretary during the pendency of the claim.

The contract price includes all applicable Federal, State, and local taxes. No adjustment will be made to cover taxes which may subsequently be imposed on this transaction or changes in the rates of currently applicable taxes. However, the Government will, upon the request of the Contractor, furnish evidence appropriate to establish exemption from any tax from which the Government is exempt and which was not included in the contract price.

(a) A packing list or other suitable shipping document shall accompany each shipment and shall indicate (1) Name and address of consignor; (2) Name and address of consignee; (3) Government order or requisition number; (4) Government bill of lading number covering the shipment (if any); and (5) Description of the material shipped, including item number, quantity, number of containers, and package number (if any).

(b) When payment will be made by Government commercial credit card, in addition to the information in (a) above, the packing list or shipping document shall include: (1) Cardholder name and telephone number and (2) the term "Credit Card".

The Government shall pay the Contractor, upon the submission of proper invoices or vouchers, the prices stipulated in this contract for supplies delivered and accepted or services rendered and accepted, less any deductions provided in this contract. Unless otherwise specified in this contract, payment shall be made on partial deliveries accepted by the Government if: (a) The amount due on the deliveries warrants it; or (b) The Contractor requests it and the amount due on the deliveries is at least $1,000 or 50 percent of the total contract price.

52.232-8 DISCOUNTS FOR PROMPT PAYMENT (APR 1989)

(a) Discounts for prompt payment will not be considered in the evaluation of offers. However, any offered discount will form a part of the award, and will be taken if payment is made within the discount period indicated in the offer by the offeror. As an alternative to offering a prompt payment discount in conjunction with the offer, offerors awarded contracts may include prompt payment discounts on individual invoices.

(b) In connection with any discount offered for prompt payment, time shall be computed from the date of the invoice. For the purpose of computing the discount earned, payment shall be considered to have been made on the date which appears on the payment check or the date on which an electronic funds transfer was made.

PROMPT PAYMENT

Prompt Payment clause 52.232-25 is incorporated in this contract by reference. The clause contains information on payment due date, invoice requirements, constructive acceptance and interest penalties. Certain portions of the clause regarding payment due date, invoice requirements, and constructive acceptance have been extracted for your convenience. All days referred to in the extracts below are calendar days.

(a)(2) . . . The due date for making invoice payments by the designated payment office shall be the later of the following two events:

- (i) The 30th day after the designated billing office has received a proper invoice from the Contractor.
- (ii) The 30th day after Government acceptance of supplies delivered or services performed by the Contractor . . .

(a)(4) . . . An invoice shall be prepared and submitted to the designated billing office specified in the contract. A proper invoice must include the items listed in . . . (i) through . . . (viii) . . . If the invoice does not comply with these requirements, then the Contractor will be notified of the defect within 7 days after receipt of the invoice at the designated billing office . . . Untimely notification will be taken into account in the computation of any interest penalty owed the Contractor . . .

(i) Name and address of the Contractor.

(ii) Invoice date.

(iii) Contract number or other authorization for supplies delivered or services performed (including order number and contract line item number).

(iv) Description, quantity, unit of measure, unit price, and extended price of supplies delivered or services performed.

(v) Shipping and payment terms (e.g., shipment number and date of shipment, prompt payment discount terms), Bill of lading number and weight of shipment will be shown for shipments on Government bills of lading.

(vi) Name and address of Contractor official to whom payment is to be sent (must be the same as that in the contract or in a proper notice assignment).

(vii) Name (where practicable), title, phone number, and mailing address of person to be notified in event of a defective invoice.

NOTE: Invoices must include the ACT number (block 4) and shall be submitted in an original only, unless otherwise specified, to the billing office designated in block 24 to receive invoices. The "remittance to" address must correspond to the remittance address in block 12.

(a)(6)(i) For the sole purpose of computing an interest penalty that might be due the Contractor, Government acceptance shall be deemed to have occurred constructively on the 7th day (unless otherwise specified in block 20) after the Contractor delivered the supplies or performed the services in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract, unless there is a disagreement over quantity, quality or contractor compliance with a contract provision . . .

52.222-40 SERVICE CONTRACT ACT OF 1965, AS AMENDED - CONTRACTS OF $2,500 OR LESS (MAY 1989)

Except to the extent that an exception, variation, or tolerance would apply if this contract were in excess of $2,500, the Contractor and any subcontractor shall pay all employees working on the contract not less than the minimum wage specified under Section 8 a) (1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (29 U.S.C. 201-208). Regulations and interpretations of the Service Contract Act of 1965 are contained in 29 CFR Part 4.

52.222-41 SERVICE CONTRACT ACT OF 1965, AS AMENDED (MAY 1989)

52.222-42 STATEMENT OF EQUIVALENT RATES FOR FEDERAL HIRES (MAY 1989)
(52.222-41 and 52.222-42 apply to service contracts when the amount exceeds $2,500).

The GSA Form 2166, Service Contract Act of 1965 and Statement of Equivalent Rates for Federal Hires is attached hereto and made a part hereof.

52.252-2 CLAUSES INCORPORATED BY REFERENCE (JUN 1988)

This contract incorporates the following clauses by reference with the same force and effect as if they were given in full text. Upon request the Contracting Officer will make their full text available:

ACT NUMBER E4019697; EAC CONTRACT NUMBER 05-66

Consulting Services to Assist EAC in the Development of a Voting Fraud and Voter Intimidation Project

Background

Section 241 of HAVA lists a number of election administration topics on which the U.S. Election Assistance Commission may elect to do research. In particular, Section 241(b) (6) and (7) state the two topics of nationwide statistics and methods of identifying, deterring and investigating voting fraud in elections for Federal offices; and identifying, deterring and investigating methods of voter intimidation. The EAC Board of Advisors has recommended that the EAC make research on these topics a high priority.

The EAC seeks to obtain consulting services from an individual who can provide advice drawn from broad professional and technical experience in the area of voter fraud and intimidation. The EAC needs this consultant to conduct a preliminary examination of these topics to determine if a larger research project might be warranted. If so, the consultant would also be tasked to define the scope of the project and prepare a Statement of Work for the EAC to use for a subsequent competitive procurement. To promote a balanced and non-partisan approach to this effort, EAC is contracting with two consultants, who will work jointly to perform the work described below.

Nature of the Appointment

The EAC enters into this contract pursuant to its authority to contract for consultants under 5 U.S.C. §3109 (See 42 U.S.C. §15324(b)). As such this contract is for personal services and creates a limited employment relationship. (See 5 C.F.R. §304). As a result of this unique relationship, and pursuant to this agreement, you are required to follow all Federal laws and regulations as they relate to the release of agency documents and information, travel and conduct. All research, information, documents and any other intellectual property, (including but not limited to policies, procedures, manuals, and other work created at the request or otherwise while laboring for the EAC) shall be owned exclusively by the EAC, including copyright. All such work product shall be turned over to the EAC upon completion of your appointment term or as directed by the EAC. The EAC shall have exclusive rights over this material. You may not release government information or documents without the express permission of the EAC.

Supervision and Management.

The EAC Project Manager for this effort is Margaret Sims, EAC Research Specialist. Ms. Sims will provide taskings, and supervise, review and approve all work and performance.

Period of Appointment, Compensation and Travel.

The period of appointment under this contract is estimated at six months. The appointment shall constitute intermittent appointment (without a regularly scheduled tour of duty) per 5 C.F.R. §340.401(b). The consultant shall not incur overtime. The consultants shall not receive automatic adjustments of pay based upon 5 U.S.C. 5303. The consultants are not eligible for sick and annual leave, nor compensation for work performed on federal holidays. The Consultant is expected to work 450 hours during the estimated six month appointment period. These hours must be distributed evenly over the period so that the Consultant is working approximately, but no more than 20 hours per week. The consultant shall be paid at a rate of $111 per hour. The dates of performance are flexible but shall be based upon the needs of the project and the EAC. The project at issue is sought to be completed within the sixth month period. The period of appointment shall continue until the project, outlined below, is completed.

Consultant's duty station shall be his/her home or place of business. The consultant has access to and shall supply common office equipment to include telecommunications, internet, a computer, office supplies, facsimile machine and common workplace software (including Microsoft Word and Excel). Other resources will be provided by the EAC as needed and at its discretion.

The Consultant is required to travel on a periodic, as needed basis, throughout the duration of their appointment. All travel must be pre-approved by the EAC per Federal Travel Regulations and EAC policy. The Consultant will be reimbursed, at the Federal government rates, for hotel and ground transportation costs, proper incidental expenses, and per diem while on official, pre-approved EAC travel.

Areas of Responsibility

1. Develop a comprehensive description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation in the context of Federal elections.
2. Using the description developed above, perform background research, including both Federal and State administrative and case law review, and a summation of current activities of key government agencies, civic and advocacy organizations regarding these topics. Deliver a written summary of this research and all source documentation.
3. Work in consultation with other EAC staff and the Commissioners to identify a working group of key individuals and representatives of organizations knowledgeable about the topics of voting fraud and voter intimidation. The Working Group will be provided with the results of Tasks 1 and 2 as background information. The consultant will be responsible for developing a discussion agenda and convene the Working Group with the objective of identifying promising avenues for future research by EAC.

4. The consultant shall be responsible for creating a report summarizing the findings of this preliminary research effort and Working Group deliberations. This report should include any recommendations for future research resulting from this effort.
5. Should the EAC decide to pursue one or more of the recommendations made in the report noted above, the consultant will be responsible for defining the appropriate project scope(s) and preparing Statement(s) of Work sufficient for use in a competitive procurement.

Compensation Procedures

Compensation shall be made for work done by submitting invoices. Invoices shall be submitted on a monthly basis. These invoices shall state the number of labor hours that have been expended. Invoices shall be delivered to Ms. Margaret Sims for review and Ms. Diana Scott, Administrative Officer, U.S. Election Assistance Commission, 1225 New York Avenue, N.W., Suite 1100, Washington DC 20005. Compensation for travel shall be submitted by travel voucher consistent with federal travel regulation and EAC requirements.

Termination

This consultant contract can be terminated without cause in advance of the current end date by two weeks' notice in writing by either of the parties.

The Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, together with the Moritz College of Law and the Department of Political Science at The Ohio State University have formed a consortium to respond to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission's Request for Proposals to support the development of voluntary guidance on Provisional Voting and Voter Identification Procedures. These institutions have a record of accomplishment in this and closely related fields and are pleased to have this opportunity to contribute to the nationally significant research agenda proposed by the Commission. The consortium offers an independent, objective team of scholars and researchers whose experience and previous contributions to the field will facilitate the completion of the ambitious research agenda in the compressed time established in the RFP.

The research described follows the Commission's Resolution of October 12, 2004 that made the following points:

- Provisional Voting should ensure that all voters who are --or believe they are-- registered can cast a ballot in federal elections with the knowledge that a fair process will be followed to determine if the provisional ballot should be counted;
- Election officials have a duty to make certain that provisional balloting is administered fairly and effectively;
- Just before the election, the public was unclear about Provisional Voting procedures;

The Consortium

THE EAGLETON INSTITUTE

The Eagleton Institute explores state and national politics through research, education, and public service, linking the study of politics with its day-to-day practice. It focuses attention on how contemporary political systems work, how they change, and how they might work better. Eagleton offers a range of education programs, including an undergraduate certificate, graduate fellowships, research internships, and opportunities to interact with political practitioners. Eagleton's unusual experience in combining scholarly work with the practice of politics means that the Commission will receive information, analysis and recommendations that are credible, practical, and effective.

The Institute regularly undertakes projects to enhance political understanding and involvement, often in collaboration with government agencies, the media, non-profit groups, and other academic institutions. Its faculty, centers and programs specialize in fields that are directly relevant to the Commission's needs, including the study of: state legislatures; minority and immigrant political behavior; campaigns, elections and political parties; and civic education. The Institute is well known for its Eagleton Poll, a survey research center, which may contribute to this project if the EAC elects to include the optional surveys of young voters (who face particular hurdles as first-time registrants and voters) and of local election officials across the country. These surveys are described in this proposal as possible supplements to the research outlined specifically in the Commission's RFP.

THE MORITZ COLLEGE OF LAW

The College of Law has served the citizens of Ohio and the nation since its establishment in 1891. It has played a leading role in the legal profession through countless contributions made by graduates and faculty. It offers a broad and deep curriculum of approximately 145 courses, covering nearly every area of the law. Its contributions to election law have become well known through its Election Law @ Moritz website. Election Law @ Moritz illuminates public understanding of election law and its role in our nation's democracy. Moritz's role in the research may be enhanced by the inclusion of the OSU Department of Political Science, which is prepared to undertake an in-depth survey of provisional voting and voter identification requirements in one to three states if EAC elects to include that optional research in its contract.

Design and Management of the Project

The Consortium's work will be directed by a Project Team. Dr. Ruth B. Mandel, Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics and Board of Governors Professor of Politics at Rutgers, chairs the Project Team, and will be the Principal Investigator. Project Team members are:

Edward B. Foley, Robert M. Duncan/Jones Day Designated Professor of Law at the Moritz College of Law and Director of Election Law @ Moritz

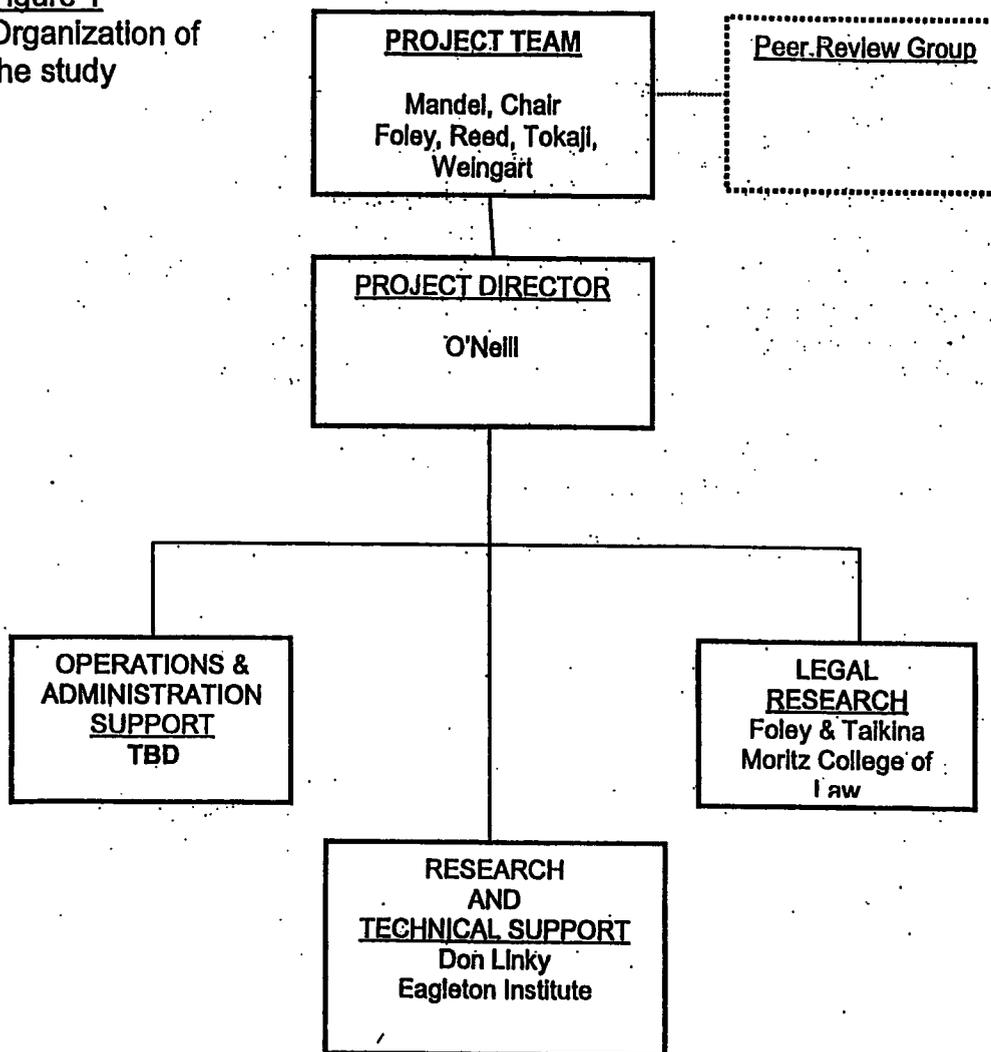

Ingrid Reed, Director of the New Jersey Project at the Eagleton Institute of Politics. Reed's work has focused on campaigns and elections from the point of view of the citizen.

Daniel P. Tokaji, Assistant Professor of Law at the Moritz College of Law. His areas of expertise include voting rights, civil rights, freedom of speech, disability rights, and civil procedure.

John Weingart, Associate Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics, whose publications focus on government process and citizen involvement

To manage the project, Eagleton has retained Thomas O'Neill. He has long experience in leading and managing complex research and analysis projects. For the past 20 years, O'Neill served as President of The Partnership for New Jersey and led its Leadership New Jersey, diversity management and education improvement programs. Previously he was Executive Director of The Center for Analysis of Public Issues in Princeton, which, among other research, analyzed campaigns and elections. He served for several years as election night analyst for New Jersey Network Television and for WNET-Channel 13 in New York. The team he leads will include a research administrator and support staff necessary for the timely completion of all tasks specified in the RFP. The work will benefit from review by an advisory group of senior scholars and a bi-partisan group of practitioners to provide peer review of draft reports. The peer review group will broaden the viewpoints reflected in the work and lend depth to the Project Team.

Organization of the study

The Peer Review Group is now in formation. Both Eagleton and Moritz are connected to a wide, national network of academics, authorities, and activists involved in elections and election law. Upon award of the contract, we will activate that network to recruit 8 to 10 outstanding men and women to constitute the Peer Review Group. Those listed below have not been approached yet, but they represent the range and caliber we intend to recruit for the Peer Review Group.

- Kim Alexander, California Voter Foundation, a nonpartisan organization she founded in 1994 to advance new technologies to improve elections.
- William Baroni, an attorney, Republican member of the New Jersey General Assembly, who specializes in election law.
- Mickey Edwards, former Oklahoma Congressman and faculty member at Harvard's Kennedy School who taught courses on Congress, political leadership, issue advocacy, election strategies, conservative political theory, and the constitutional separation of powers. Now at the Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs.

- Elaine Jones, former president and director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund.
- Richard C. Leone, President, The Century Foundation, which sponsors an active project on election law. Former New Jersey Treasurer and candidate for the U. S. Senate.
- Frank Reiche, an attorney in private practice, chaired the Federal Election Commission during the Administration of George H. W. Bush.
- Trevor Potter, President, Campaign Legal Center and former member of the FEC. The Campaign Legal Center is a nonpartisan, nonprofit organization which works in campaign finance, and elections. Advisor to Senator John McCain.
- Peter Veniero, an attorney in private practice, former Justice of the New Jersey Supreme Court, who provided election-related legal advice to former Governor Christine Todd Whitman during her first campaign.
- Alan Rosenthal, Professor of Public Policy, Rutgers, the State University, whose research focuses on state legislatures.

The Peer Review Group will bring a wide range of thinking and informed opinion to the project. Its members will broaden and deepen the Project Team's consideration of how provisional voting and the voter identification regime affect access to the ballot while preserving the integrity of the election process. The Peer Review Group will comment on an early draft of the analysis called for in Tasks 3.4 and 3.10 and in the development of alternative approaches called for in Tasks 3.5 and 3.12.

Approach to the Research and Analysis

The Commission's resolution of October 12 (Resolution 2004-02) provided guidance for election administrators in the states on how to achieve the goals of the Help America Vote Act. The research proposed here should determine the degree to which that guidance was followed in the case of Provisional Voting and in the intertwined topic of Voter Identification Requirements. Through research, interviews, survey analysis and hearings, we will develop information on key questions about the 2004 election, including:

- Did the States have in place clear and uniform written procedures, guidelines and/or instructions to govern the casting and counting of provisional ballots?
- Did local procedures reflect the state's uniform procedures?
- Did all States and election jurisdictions make these procedures available to the public, political parties and candidates before the election;
- To what extent were poll workers appropriately trained on how to administer provisional ballots, including establishing the identity of the potential voter seeking a provisional ballot?
- How were Federal funds under the Help America Vote Act used to educate voters about their rights to cast a provisional ballot, as well as where such provisional ballots must be cast in order to be counted?
- In States where a provisional ballot had to be cast at the voter's assigned polling place or precinct, was information available to poll workers to allow them to determine the voter's assigned precinct and polling place?
- Do states have mechanisms in place to inform voters casting provisional ballots whether or not their vote was counted, and whether or not they are now registered for subsequent elections?

The answers to these questions will reveal the nationwide response to HAVA and to the Commission's guidance in its Resolution 2004-02. They will also help the Project Team develop recommendations to improve the Commission's ability to tailor its guidance document to the needs of voters and election officials. The Commission will gain the knowledge needed to provide a clear basis for practical action by those responsible for administering elections, and thereby move closer to the goals of the Help America Vote Act. It will determine the degree to which Provisional Voting provides a "fail-safe" ballot for those who would otherwise be disenfranchised by confusion or administrative error. This work is important.

Objectives for Provisional Voting and Voter Identification Requirements

A critical area of inquiry throughout this study will be the balance between ballot access and ballot integrity. Striking that balance requires well-trained election administrators who can make fine distinctions under pressure. Figure 2 shows the interplay among the three goals of voter access, ballot security, and administrative clarity, illustrating that tradeoffs must be made in pursuing these important goals. The balance among these goals was one issue at stake in Spencer v. Blackwell, which raised the central issue of discrimination against African-American voters by poll challengers in Ohio. Just before the 2004 election, the U.S. Court Of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in Summit County Democratic Central and Executive Committee v. Blackwell described the tension between the conflicting goals of ballot access and ballot integrity, concerns that apply to assessing the effects of provisional voting:

There is a strong public interest in allowing every registered voter to vote freely. There is also a strong public interest in permitting legitimate statutory processes to operate to preclude voting by those who are not entitled to vote. Finally, there is a strong public interest in smooth and effective administration of the voting laws that militates against changing the rules in the hours immediately preceding the election.

We will pay particular attention to these tensions. The study will weigh questions of open access, administrative practicality, equitable treatment of all voters, the role of technology in extending the boundaries of the possible, and the realities of reliance on state and local entities to devise and administer election law in compliance with constitutional protections within a framework of federalism.

We will reach out to organizations, such as those listed below, with an interest in HAVA and in issues surrounding Provisional Voting and Voter Identification to gather information and invite their comments, suggestions, and recommendations:

- American Enterprise Institute [www.aei.org]
- Brennan Center for Justice at NYU School of Law [www.brennancenter.org]
- Center for Digital Government
- The Century Foundation [www.tcf.org]
- The Constitution Project
- DEMOS-USA [www.demos-usa.org]
- The Election Center [www.votewatch.us]
- Election Reform Information Project [www.electionline.org]
- Leadership Conference on Civil Rights [www.civilrights.org]
- League of Women Voters [www.lwv.org]
- National Association of State Election Directors [www.nased.org]
- People for the American Way [www.pfaw.org]
- Secretaries of State Association [www.nass.org]

The information and perspectives held by these organizations will provide leads for further research and analysis. For example, DEMOS-USA, a New York-based NGO, undertook a 50-state survey of plans for provisional ballots. Published as "Placebo Ballots—Will Fall Safe Voting Fall", its findings suggest areas for further inquiry:

- Officials were asked the circumstances under which provisional ballots would be offered, which races the ballots would include, and how they would be determined valid and subsequently counted. The responses differed widely among states. At times, different elections officials within the same state offered different answers.
- Idaho and Minnesota do not offer provisional ballots to first-time, newly registered voters who cannot show identification.
- Ten other states do not allow these individuals a chance to substantiate their identity after Election Day or verify their eligibility through other means. Instead, they will automatically invalidate provisional ballots cast by these "voters."

- At least fifteen other states require provisional voters to return to the election clerk's office after Election Day to present identification. Poll worker error is likely to have a particularly strong effect on provisional voters. Many voters will likely leave the polling place without understanding that they must return with identification sometime later for their provisional ballot to count.
- Twenty-three states provide provisional ballots and verify voters' eligibility without requiring them to present identification subsequent to Election Day.

WORK PLAN

Figure 4, attached, is a preliminary Gantt chart of the project. Please refer to it in conjunction with the following narrative. The chart projects a start date of April 4, 2005, with completion by the end of October 2005, for a duration of 7 months.

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Task 3.1 (By April 14)

We will submit an updated work plan and more detailed Gantt chart. The updated work plan will contain additional detail on the approach and methods we will apply to each task and will provide a more precise estimate of the time required for completion of those tasks. The Project Director and selected members of the Project Team will brief the EAC Project Manager and lead Commissioner as required. Before April 14 we expect to know from the Project Manager if the EAC wishes us to undertake the optional surveys described in this proposal as supplements to the research.

Task 3.2 (By middle of each month, May – October)

The Project Director will submit progress reports that summarize activities, indicate progress, report preliminary results and conclusions, identify problems to be resolved, and track the budget.

Task 3.3 (Periodically, May – October)

The Project Team will brief the EAC as desired. The work plan provides for as many as 6 briefings at appropriate milestones (see Gantt chart). Some of these would be by conference call, others would take place at the EAC's offices.

Task 3.4 Collect and Analyze (April -- May)

The analysis of variation in the administration of Provisional Voting across the country is the keystone of this phase of the research. With the research team and advisory group in place, we will begin immediately to collect and analyze state legislation, administrative procedures, and court cases to understand variations in implementation across the country. The compendium of statutes, case law and procedural guidance collected will provide a valuable continuing resource for the EAC. The analysis of that material—and, we hope, of the optional surveys described below—will provide the basis for possible alternative approaches to Provisional Voting called for in Task 3.5 that we and the EAC will consider in drafting the preliminary guidance document called for in Task 3.6.

- In 2004, according to Electionline, more than 1.6 million provisional ballots were cast, with nearly 1.1 million (68 percent) counted. In Florida and Ohio alone, this meant nearly 200,000 voters who would have been turned away from polling places if their names could not be found in 2000 had a chance to cast a ballot in 2004. Election Line's work points to the critical importance of different procedures state-by-state across the country in the implementation of Provisional Voting.¹ It found that: "Provisional vote-counting varied widely among states, from a national high of 97 percent counted in Alaska to a low of 6 percent counted in Delaware. The report found a national average of 68 percent counted. While lacking any concrete data of the reasons for accepting or declining the votes, anecdotal reports from state and local election officials indicate some people were confused into thinking that provisional ballots could be used in lieu of registration. Those ballots were not counted." "State rules had an impact on the percentage of provisional ballots counted. States that allowed voters to cast ballots outside of their correct precinct but inside of their jurisdiction counted an average of 70 percent of provisional ballots. States that disqualified any provisional ballots counted outside of a voter's correct precinct counted 60 percent of the ballots."
- "The national mandate for provisional voting did not mean national uniformity. In fact, we found that whether a voter had his or her provisional ballot counted relied nearly as much on where they cast it as their actual registration status. Had the election been closer, this would have been a flashpoint for controversy... The debate over provisional ballots is far from over."

Our goal in this project is to provide the EAC with the information and analysis needed to move that debate closer to resolution.

The Project Director and staff at Eagleton, working with one or more graduate assistants, will undertake a comprehensive survey of the literature on Provisional Voting and of news and government reports in the experience with Provisional Voting in the November 2004 election.

If the Commission elects to fund the optional survey of local election officials, the work will also include producing reliable and valid data on how these officials conducted themselves and how they evaluate the clarity of the instructions and guidance they received. The sampling of the view of these officials, whose responsibilities are critical to the effective implementation of Provisional Voting, will provide information more reliable and thorough than the anecdotal reports available through a literature search.

Accepted
CP

The Commission may also elect to fund the optional survey of provisional voters in 1 – 3 states that is described below. It will enrich the study by providing valid and reliable, non-anecdotal information on the experience of those who cast a provisional ballot.

Optional Survey of Provisional Voters

A survey of provisional voters would provide rare, reliable information about the process of casting a provisional ballot as reported by the voters themselves. The OSU Department of Political Science will design a survey instrument and commission a survey of a sample of those casting provisional ballots in one to three states (including at least one of the 17 states where Provisional Voting was new in 2004).

The survey would reveal the voters' understanding about why they had to cast a provisional ballot. Was this due to their changing residences before the election, faulty voter identification, or other reasons? It would gauge their reactions to the provisional ballot process. The results of this survey would enrich the research and provide a new dimension of the EAC's understanding of the provisional voting process.

Learning how the process worked for provisional voters is important. We lack systematic information about how citizens view casting a provisional ballot. Is the experience positive or negative for them? Did they expect their vote would be counted, or did they believe that being asked to cast a provisional ballot implied that their vote would be discarded? The survey will summarize voters' reports about whether they were informed that their ballot was or was not counted. Demographic questions will ascertain the correlates of provisional voting: if it was more common among racial and ethnic minorities in some areas, among young voters, etc.

The OSU team will begin the survey by constructing a sample of 3,000 provisional voters with names and addresses. It will obtain the list of provisional voters, write the survey questions, verify the programming of the questionnaire, analyze the data, and write up the data. In writing the survey, the OSU political scientists will reflect the results of the EAC's ElectionDay Survey.

OSU plans to subcontract the actual administration of the survey instrument to Knowledge Networks (www.knowledgenetworks.com), which has conducted Internet surveys funded by several federal agencies, including the NSF and the EPA. Knowledge Networks will send letters to the provisional voters in the sample to notify them of the study. Of the 3,000 provisional voters, 2,400 will receive directions to complete the interview on a website. Knowledge Networks will conduct 10-minute phone interviews with 200 of those who do not complete the web interview. It will also conduct telephone interviews with 200 of the 600 people not assigned to the web interviews.

The interview process, including the mailing and programming, pretest, revisions, field period, and file construction, will require 56 days. Consequently the survey of provisional voters should begin at the very start of the project so that its results can be considered in drafting the guidance document on Provisional Voting.

Optional Survey of Young Voters

Eagleton's Center for Public Interest Polling (the Eagleton Poll) has won a grant from the Carnegie Foundation to survey the experience of young voters as a result of their participation in the 2004 election. Young voters are one of the groups most likely to encounter difficulties in registration, identifying themselves, finding the proper polling place, and other topics relevant to this research. This proposal offers the Commission the option of funding the addition of questions to this survey to highlight issues faced by young, often first-time voters. The additional questions could determine, with measurable reliability, the frequency with which young voters cast provisional ballots, their impressions of the process by which they voted provisionally, and their experience with identifying themselves at the polls. Answers to these questions would deepen the analysis of these issues and provide results more reliable than those produced by the collection of anecdotal evidence.

At the same time, the researchers at Moritz will undertake a thorough collection and analysis of legislation and litigation to reveal how each of the 50 states approached HAVA's mandates. They will analyze the effect of litigation on that implementation and of the continuing influence of case law on the interpretation of HAVA. We will merge the legal analysis with the political and procedural analysis to illuminate the key questions posed by the RFP.

The merged analysis will increase understanding of the range of approaches to implementing Provisional Voting across the country. It will permit us to categorize the states by the nature of their Provisional Voting regimes, which will produce insights into the strengths and weaknesses of different approaches to implementing HAVA. The goal of the new guidance document, of course, is to build on the strengths and correct the weaknesses.

Our analysis will consider the variation in experience between those states that previously provided for provisional voting and the 17 where provisional voting was new in 2004.

Developing answers to three key questions poses a challenge.

1. Ideally, gauging the effectiveness of provisional voting in enfranchising qualified voters requires an examination that goes beyond calculating the percentage of provisional ballots cast counted. That number alone does not reveal the subjective experience of those who voted by provisional ballot. Did they feel enfranchised, or did they harbor doubts that their votes would count? The optional survey described above would assess that dimension of the question, which is important to understand the credibility of the provisional ballot, particularly in a closely contested election.
2. Measuring the consistency of counting of provisional ballots also poses significant challenges. The literature search will reveal anecdotal reports from various jurisdictions, but the optional survey of local election officials could provide results that are more revealing from the observations of those in the best position to answer this question.
3. Assessing how well local election officials understood how to implement provisional voting will be difficult. The optional survey by the Eagleton Poll would tap the opinions of a national sample of local election officials to assess their self-reports about their level of understanding and their evaluation of the training and explanatory materials provided to them.

Deliverables

1. Indexed database of major articles on Provisional Voting and related topics
2. Summary of case law on Provisional Voting
3. Compendium of states' legislation, procedures, and litigation.
4. Summary of the Election Day Study –a narrative of the nation's experience with Provisional Voting in 2004.
5. Analysis of disparities and similarities of how provisional voting was implemented around the country, which will be critiqued by the Peer Review Group.
6. [Optional] Survey results of local election officials' experience in interpreting guidance from the EAC and state election officials by the Eagleton Poll.
7. [Optional] Survey report on the experience of provisional voters in 1 – 3 selected states by the OSU Department of Political Science.
8. [Optional] Survey report on the experience of young voters by the Eagleton Poll.

Task 3.5 Analysis and Alternative Approaches (June)

We see this task as the heart of the project: to assess the potential, problems, and challenges of provisional voting and develop alternative means to achieve the goals of provisional voting.

The first step in this task is to undertake a thorough analysis of the information developed in the first phase of the project (Task 3.4). The Project Team and its staff will merge the legal analysis, review of case law, study of procedures, and, if the optional surveys are included in the project, the information gleaned from the reports of provisional voters and local election officials. Our work will take the following approach:

1. Review the facts and opinions revealed in the Columbus hearing, in the Commission's Election Day Study, the literature review, and the optional surveys (if undertaken) to prepare a written summary of the experience with Provisional Voting.
2. Clarify the additional policy considerations involved in improving the processes of Provisional Voting, such as the relationship between the Provisional Voting regime and the approach to voter registration and voter identification.
3. Summarize the views of the groups with a stake in Provisional Voting and related issues,
4. Analyze the tensions among the triangle of competing forces that connect the three major objectives for Provisional Voting: enabling maximum number of eligible voters to cast ballots that will be counted; establishing procedural simplicity for voters with a reasonable workload for election officials; minimizing the opportunity for voter fraud.
5. Describe and evaluate alternative ways to achieve the goals of HAVA through Provisional Voting.

6. Tap the views of the members of the Peer Review in preparation for briefing for the Commission on our preliminary conclusions and recommendations.
7. Also during this period, the Project Director, in consultation with EAC staff, will select a location and make preliminary arrangements for a public hearing on the Provisional Voting Guidance Document to take place in September.

Deliverables

1. Written analysis of the experience of Provisional Voting across the country in 2004 based on all available sources and original research.
2. Report of alternatives to existing practices and procedures for Provisional Voting and voter identification and assess which objectives or values each alternative favors.
3. Recommendations for best practices
4. Briefing documents for Peer Review Group.
5. Briefing for the Commission

Task 3.6 Preliminary Guidance Document (July – early August)

In this phase of the project, we will develop policy recommendations based on the research and analysis performed in the previous task. Successful completion of this task will require the closest coordination on a continuing basis with EAC staff.

Based on the Commission's reaction to the briefing at the conclusion of Task 3.4 the Project Team will draft a preliminary guidance document for review by the EAC Board of Advisors and the Standards Board at a meeting to be convened by the Commission. The meeting will take place in early August.

The Project Team will:

1. Outline major findings, flesh out preferred alternative approaches, and review with EAC staff.
2. Develop draft Preliminary Guidance Document (PGD)
3. Submit the PGD to the Peer Review Group and revise based on its comments.
4. Prepare final draft of PGD for review by Commission staff; revise
5. Distribute document to EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Board 5 – 7 days before the meeting or teleconference.
6. Project Director and selected members of the Project Team will brief and respond to questions and comments during the meeting or teleconference.
7. Prepare summary of issues raised by members of the EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Board at the meeting or teleconference.

Deliverables

1. Draft Preliminary Guidance Document
2. Briefing for EAC Board and Advisors and Standards Board
3. Summary of comments from Board of Advisors and Standards Board

Task 3.7 Revise Guidance Document for Publication (August)

Based on the comments from the EAC, the Board of Advisors and the Standards Board, the Project Team will revise the PGD to prepare it for publication in the Federal Register. The target for publication will be the week of August 22.

Deliverable

Revised PGD suitable for publication in Federal Register

Task 3.8 Arrange Public Hearing (August)

The target date for the hearing is the third week of September, 30 days after publication of the draft Guidance Document in the Federal Register during the week of August 22.

The Project Director will have made preliminary arrangements for the public hearing – selection of city and reserving a venue, for example – earlier in consultation with EAC staff. Arrangements will be finalized in June and July, with retention of a transcription service and provision of day staff to register those testifying. The Project Team will begin to review and summarize written comments as they arrive.

Deliverables

Contract for use of venue for public hearing

Contract with transcription service for coverage of hearing

Contract with office temp agency for admin support of hearing

Task 3.9 Final Guidance Document for Adoption (late September)

In the week following the hearing, the Project Team will review the comments and testimony received, summarize that material for discussion with the EAC staff, and revise the Guidance Document as appropriate. The EAC will receive the final Guidance Document in time to adopt it before the end of September.

Deliverable

Final Guidance Document

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

Voter identification requirements are intertwined with provisional voting issues. Understanding the connections between the two parts of this research will be critical in achieving the goals of the project.

Ferment is bubbling in the states over voter identification issues. The sharp debate over voter identification makes this work more immediately relevant. Legislatures are now wrestling with the very issues to be analyzed in these tasks. The current edition of

*Democracy Dispatches*², for example, highlights recent developments and contentious debates that the Guidance Document on this subject may help resolve.

- In Indiana the Republican-controlled House Elections Committee reported out a bill by a 7-5 margin that would require most people to show government-issued ID before voting. Opponents argue that the legislation will discourage people from voting. "It is very clear who is being disenfranchised," said a poll worker quoted in the newsletter. "It's people of color, it's the poor, it's the elderly."
- African American lawmakers in the Georgia State Legislature led a walkout by Democrats after the passage of a bill in both Houses that would require Georgia voters to show photographic identification. "What's happening today is just an updated form of Jim Crow," said one senator from Atlanta. "You may be more polite about it... but we know who's going to be disenfranchised."
- In New Mexico, House Republicans attacked Democrats for not including more stringent voter ID requirements in their election reform bills. After several House Republicans left an elections committee meeting on March 13, one representative accused them of planning a walkout to prevent his bill's passage.
- In Texas, new bills would require voters to show proof of citizenship before registering to vote for the first time. A spokesman for People For the American Way is quoted as saying that "this type of legislation will be just as burdensome for U.S. -born voters who move from state to state, or from county for county, as for naturalized citizens."

Authoritative research on the effect of different voter ID regimes on electoral participation, including registering and turnout, particularly turnout by minority voters, promises to raise the level of the debate across the nation.

Advocates on voter ID issues are divided into two, polarized camps. Some seek to minimize identification requirements in order to maximize the number of potential voters who register and cast a ballot. Advocates of this position fear that minority and immigrant voters, young voters, and elderly voters will lack convenient access to the required ID documents, or that they will be more fearful of submitting their ID documents to official scrutiny. On the other side of this debate are people and groups that seek to maximize the security of the franchise, prevent multiple voting or voting by those who are not citizens, and ensure that only those legally entitled to vote do so, and do so once only for each election. Each position pursues legitimate and important goals, but the tradeoffs between them have not been clarified.

The debate between these two positions is rich in assertion, but poor in evidence. We propose to test the hypothesis that more stringent voter ID requirements depress voter participation in general or for the poor, minorities and older voters in particular. We will also search for evidence of a change in the frequency of voter fraud under different requirements for Voter Identification. This research appears practical because the 50 states can be classified into 4 broad, different Voter ID regimes --from requiring ID at every election to merely signing in without verification. We plan to include in our research a statistical analysis of voter turnout in the jurisdictions, with special attention to participation by minority voters, using the variety of Voter ID requirements that existed before HAVA as a controlling variable.

A study by The Constitution Project, published by Electionline.org in 2002³ found "a wide variety of practices around the country – from procedures requiring nothing more than voters stating their names to rules ordering voters to produce picture identification before casting ballots." In the pre-HAVA era it found the following distribution of practices, which provides a potentially rich mine of data to compare voter participation in states with different Voter ID regimes:

- 11 states required in-person voters to present documentary information; local jurisdictions and/or poll workers in 4 more states can choose to require identification.
- 18 states required only that voters sign in at the polls.
- 9 states required the signatures to be matched against other signed documents.
- 9 states only required voters to announce their names at the polls.

Performing this analysis will strengthen the factual basis on which the commission proposes new guidance on Voter Identification Requirements.

Task 3.10 Collect and Analyze (April – May)

We will perform this task in conjunction with Task 3.4. The material we gather on Voter ID legislation, administrative procedures and case law will be included in the compendium to be delivered at the end of June. While the Project Team and staff collect and begin the analysis of the material, the Project Director will plan the public hearing on Voter ID issues that will take place in early June.

Our research staff will begin the statistical study of voter participation under various Voter ID regimes, with the aim of completing that work in time for its results to be considered in drafting the Preliminary Guidance Document to be delivered to the EAC in mid July.

Deliverables

1. Indexed database of major articles on Voter ID Requirements and related topics
2. Summary of case law on Voter ID issues
3. Compendium of states' legislation, procedures, and litigation.
4. Analysis of voter participation and vote fraud under various Voter ID regimes to be reviewed by the the Peer Review Group.

Task 3.11 Conduct Public Hearing (June)

The Project Director will consult closely with EAC staff on planning for the half-day, informational public hearing, including on questions of site selection, development of topics to be covered by panels, and the recruitment of panelists with contrasting views and information on those topics. The target for invitations to panelists will be no later than early May. The information and perspectives gleaned at the hearing will be included in the analysis of Voter ID issues that shapes the drafting of the Preliminary Guidance Document.

Deliverables

1. Outline of topics for 3 panels
2. List of 9 – 12 panelists
3. Invitations to panelists
4. Hearing announcement
5. Hearing transcript
6. Hearing summary

Task 3.12 Alternative Approaches (late June)

Following the hearing, the Project Team will review its compilation of materials from the states, the results of its research on voter participation and vote fraud under different Voter ID regimes, its literature search, and the information from the public hearing to assess the problems and challenges of Voter Identification procedures and devise a range of alternative policy measures to respond to those problems and challenges. The Project Director will work closely with the EAC and its staff to identify policy objectives with which to assess the alternatives, using the triangle of contending forces as an organizing principle to categorize objectives.

The Peer Review Group will be kept informed of the progress of this work and its comments will be sought on an early draft of the Analysis and Alternative Approaches paper. The comments of the Peer Review Group will help shape our briefing for the Commission on this critical task. The Project Director and members of the Project Team will conduct that briefing in late June, just as the Commission receives the Draft Report and Compendium of materials on Provisional Voting (Task 3.4)

During this time period, the Project Director, in consultation with the EAC, will select a site and make preliminary arrangements for the public hearing on the draft guidance document, which will be held in early October.

Deliverables

Draft analysis and alternatives for Peer Review Group
Briefing on analysis and alternatives for EAC

Task 3.12 Preliminary Guidance Document (July – August)

Based on comments by the EAC on the briefing, particularly the discussion of alternatives, as well as the evidence, and criteria for evaluation, the Project Team will draft the Preliminary Guidance Document. The draft will be distributed to the EAC Board of Advisors and the Standards Board for a meeting in mid August (just as the draft Guidance Document on Provisional Voting is delivered to the EAC for publication in the Federal Register). The Project Director and selected members of the Project Team will participate in the Board meeting to present the document for discussion and respond to questions and comments. It will record comments for review in revising the document.

Deliverables

1. Draft Guidance Document
2. Briefing for EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Board
3. Summary of comments from Boards

Task 3.14 Revise Guidance Document for Publication (Late August)

The Project Team will review on the comments by the Peer Review Group, EAC, the Board of Advisors, and the Standards Board and reflect their views in the Guidance Document. The target is to deliver it to the EAC for publication before the end of August.

Deliverable

Draft Guidance Document for publication

Task 3.15 Public Hearing (October)

The Project Director will have completed arrangements for the hearing (city, venue, transcription service, etc.) by late July. The hearing will take place in the first two weeks of October, 30 days after publication of the draft in the Federal Register.

Deliverables

1. Public hearing
2. Transcript
3. Summary of comments

Task 3.16 Final Guidance Document (late October)

In the week following the hearing, the Project Team will review the comments and testimony received, summarize that material for discussion with the EAC staff, and revise the Guidance Document as appropriate. The EAC will receive the final Guidance Document in time to adopt it before the end of October.

⁵ The preliminary guidance documents for both the Provisional Voting and for Voter Identification Requirements will be reviewed by a Peer Review Group appointed by the Steering Committee and may be revised as a result of that review before being submitted to the EAC. Members of the Peer Review Group are listed in a separate appendix to this proposal.

⁶ The surveys would provide additional and valid and reliable data on which to base the conclusions reflected in the draft preliminary guidance document.

Attachment 3: Principal Investigator

The principal investigator, Dr. Ruth B. Mandel, is director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics and Board of Governors Professor of Politics. As Institute director, she is responsible for general direction and oversight of all programs and projects at Eagleton. Under Mandel's leadership, the Institute has been successfully completed dozens projects under federal, state and foundation grants and contracts, many of which address topics related to voters and voting, civic engagement and political participation, and representative democracy.

Three projects in which she has played a significant and direct substantive role are described below: the New Jersey Initiative: Building Management Capacity in New Jersey Municipalities; the Young Elected Leaders Project; and the New Jersey Civic Education Consortium.

a) The New Jersey Initiative: Building Management Capacity in New Jersey Municipalities

Sponsoring Organizations: The Pew Charitable Trusts and the NJ Department of Community Affairs

Project Managers:

Dale Jones, Syracuse University [REDACTED]

Mark Pfeiffer, NJ Department of Community Affairs,
[REDACTED]

Period of Performance: 5/01 to 11/02

Value of Award: $90,000 to Eagleton Institute of Politics

Mandel oversaw the implementation of the New Jersey Initiative, which was conducted as a partnership between the Alan K. Campbell Public Affairs Institute of the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University and the Eagleton Institute of Politics. Mandel guided the formation of the collaboration, the identification of the tasks, including issues related to selecting the case studies, and dissemination of the recommendations and results.

The overall goal of the New Jersey Initiative was to provide opportunities for municipalities and other levels of government, educational institutions, non-profit organizations and individuals to learn about public management systems, how they might be improved, and how they can better meet the needs of those in leadership positions and the needs of citizens. Recommendations for state policy and municipal administration were included.

Seven New Jersey municipal governments volunteered to participate in the Initiative – Brick Township, Elizabeth City, Franklin Township, Irvington Township, Old Bridge Township, Paterson City, and Trenton City. Through their involvement, the project examined the five core management system areas that comprise management capacity – financial management, capital management, human resources management, information technology management, and managing for results. Much was learned about management capacity at the municipal level in New Jersey and the role of the state government in municipal management.

The project resulted in two published monographs: The New Jersey Initiative: Building Management Capacity in New Jersey Municipalities and Summary of The New Jersey Initiative: Building Management Capacity in New Jersey Municipalities.

b) Young Elected Leaders Project

Sponsoring Organization: The Pew Charitable Trusts
Project Managers: Tobi Walker, Program Officer, Civic Life Initiatives;
[REDACTED]

Period of Performance: January, 2002 - June, 2004

Value of Award: $211,000

Mandel led the project team that conducted a pioneering national study of young officeholders. Under her direction, Eagleton identified and surveyed elected officials age 35 and under in three categories: federal (members of Congress); state (statewide elected officials and state legislators); and local (mayors and municipal council members from cities with populations of 30,000 or more). In May 2003, Eagleton convened Political Generation Next: America's Young Elected Leaders, the first national conference for young elected leaders, an occasion to explore issues raised in the research and discuss the challenges of public leadership facing the next generation.

Mandel was centrally involved in every phase of the project, providing the vision that resulted in the successful proposal to Pew, contributing both to the ideas guiding the project and the actual day-to-day management. She played a key role in the design of the survey administered to young elected leaders, in the selection of conference participants, and in the planning of the conference agenda and presenters, as well as at the conference itself. She co-authored the final report provided to the funder and issued to the general public, also titled Political Generation Next: America's Young Elected Leaders, and she led dissemination efforts, speaking at public programs and to the media about the findings from the research and conference.

c) New Jersey Civic Education Consortium

Sponsoring Organization: The Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation

Project Manager: David Grant, [REDACTED]

Period of Performance: March, 2000 - May, 2001

Value of Award: [REDACTED]

The New Jersey Civic Education Consortium was created by the Eagleton Institute of Politics as a statewide partnership of educators, schools, nonprofit organizations, corporations, and political leaders committed to expanding and strengthening civic education and political participation in New Jersey. Sponsored and hosted by Eagleton, the Consortium seeks to promote partnerships among schools, community organizations, and public servants to educate and encourage a citizenry informed about and engaged in the practice of a democratic society. More than 100 organizations, agencies and school districts signed on as Consortium partners, and more than 125 individuals in the education, non-profit, and political communities served on Consortium work groups. The Consortium came into existence to strengthen the state's infrastructure to educate and encourage a citizenry informed about and engaged in the practice of a democratic society. It seeks to leverage limited resources through partnerships and information-sharing and by increasing public awareness.

With support from the Dodge Foundation, the Consortium hosted a statewide conference to highlight best practices, exchange ideas, and explore how to use the 2001 gubernatorial election as an educational opportunity. Approximately 90 people gathered at the New Jersey Law Center in New Brunswick to share ideas, make connections, and find new ways of improving civic education in New Jersey. The conference included: a poster session highlighting some of the best practices in civic education from across the state; panels of educators, government, academia, the media, and the non-profit community; and a keynote speaker, Professor Alan Rosenthal, discussing democracy and youth civic engagement.

The Consortium also awarded mini-grants for exemplary programs and engaged the public sector in civic education through a pilot project to bring public officials into the classroom. Some of the grantees presented their work at the Consortium's conference. Under a related grant from the Schumann Fund for New Jersey, the Consortium developed a toolkit with educational resources and suggested activities to assist public officials in working with students.

Mandel worked on the original plan for Eagleton to convene the Consortium and directed Institute staff in shaping the mission and direction of the Consortium. She has been actively involved in development of the Consortium's activities and materials.

Dr. Mandel's current resume is provided in Attachment 8 – Resumes of the Project Team.

Attachment 4: Comparable Projects Performed by the Eagleton Institute of Politics

a) Seminar Series: The Challenge of Implementing the Help America Vote Act

Sponsoring Organization: The Fund for New Jersey

Project Manager: Mark Murphy, Executive Director, [REDACTED]

Grant: $5,000 for direct expenses of speakers.

This project demonstrates Eagleton's continuing interest in the implementation of HAVA and knowledge of implementation issues. It shows the Institute's knowledge of implementation issues and its ability to achieve productive results by identifying competencies in other states and making contact with key leaders, summarizing information in useful formats and engaging individuals with diverse perspectives on election administration.

In the fall of 2003, the Eagleton Institute of Politics presented a series of three seminars, organized by Ingrid W. Reed, Director of the Institute's New Jersey Project, designed to give New Jersey an opportunity to gain perspectives from six states – New Mexico, Maryland, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Georgia and California – on election reform and implementation of the then-new federal Help America Vote Act. The seminars were held at Eagleton on the Rutgers University campus in New Brunswick, New Jersey.

Each seminar featured speakers from two states where election administration initiatives are underway and addressed one of three areas – state administration, statewide voter registration lists, and communication and education. The programs also included extensive discussion periods with individuals from New Jersey's state and county governments, academic institutions and non-profit organizations interested in election reform, as well as members of the New Jersey HAVA planning committee. The seminars were supported in part by a grant from the Fund for New Jersey.

The first seminar, on September 25, 2003 focused on state administration of elections and plans for implementing HAVA. Presentations were made by Rebecca Vigil-Giron, New Mexico Secretary of State and president-elect of the Association of Secretaries of State, and Linda Lamone, the State Administrator of the Maryland State Board of Elections. They focused on how states are working with counties to provide state-coordinated management practices.

The second seminar on October 28, 2003 focused on HAVA requirements to create a statewide voter registration list. Presentations were made by Christopher Thomas, Director of the Bureau of Elections in the Michigan Department of State who headed his state's efforts to create a statewide voter data base that began in the mid-1990's before HAVA, and Ted Koval, project manager for the Statewide Uniform Registry of Electors (SURE) in the Pennsylvania Department of State who leads the development of his state's registration list in the post-HAVA period. Thomas and Koval discussed state initiatives for addressing a key provision of HAVA which involves application of information technology and new approaches to inter-governmental relations.

The third seminar, on November 20, 2003 focused on the HAVA requirement to provide voter information and education. Presentations were made by Alison Bracewell McCullick, Statewide Voter Education Coordinator for the Georgia Department of State where she oversees 12 voter education coordinators around the state, and Conny G. McCormack, County Clerk for Los Angeles County who has responsibility for conducting elections with over 4 million voters and 5,000 voting places. Bracewell McCullick and McCormack presented examples of communications approaches reaching different audiences through diverse media.

As a follow-up to the seminars, a summary of specific key points from the presentations of each of the speakers was prepared and mailed and e-mailed to staff members in the to New Jersey partisan and non-partisan legislative staff offices to help inform new legislation New Jersey would need to implement the requirements of HAVA. The summary was also provided to the election administration staffs in each of New Jersey's 21 counties and to the leadership of the municipal clerks organization in order to give them a sense of what other states have done in working with county and local leadership to implement HAVA. As a direct result of Eagleton's work, New Jersey election officials subsequently visited the State of Michigan election office and are now modeling New Jersey effort to create a statewide voter list on Michigan's. In addition, the summary has been useful to organizations who have advocated for changes in the election system and who are acting as watch dogs of New Jersey's progress on implementation. The summary is posted on the Eagleton Institute web site.

b) Second HAVA Seminar Series

Subsequent to the HAVA seminar series focusing on other states, the Eagleton Institute of Politics supported the subsequent seminars as part of the Institute's public service mission. This series was directed by Ingrid Reed of Eagleton and included the following:

July 24, 2004 - The Chairman of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission, Dr. DeForest B. Soaries, Jr., spoke about "Implementing HAVA: Perspectives from the Federal Level." The program also included Attorney General Peter C. Harvey, New Jersey's Chief Election Official.

October 8, 2004 - The topic was "Implementing HAVA: Can We Alleviate Risk and Improve Public Confidence When Using New DRE Voting Systems?" Eric Lazarus, lead developer of the report "Recommendations for Improving Reliability of Direct Recording Electronic Voting Systems" issued by the Brennan Center for Justice at NYU Law School and the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, discussed how and why these recommendations were made for the 2004 election and how election officials were asked to respond to them. New Jersey election officials then discussed how these recommendations were being addressed, which measures should be considered for the future and which measures appeared irrelevant for New Jersey.

January 5, 2004 - The topic was "Next Steps for HAVA Implementation in 2006 Based on 2004 - and what it means for the New Jersey Election in 2005." The session used the Election Official Report Card 2004 developed by the Brennan Center as a starting point for a discussion to set an agenda for evaluating the next elections. Bonnie Blader of NJ Appleseed reported on her inspections and discussions about security matters in several counties. Deborah Goldberg, Program Director of the Democracy Project of Brennan Center for Justice at NYU Law School discussed the use of the Election 2004 Report Card and Eric Lazarus presented plans for assessing what information is needed to make decisions about voting systems.

c) The 2001 New Jersey Election, A Century Foundation Report (issued October, 2002)

Sponsoring Organization: The Century Foundation

Project Manager: Tova Wang, [REDACTED]

Period of Performance: 2001-2002

Value of Award: $6,000

This project illustrates the Eagleton Institute's early interest in issues related to HAVA and its ability to conduct applied research, analyze data and information, work with election officials, craft recommendations and contribute to state-by-state comparison of election issues.

The Century Foundation requested Ingrid Reed, director of the Eagleton New Jersey Project, to prepare one of four studies of 2001 elections designed to assess the extent to which problems evident in Florida and elsewhere in 2000 persisted in the absence of fundamental reform throughout most of the country. Reed provided a study with recommendation of the New Jersey gubernatorial election. The other three were the governor's race in Virginia, and mayoral races in New York City and Los Angeles.

The Century Foundation reports were released and discussed at the National Press Club, Washington D.C. on October 15, at a program, "Does the Federal Election Bill Fix The Problem?" moderated by Juan Williams, senior correspondent for National Public Radio's Morning Edition.

Overall, the reports show that election problems were much less pervasive in Virginia and Los Angeles -- which have long-standing voting laws and practices that parallel the reforms that Congress enacted -- than in New Jersey and New York City, where there have been more scattershot approaches to election reform. The reports can be found on www.reformelections.com.

The Overview of the Century Foundation Report (p. xxxiv) notes that in New Jersey, "structural flaws in the system reduce responsibility for carrying out elections effectively and leave local and county administration unaccountable." The report notes that in the 2001 election, the number of uncounted votes rose -- usually New Jersey hovers around the national average -- despite the fact that the state replaced its punch card ballot machines. It also notes that New Jersey uses a wide variety of voting machines, and despite official reports, election observers and voting advocates report polling sites and systems remain inaccessible for the disabled.

The report on the 2001 New Jersey Election points out that New Jersey's decentralized, county-based election system is very similar to Florida's and lacks transparency and accountability.

The first part of the New Jersey report gives a the context for the 2001 elections and describes initiatives taken in 2000 such as eliminating punch card machines and increasing poll worker pay. It discusses how the process worked by looking at four places where specific election problems arose -- Atlantic City, Cumberland County, Passaic County, and Mercer County. It also presents results of an informal survey conducted by Eagleton with the assistance of two research fellows of election administrators about the 2001 election that showed that the increase in poll worker pay successfully addressed the need for workers. It also makes recommendations for improving future elections (p.39): They include:

- define a state leadership role in managing elections
- set county standards for streamlined administration
- address the needs of citizens with disabilities
- examine role of absentee ballots
- improve services for bilingual voters
- upgrade and standardize voting equipment
- consider practices in other states for such initiatives as statewide voter lists, mail ballots, shorter registration deadlines
- use modern communications to promote elections
- recognize outstanding achievements in election administration at the county and local level

Reed concludes the report noting that "the challenge is to find a way to address the systemic issues about election administration in order to assure that the more specific issues are implemented fairly and efficiently and not simply added on to an already complex, overburdened structure.... Leadership from the governor and the legislature will be required to define the expectations for reform and to engage, not ignore, the many individuals and entities already involved in the election process to craft a new system."

Reed added that the new federal election reform act will be catalyst for addressing many of the problems with New Jersey's system and provides funds to make improvements in voting equipment.

d) RU Voting

Sponsoring Organization: Rutgers University
Project Manager: Greg Blimling, Vice President, [REDACTED]

Value of Award: $20,000

The Eagleton Institute initiated and managed a project to register and educate Rutgers University students and get them out to vote. Helping to form and mobilize a non-partisan association of staff, faculty, and student groups, Eagleton assistant research professor Susan Sherr served as faculty advisor for a project led by a recent Rutgers graduate. The coalition collected approximately 11,000 registration forms for students registering for the first time, seeking absentee ballots or filing address changes. The group also sponsored a website providing information for student voters.

The election-day experience of this project is particularly relevant to this proposal to the EAC. While thousands of Rutgers students headed to the polls, apparently because of the huge influx of new voter registrations, many found their names had not been added to the rolls. While they were able to vote by provisional ballot, many found this frustrating and disappointing, and contacted Eagleton. Several Eagleton faculty and staff members spent much of election day in contact with area local election officials, reporters and students trying to determine exactly what the problem was and what solutions could be found quickly. The difficulty of making these determinations along with the wild rumors the problems generated were sobering and instructive for considering how to improve the use of provisional ballots in particular.

e) Public Interest Polling

Sponsoring Organization: NJ Motor Vehicles Commission
Project Manager: Sharon Harrington, Director [REDACTED]

Value of Awards: $160,000

The fifth comparable project is the survey research work performed by the Eagleton Institute's Center for Public Interest Polling, also known as the Eagleton Poll. Whether or not the EAC chooses to fund the optional polls described in this proposal, the work done by the Eagleton Poll is relevant both for helping the project team understand the value and limits of polling as a gauge of public opinion and because the prominence of the Poll has contributed to public knowledge and respect for the Institute as a whole.

The Eagleton Poll, established in 1971, was one of the first, and most respected academic-based state survey research organizations in the country. The Center engages with approximately 25 government or non-profit agencies each year to conduct polls and focus groups. One client has been the New Jersey Motor Vehicles Commission which has hired Eagleton twice over the last three years to conduct customer satisfaction surveys. The current contract also calls for convening of focus groups to probe issues more deeply and an assessment of Motor Vehicles employee attitudes and impressions.

In addition, Eagleton collaborates with New Jersey's largest newspaper, The Star-Ledger, to conduct the Star-Ledger/Eagleton-Rutgers Poll. Conducted five to six times a year, this is the most prominent and oldest survey of public opinion in the states.

Attachment 5 –Risks re Provisional Voting

The research proposed to develop the guidance document for Provisional Voting involves a contentious political and policy debate, requires the use of a large mass of information to varying reliability, and requires aiming at a moving target because considerable action is underway across the country based on the experiences with the 2004 election. Each of these factors could undermine the credibility and utility of the work, but reasonable precautions can moderate that risk.

Polarized Political and Policy Debate

The debate over Provisional Voting has resulted in a clash over policy with a distinct partisan tinge. Republicans and Democrats are at odds over the proper role for Provisional Voting in the electoral system, election officials are exposed to a more stringent scrutiny that had been the norm, and the federal role in what had previously been a state and local responsibility is controversial in some quarters. All of these conditions make Provisional Voting a controversial topic and will put the analysis and recommendations of this project not just under a microscope but one illuminated by a harsh light.

The most effective way to moderate the risk that controversy could undermine credibility of the project is to turn to independent institutions with a strong reputation and the credentials that inspire confidence. We believe that the Eagleton Institute of Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey and the Moritz College of Law of the Ohio State University have that reputation and that their scholarly, policy-relevant work has created a reputation that inspires confidence.

Data Analysis

The volume and types of information related to Provisional Voting nationwide is staggering. Relying on narratives in the press or from the organizations that have sprung up in the last several years to monitor election reform is appropriate for much of the work proposed. But judging the validity and reliability of that information can frequently be problematic. Unreliable data will produce unreliable conclusions, which, in the present contentious political atmosphere, will quickly undermine the project.

This proposal addresses that problem by supplementing the available sources of data with survey research, the reliability and validity of which is measurable. The proposed survey of provisional voters would go beyond the anecdotal to provide statistically significant measures of their subjective experiences. The survey of local election officials would tap systematically their assessment of the clarity of the guidance they received in 2004 more reliable than the anecdotal reports frequently found in the existing literature.

The Moving Target

The states are not sitting back waiting for instructions on how to proceed in improving the process of Provisional Voting. This project to provide them guidance, which they may or not accept, is aimed at a moving target.

The best way to ensure the relevance of the guidance when published is to conduct the project in a way that provides information too good to ignore. The thorough nationwide search for best practices, clear-eyed analysis, independent review of the experience in 2004, and clear objectives will make the guidance document useful to all jurisdictions.

Attachment 6 – Risks re Voter Identification

The research proposed to develop the guidance document for Voter Identification Requirements and Procedures comes at a time of particularly sharp debate. That debate reveals a racial dimension as well as a partisan dimension, and it is taking place in state houses across the country. The vocabulary of the controversy is richer in invective and allegation than it is in information and analysis. As with the project on Provisional Voting, we are aiming at a moving target as the states grapple with how to modify their requirements for Voter Identification at a pace that may be faster than the schedule for publication of the Commission's guidance on this topic.

Polarized Debate

The debate over Provisional Voting has resulted in a clash over policy with a distinct partisan tinge. Republicans tend to favor more demanding Voter Identification procedures to increase the security of the ballot. Democrats advocate for a more open system, fearing that stringent requirements would reduce the electoral participation of the poor, the elderly, African-Americans and immigrants, and other groups. Stepping into the middle of this conflict is inherently risky because motives and intentions will be called into question.

The most effective way to moderate the risk that controversy could undermine credibility of the project is to provide information that is not now found in the debate. The analysis of the effects of different Voter Identification regimes on voter participation will bring new information to the debate. If our intentions are realized—and they should be—the analysis will yield a clearer understanding of what tradeoffs may exist between various Voter Identification regimes. This kind of good data will not end the debate, but it should raise it to a higher level, and that would be no small achievement in this case. A higher level of debate will likely make the Commission's guidance more influential.

Quality of the data

Raising the quality of the debate by providing information both sides can find useful carries its own risk. The time available for this work is limited. To fail to produce the information as needed in the workplan is real because the work is demanding. But we believe that careful management and the resources of the two institutions will make it possible to develop the analysis in time to be useful in shaping the guidance document.

The Moving Target

The states are moving ahead to change their Voter Identification Procedures. This project to provide them guidance, which they may or not accept, is aimed at a moving target.

As with the Provisional Voting Project, The best way to ensure the relevance of the guidance when published is to conduct the project in a way that provides information too good to ignore. The thorough nationwide search for best practices, clear-eyed analysis of the tradeoffs between Voter ID procedures, and clear objectives will make the guidance document useful across the country.

Attachment 7 – Five Top Reasons Eagleton/Moritz is the best qualified candidate

1. This project involves subjects in sharp debate. The Eagleton Institute of Politics of Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, and the Moritz College of Law of the Ohio State University are well-respected, independent academic institutions whose work will lend credibility to the research and the resulting Guidance Documents.
2. Eagleton and Moritz have an active and admirable record of involvement in election analysis, inter-governmental relations, election law and related topics. This experience not only enhances their reputations, it provides them with a rare, if not unique, perspective on the issues that will be apparent in the quality of the work produced.
3. The partnership in this project between an Institute of Politics and a College of Law will enrich the analysis. The synergies derived from focusing two different perspectives and ways of thinking on the issues will strengthen the conclusions. The guidance documents that result will rest on a platform both broad and strong.
4. The Peer Review Group created for this project in the proposal will enlarge even further the perspectives and experience focused on improving the process of Provisional Voting and assessing Voter Identification Requirements. The Peer Review Group's comments will strengthen the analysis so that it can survive the scrutiny it is sure to receive in the current, contentious climate.
5. Both Eagleton and Moritz have strong record of obtaining and analyzing information from governments and interest groups and involving them in the interpretation of the data. They are truly independent: neither is a vendor or contractor involved in elections. Their work will be –and will be seen to be– objective and thorough.

Qualifications and Resumes for Project Team

QUALIFICATIONS

Jeffrey Levine - Director of Eagleton's Center for Public Interest Polling

Levine has written extensively on political behavior. He is author or co-author of chapters in three forthcoming books: The Social Logic of Politics: Family, Friends, Neighbors, and Workmates as Contexts for Political Behavior (Alan Zuckerman, editor), The Behavioral Study of Political Ideology and Policy Formulation (Carl Grafton and Anne Permaloff, editors), and The Persistence of Political Disagreement among Citizens: How Disagreement Survives within Communication Networks (Robert Huckfeldt, Paul Johnson, and John Sprague, authors). Levine's research has also been published in a variety of academic journals, including Public Opinion Quarterly, American Political Science Review, and American Journal of Political Science. Currently, he is engaged in an ongoing research project that examines the incidence and nature of informal political debate and deliberation in the American electorate.

Before his appointment as Director of the Center for Public Interest Polling in 2004, Levine was Managing Director of a commercial research firm, where he directed hundreds of quantitative and qualitative research studies for a range of corporate, non-profit, and political clients. He has also provided public opinion analysis on MSNBC and the FOX News Channel.

Levine earned his B.A. in Political Science from University of Rochester and his M.A. and Ph.D. in Political Science from Indiana University.

DON LINKY - Director, Electronic Government Project

Linky is focusing on how electronic technology is affecting government, politics and public affairs. He also continues as president of the Public Affairs Research Institute of New Jersey, a corporate-supported nonprofit founded in 1930 that monitors New Jersey economic, demographic and fiscal trends, and as president of Joshua Communications, a for-profit publishing and information consulting firm.

During the administration of New Jersey Governor Brendan T. Byrne, Linky served as chief counsel to the governor and director of the Governor's office of policy and planning. He had key roles in the development of such programs as the Pinelands Protection Act, the Spill Compensation and Protection Act, the Community Development Bond Act, the Enterprise Zone program, and the creation of New Jersey Transit.

He is the editor or co-editor of the reference books The New Jersey Directory: The Insider Guide to New Jersey Leaders; The New Jersey Almanac; and The New Jersey Municipal Almanac, and serves on the editorial board of The New Jersey Encyclopedia. A native of Asbury Park, he now resides in Princeton.

Linky received a BA from Dartmouth College in 1968 and a JD from Harvard Law School in 1972. He also attended the London School of Economics and Political Science.

RUTH B. MANDEL - Director, Eagleton Institute of Politics, Rutgers University and Board of Governors Professor of Politics,
Eagleton Institute of Politics, Rutgers University

From 1971 through 1994, Ruth B. Mandel directed Eagleton's Center for American Women and Politics (CAWP), where she remains affiliated as a Senior Scholar. Mandel teaches and writes about women and leadership, with emphasis on U.S. women's political history, women as political candidates and officeholders, women's political networks, and the "gender gap." She is the author of numerous publications about women's changing political roles. Recently, she headed an Eagleton team in developing the Young Elected Leaders Project, a new area of study focused on elected officials age thirty-five and under.

Mandel's public service includes a presidential appointment on the governing board of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C. She has served as Vice Chairperson of the board since being named by President Bill Clinton in 1993 and reappointed by President George Bush in 2002. Mandel is a member of the Museum's Executive Committee, its Academic Committee, and chairs its Education Committee. She chaired the task group charged with proposing a governing structure for the new Museum. In the 1990's, she led the process to create the Museum's Committee on Conscience, which was established in 1996 with Mandel as its founding chair.

Professor Mandel is a member of the board of the Charles H. Revson Foundation. Her service has also included membership on the board of the National Council for Research on Women; the National Commission for the Renewal of American Democracy; Princeton University's Center for Jewish Life; the Mercer County Commission on the Status of Women; and various editorial boards for scholarly journals and academic publishers.

Awards include: Woodrow Wilson Public Service Award given in the Governor's Pride of New Jersey Awards (1992); Gloria Steinem Women of Vision Award presented by the Ms. Foundation (1996); Twenty-First Century Leadership Award, presented by the President of the National Women's Hall of Fame; Breaking the Glass Ceiling Award from Women Executives in State Government (1998); honorary Doctor of Public Service degree from Chatham College (1998); Award for Distinguished Policy Leadership and Advancement of Women in Public Life from the Women Legislators and College Presidents of Maryland (2002); Salute to the Policy Makers award from Executive Women of New Jersey (2004).

As an observer and analyst of American politics and emerging trends in leadership, she lectures and speaks frequently to a wide range of community, civic and academic audiences.

Ruth B. Mandel holds a B.A. in English from Brooklyn College and an M.A. and Ph.D. in American Literature from the University of Connecticut.

THOMAS M. O'NEILL -Project Director

. For the past 20 years, O'Neill served as President of The Partnership for New Jersey and led its Leadership New Jersey, diversity management and education improvement programs. Previously he was Executive Director of The Center for Analysis of Public Issues in Princeton, which, among other research, analyzed campaigns and elections. He served for several years as election night analyst for New Jersey Network Television and for WNET-Channel 13 in New York.

INGRID W. REED - Director, New Jersey Project, Eagleton Institute of Politics, Rutgers University

Ingrid W. Reed directs the Eagleton New Jersey Project, an initiative designed to reinforce and expand the contributions of Rutgers' Eagleton Institute of Politics to the governance and politics of its home state. Among its initiatives are programs on campaign and election activity, women and politics, welfare reform, and governance issues.

Recently Reed's work has focused on campaigns and elections from the point of view of the citizen. She is the co-author with Professor Gerald Pomper of a report with recommendations about the 1998 New Jersey Congressional Campaigns, Not Bad But Not Enough. She has conducted similar studies for the 2000 congressional campaigns, for the 2001 and 2003 for the New Jersey gubernatorial and legislative races, and 2002 U.S. Senate and House races. She is the author of The 2001 New Jersey Election, one of four reports prepared for The Century Foundation assessing the extent to which problems in the 2000 Florida election persisted in 2001. In March 2004, she presented a paper at Rutgers's Center for Government Services Policy Seminar Series on "Issues in Voter Participation: Do We Know What They Are? If We Know, What Can We Do About Them?" In partnership with Eagleton's Center for American Women and Politics, she organizes the Bi-Partisan Coalition for Women's Appointments. In 2001-2002, Reed was associate director for a pilot project funded by The Pew Charitable Trusts and the NJ Department of Community Affairs, conducted collaboratively with Syracuse University's Maxwell School for Citizenship and Public Administration, that resulted in a report, The New Jersey Initiative: Building Management Capacity in New Jersey Municipalities.

Before joining the Eagleton Institute, Reed served as assistant dean of Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs where she also directed the Rockefeller Public Service Awards Program, and as vice president for public affairs and corporate secretary of The Rockefeller University in New York City.

Reed has written op-ed columns on politics for the Home News and Tribune (central New Jersey), The Times of Trenton, New Jersey Law Journal, the Philadelphia Inquirer and The Record; as well as authored pieces on public administration, urban redevelopment, welfare reform and municipal management. She is frequently interviewed for analyses of New Jersey politics by state, national and international media.

In her public service activities, Reed has a wide range of experiences in state politics and planning, governance and community affairs. She has chaired the Capital City (Trenton) Redevelopment Corporation, a state agency, since it began in 1988. She is a founder and board member of New Jersey Future, the organization advocating the implementation of the State Development and Redevelopment Act, and she was on the board of the New Jersey Conservation Foundation and is currently on the Regional Plan Association, New Jersey Committee. She was elected to the board of the Community Foundation of New Jersey in April 2000.

Reed is a member of the board of the Institute of Public Administration (NYC). In 1993, she was elected a fellow of the National Academy of Public Administration and served on its special panel on Civic Trust and Citizen Responsibility. From 1983 to 1986, she held a Kellogg Foundation National Leadership Fellowship.

She is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of the University of Pennsylvania.

JOHN WEINGART - Associate Director, Eagleton Institute of Politics,
Rutgers University

John Weingart is the associate director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University. He also chairs two state commissions: the Highlands Water Protection and Planning Council and the Delaware and Raritan Canal Commission.

John's publications include the Eagleton Institute study, "Another Government Success Story: Citizen Volunteers on New Jersey State Boards and Commissions" (2004); Waste Is A Terrible Thing To Mind: Risk, Radiation, and Distrust of Government (described at www.WasteIsATerribleThingToMind.com), and Reform of Undergraduate Education (written with Arthur E. Levine) which was named "Book Of The Year" by the American Council on Education.

Before coming to Eagleton, John served in New Jersey state government for 23 years during the administrations of two Democratic and two Republican governors. He worked at the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection from 1975 to 1994 where his posts included director of the Division of Coastal Resources and Assistant Commissioner for Environmental Regulation. He then spent four years as Executive Director of the state's Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Facility Siting Board.

John holds a B.A. in Sociology from Brandeis University and a Master's in Public Affairs from Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School.

Research

2001-2004: a national study of young elected officials (age 35 and under) serving at federal, state, county and municipal levels, which includes developing a national data base, conducting an on-line and mail survey of officeholders, and convening a conference to extend and deepen survey findings. The study has resulted in a report and analysis summarizing demographic characteristics, backgrounds, attitudes, ideology and ambitions of the population of young elected leaders holding office at the beginning of the new century.

Since 2000: a multi-year study of U.S. women's leadership in collaboration with Professor Mary Hartman. The project currently involves a series of videotaped interviews with women who contributed in significant ways, primarily on the national level, during the last quarter of the 20th century to the social change movement that reshaped women's roles, status, aspirations and opportunities in the United States.

1996-97: study comparing the impact of women serving in the 104th Congress with that of women in the 103rd Congress

1993-95: study of the impact of women serving in the 103rd Congress

1993-95: assessment of the findings of two decades of research about women in public office, and development of an agenda to guide future research on women and politics

1989, 90, 92: studies of the politics of the abortion issue in campaigns for state and national offices

1987-91: first national study of the impact of women in public office based on nationally representative samples of women and men elected to state legislatures

1987-91: designed grants program and awarded stipends for eleven small-scale studies examining the impact of women serving in different types and levels of public office

1981-83: national survey comparing women and men in elected office, focusing on the factors which facilitate and impede women's entry into public office

1981-83: first study of women appointed to high-level positions in a presidential administration

1981-83: first nationwide study of women appointed to high-level positions in state cabinets

1978-80: study of women in municipal management

1978-80: study of the development of organizations of women public officials

1977-79: study of women on school boards

1977-78: second national survey of women officeholders, collecting and analyzing data about women's social backgrounds, political experiences, organizational ties, perceptions and policy attitudes

1976: study of proportions of women serving on state boards and commissions in 39 states

1976: study of the campaign experiences of female candidates for elective office

1976: designed grants program and awarded stipends to six scholars for studies of women and local government

1975-76: first ever national survey of women serving in elective office at local, county, state and federal levels

1974: developed grants program and awarded stipends to six scholars for study of the nature and political impact of women's voluntary activities

Data Bank on Candidates and Officeholders

Since 1975 CAWP has developed a computerized database on women in elective office at municipal, county, state legislative, statewide and federal levels. The Center also regularly collects pre- and post-election data on female candidates in congressional, statewide and state legislative races. The data bank serves a variety of constituencies (from students and scholars to activists and journalists) as a national resource for current and historical information about women in politics.

Program for Women State Legislators

1995, 1991, 1987, 1983: Planned and organized the National Forum for Women State Legislators, the largest meetings of elected women ever convened. Held in San Diego, California, each Forum has attracted close to 1000 participants, including hundreds of legislators, as well as scholars, issues experts, organization leaders, political party officials, and journalists. The agenda has focused on several themes emerging from CAWP's studies of women legislators and from various related research and education programs:

(1) the impact of elected women on public policy, and the ways in which female officials may respond differently from men to policy issues; (2) the barriers and opportunities for increasing the numbers and influence of women in public office, particularly in state legislatures; (3) the movement of women into positions of legislative leadership.

1990: Co-convened a midwest regional seminar for women state legislators with the Institute for Policy Leadership at the University of Missouri — St. Louis.

1989: Convened a national educational forum for newly elected women state legislators, with veteran women lawmakers serving as core faculty.

1985: Convened a national Conference for Women in Legislative Leadership to explore ways in which women in leadership affect the legislative institution and the public policy agenda.

1982: Convened the Conference for Women State Legislators to examine and assess the prospects for women as elected lawmakers and the progress which had been made since CAWP's first Conference for Women State Legislators held ten years earlier (Pocono conference, May 1972).

National Education for Women's Leadership (NEW Leadership)

Conceived and developed a national program of summer institutes to teach college women leadership theory and skills as well as women's political history. Initially funded by the W.K. Kellogg Foundation, the program became a model for subsequent regional CAWP programs in New Jersey, the South, the Midwest, and later throughout the country at colleges and universities that became part of CAWP's NEW Leadership Development Network.

Public Leadership Education Network (PLEN)

A founder of the Public Leadership Education Network (1978). PLEN is a consortium of eighteen women's colleges working to educate their students about women in policymaking and public leadership. PLEN maintains a national office in Washington, DC. CAWP has been a consulting organization to PLEN.

Documentary Film

Executive Producer of a one-hour documentary film examining the progress made by women and the obstacles they encountered during more than a decade of increasing involvement in political life. Entitled Not One of the Boys, the film aired nationally on Frontline (PBS), October 1984.

Editing

Oversaw the publication of books, monographs, and reports resulting from studies and related projects conducted by the Center for American Women and Politics (CAWP) and issued by commercial publishers or through the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University. These include publications about: the backgrounds, issue orientations, political experience, ambitions and impact of women and men in public office; the networks and organizations of political women which have developed across the country since the mid-1970s; women in public management positions in urban government; women in state legislatures; studies of the barriers facing male and female office seekers and the routes they have taken to elected and appointed positions; studies of the impact of women in public office.

Subject No Cost Extension Request

Karen - I am attaching a spreadsheet providing the information you have requested (Attachment 1), but I want to highlight a few points which may not be immediately self-evident.

First, the original budget (Attachment 2) we submitted to the EAC, dated March 22nd, did not itemize personnel expenses by each person. In addition, when we actually began work two months after submitting that budget, we decided to reallocate more time to people within Eagleton and hire fewer outside hourlies.

Second, in the figures I sent you in late December we tried to account for all the expenses and projections but overlooked a few things including neglecting to include the honoraria for our peer review team. Hence, the figures we're now sending are different than what I sent in December.

Lastly, we originally discussed a no-cost extension through February, but since we don't yet have the EAC comments on our draft Provisional Voting material nor an estimate of when they are likely to be ready, I think it is prudent to extend the no-cost extension through March 31st. We would still like to conclude by the end of February, but if you can approve the extension for another month we could avoid going through this process again if everything is not complete six weeks from now.

It is my understanding that Rutgers will soon be sending our December invoice. At this time, I would also like to request that we combine January and February an invoice the EAC once for that time period.

As you can see, we are currently projecting an ending balance of approximately $10,000. If additional expenses are incurred beyond what is currently projected, we're confident they will not exceed the original budget of $560,002.

Thanks and I look forward to hearing from you.

EAGLETON INSTITUTE OF POLITICS

Request to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission for a No-Cost Extension and Reallocation of Funds

November 30, 2005

Why we need a no -cost extension

The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting based on our research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication. The draft was complete in August, but the EAC's schedule did not permit us to brief the commissioners and staff until early September. We did not receive EAC comments until October, making it impossible to complete the work on the original schedule. Taking account of those comments and guidance from EAC required several weeks. The EAC did not receive our final draft report and recommendations for best practices until late November. We are now awaiting the EAC's comments on that final draft, which we have been told to expect in January.

The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report on that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid January.

Because the EAC has decided to issue recommendations for best practices on these topics, rather than voluntary guidance, we will finish the work within two months of the original completion date since the adoption process will be shorter. Note that meeting this schedule is dependent on the time needed by the EAC to review our work.

This extension will entail additional personnel time but, since no public hearings on "best practices" are required, if the EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work.

When will work be completed and funds fully expended?

As shown on the attached schedule, work on this contract will be completed in three phases. The EAC will receive our final report and recommendations for best practices in provisional voting during the week of January 23, 2006 (assuming that we receive the EAC's comments on the draft report submitted on November 28 by January 9).

We will submit our draft report, alternative approaches, and compendium of statutes, regulations, and litigation on Voter Identification Issues during the week of January 16, 2006. If the EAC is able to return comments to us no later than the week of January 30, we will have submit the final report and recommendations for best practices on Voter Identification to the EAC during the week of February 13.

The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $399,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project.

Subject No-Cost Extension Request

Karen - We are requesting a no-cost extension on the EAC contract to the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University to have the contract's concluding date move from March 31, 2006 to June 30, 2006. As I indicated earlier, it would be very helpful if we could receive approval of this request no later than April 28th.

This extension is necessary to enable the following activities:

1. The EAC has informed us that it will assemble a panel of researchers the week of May 8th to review the Eagleton/Moritz draft background report on Voter Identification. The EAC wishes to supplement the review of this draft already conducted by the Peer Review Group called for in the contract. The Eagleton/Moritz research team, as well as at least some of the Peer Review Group will participate in the conference call or meeting of the

EAC's reviewers;

2. Eagleton/Moritz will revise the draft Voter Identification report based upon comments made by the two sets of reviewers, and distribute the revised report to the EAC and its Advisory Board in mid-May.
3. Eagleton/Moritz will present its draft reports on Provisional Voting and Voter Identification to the EAC Advisory Board at its May 25th meeting in Washington, D.C.;
4. Eagleton/Moritz will revise both draft reports to take into account comments made by the EAC Advisory Board, and submit printed final reports to the EAC before June 23rd. Eagleton/Moritz will also prepare a PowerPoint presentation for both reports.
5. Eagleton/Moritz will present both reports at the EAC public meeting in Washington, D.C. on June 23rd, thus concluding its work under this contract.

Please let me know if you need any additional information.

Thanks,

John

Hi -- nice to meet you in person, finally!

And thanks for inviting me to your gathering, I enjoyed it and hope I was helpful. Of course, any time you want anything, you do know where to track me down.

As to the potential reviewers of the Eagleton Voter ID study, here are my suggestions, in order:
Jonathan Nagler, New York University
Jan Leighley, University of Arizona
Ben Highton, UC-Davis
Adam Berinsky, MIT
Bernard Grofman, UC-Irvine

All have worked with the CPS turnout/registration data, and are very familiar with this research literature.

If these don't work, or you want more recommendations, let me know.

Re: No-Cost Extension to contract number E4014127 with the Eagleton
Institute of Politics at Rutgers University

Background:

Contract E4014127 with the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University ("contractor") was originally scheduled to be concluded on March 31, 2006. The contract's final products include a report on Voter Identification and a report on Provisional Voting. The contractor has vetted the reports with a Peer Review Group, pursuant to the terms of the contract.

Justification for No-Cost Extension:

The EAC wishes to supplement the contractor's Peer Review of the reports by adding another review process with some of the EAC's key stakeholders. The EAC proposes to assemble a panel of researchers during the week of May 8th to conduct the second review.

Following the second review, the contractor will revise its draft reports based on the comments it receives. The contractor will present its draft reports on Provisional Voting and Voter Identification to the EAC Advisory Board at its May 25th meeting in Washington, DC. The contractor will revise both draft reports, taking into account the EAC's Advisory Board's comments and submit the final reports to the EAC toward the end of June.

Recommendation:

The EAC recommends that contract E4014127 be modified at no cost to allow the contractor to complete their work by June 30, 2006.

Subject July 12 and Peer Review Group

Karen:

The Eagleton project team usually meets on Tuesdays from 9:30 -- 11. At tomorrow's meeting I'll confirm with the group that we will meet on July 12, if that will fit your schedule. If that is a bad time for you, we have moved our meeting time before and can do so again if we can align participants' calendars. This week for the first time, Laura Williams --representing Moritz-- will join the session by telephone. For the meeting on the 12th I'll try to arrange for Ned Foley and Dan Tokaji to participate as well.

On the Peer Review Group

Your request to include the election officials on the group caused us to think anew about its purpose and composition. We agreed that election officials would add a useful dose of real world experience to the research. One of them could be Peter Veniero, who as AG (where he served before appointment to our Supreme Court) was New Jersey's chief election official. We would like Tom Wilkey to suggest a couple of former, senior election officials who could contribute to the PRG's work. While the PRG needs the experience of election administrators, we believe that perspective can be conveyed best by a senior, former official who is not appointed to represent a group of such officials --only to represent him or herself. We believe the group's advice would be most useful if came from people with the perspective provided by now being some distance from the daily fray.

This analysis emerged from a Friday conference call in which Ingrid Reed, Ned Foley, Laura Williams and I rethought the composition of the PRG. We concluded that the group should not, after all, include members from organizations that have taken advocacy positions on the issues we are researching. We agreed that the PRG should focus on methodologies and research findings rather than debate policy outcomes. PRG members should be free to represent themselves, rather than argue from an existing institutional position on policy. The PRG is not an advisory committee or a group of stakeholders to vet and take some ownership of policy recommendations. We'll consult the stakeholders separately, beginning with the list of groups in the proposal.

To replace those from advocacy organizations, we believe it would be preferable to add more members from academia and the law, such as Pam Karlan, Guy-Uriel Charles, or Dan Lowenstein, whose CVs are summarized on the attachment. Finally, I will draft a mission statement for the PRG. Attached is a revised list of proposed PRG members, showing 2 slots to be filled by senior, former election officials.

Hope you have received the Gantt chart by now and that it fits your needs.

Ingrid Reed and I will attend the meeting in New York on Thursday and look forward to seeing you there.

Tom

Karen,

As you probably recall, one of the features of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group to look over our findings, conclusions and draft reports before we prepare final drafts for the EAC's review. The EAC asked that before recruiting members of the PRG we submit names for EAC's review. The aim, course, is to assemble a panel that is experienced, informed, and balanced.

013411

Attached is a list of potential PRG members drawn from academia, the law, and non-profit organizations with interests in this area. Please look it over.

We may conclude that the PRG should also include two or three former government officials now in academia or related fields. We have a conference call with our partners at Moritz planned for tomorrow or Friday to decide a) if former officials should be included in the PRG and b) if so, who they should be. I'll keep you informed of our thinking as it develops.

You are hereby advised that the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) has competitively awarded a contract to the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey for research assistance to support the development of guidance on the two topics of provisional voting and voter identification procedures. Eagleton is partnering with the Moritz College of Law of Ohio State University for this work effort. The amount of this award is $560,002.

EAC appreciates the interest you have expressed in supporting our research agenda by submitting a proposal for this work. Should you wish to receive a de-brief on this procurement, please contact Carol A. Paquette, Interim Executive Director, by email at cpaquette@eac.gov.

Tim, Tom, John, et.al--

The EAC has identified three academics who are going to serve as peer reviewers of the Eagleton Voter ID paper and research.

They are Jonathan Nagler of New York University, Jan Leighley, University of Arizona, and Adam Berinsky of MIT.

They are ready to review the documents as soon as they are available.

I would like to them one week to review the material and then have a joint conference call on Thursday, May 11, in which we would all have an opportunity to discuss the research methodology and statistical analysis, along with general comments and suggestions.

If you are able to get to me the paper and the supporting data analysis, I will distribute to the documents ASAP.

Also let me know, if you would, your availability on May 11 to do this conference all.

Karen - At this time, we anticipate reallocating funds primarily from the public hearings line item and spending approximately $35,500 more than originally budgeted on personnel, $23,250 more on the subcontract with Ohio State and $20,250 more on consultants. There are other additional variances but they are not significant (e.g. less on honoraria, less on travel, and more on general operations such as phone expenses). Let me know if you need additional detail or information.

EAGLETON INSTITUTE OF POLITICS

Request to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission for a No-Cost Extension and Reallocation of Funds

December 1, 2005

Why we need a no -cost extension

The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting based on our research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication. The draft was complete in August, but the EAC's schedule did not permit us to brief the commissioners and staff until early September. We did not receive EAC comments until October, making it impossible to complete the work on the original schedule. Taking account of those comments and guidance from EAC required several weeks. The EAC did not receive our final draft report and recommendations for best practices until late November. We are now awaiting the EAC's comments on that final draft, which we have been told to expect in January.

The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report on that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid January.

Because the EAC has decided to issue recommendations for best practices on these topics, rather than voluntary guidance, we will finish the work within two months of the original completion date since the adoption process will be shorter. Note that meeting this schedule is dependent on the time needed by the EAC to review our work.

This extension will entail additional personnel time but, since no public hearings on "best practices" are required, if the EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work.

When will work be completed and funds fully expended?

As shown on the attached schedule, work on this contract will be completed in three phases. The EAC will receive our final report and recommendations for best practices in provisional voting during the week of January 23, 2006 (assuming that we receive the EAC's comments on the draft report submitted on November 28 by January 9).

We will submit our draft report, alternative approaches, and compendium of statutes, regulations, and litigation on Voter Identification Issues during the week of January 16, 2006. If the EAC is able to return comments to us no later than the week of January 30, we will have submit the final report and recommendations for best practices on Voter Identification to the EAC during the week of February 13.

The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $300,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project.

Subject Peer Review Group

Carol,

After our discussion in New York, you asked me to put in writing our response to the EAC's suggestions for expanding the number and kinds of groups that would review and comment on our work. I hope after your review of this response, we will be able to quickly recruit a balanced Peer Review Group (PRG) and move ahead as the schedule in our work plan indicates. Attached is a revised list of the members we propose for appointment to the PRG. We will probably not be able to persuade all of them to serve, but the number and range of views included on the proposed list should ensure that the resulting group is well-balanced.

Tom

RESPONSE TO EAC RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL REVIEW GROUPS

EAC's Recommendations for the PRG

Karen Lynn-Dyson reported this response from the EAC commissioners to our proposal for the composition of the PRG.

1. Not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG
2. Create a "tiered process" of review in which:
 - A. The PRG will prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions.
 - B. PRG's analysis would be vetted by a defined/select group of local election officials.
 - C. A defined/select group of advocacy organizations would review the comments of the local election officials

D. Empanel a final focus group of local election officials, advocates and academics for an overall, interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Project Team Response

Creating three new committees to the review process to supplement the work of the Peer Review Group (PRG) is possible, but would add at least 8 weeks –and possibly 12 weeks-- to our completion of the guidance document on provisional voting. We believe this delay would risk limiting the value of this project for the 2006 election. In addition, the change would add at least $30,000 to the cost of our work. (See the attached table showing the possible effect on our work plan, and note the optimistic assumptions such as the ability to hold a hearing the week after Christmas.) If the same groups were to be engaged in reviewing our work on Voter ID, the time for that work would also have to be stretched at a similar increased cost.

This additional cost and the added time might be worthwhile. . . if the new layers of review were to produce a consensus on how to strengthen the research, sharpen the analysis, and increase the relevance of the Guidance Document. Our team concluded, however, that additional review groups were unlikely to achieve these results.

PRG focuses on quality of research

We believe that our research would be strengthened by a balanced Peer Review Group that will focus on the design of the research and our conduct of it. Based on the EAC's recommendation, we have revised the composition of the PRG to include additional, well-recognized authorities in the field whose perspective is generally agreed to be conservative.

The PRG will focus on the strength of the research design and the quality of our analysis, not on the politics of our recommendations for the guidance document. The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Project Team focuses on analysis and recommendations

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions." That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC's Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a "defined/select" group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the "defined/select" group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a "defined/select" group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC's comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC's comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. And further revision will follow the public hearing and comments. The EAC and individual Commissioners can always seek comment informally on our analysis or recommendations. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

PROPOSED MEMBERSJuly6.doc

013431

REVISED
PROPOSED MEMBERS OF PEER REVIEW GROUP
July 6, 2005

Role of the Peer Review Group

Members of the Peer Review Group will review the research design for the project, including the survey of local election officials, the analysis of Voter ID regime on turnout, the state-by-state narrative of developments in provisional voting and voter identification, and the compilation and analysis of statutes, administrative regulations, and case law affecting provisional voting and voter identification. They will also review the report on Analysis and Alternatives. They may review the draft of the Preliminary Guidance Document before it goes to the Board of Advisors for comment.

Members of the group will be respected authorities in their fields and represent a range of opinions and perspectives, although their views on policy will be less important to the study than their views on the quality of the research on which policy recommendations are based.

Ideally, the group would meet once, but even that may not be possible to arrange given the tight time period for the project, the demanding schedules of the members, and their wide dispersal across the county. They will function largely by reviewing written work and making written comments on it. The timing of their involvement is indicated on the work plan.

Hi -- nice to meet you in person, finally!

And thanks for inviting me to your gathering, I enjoyed it and hope I was helpful. Of course, any time you want anything, you do know where to track me down.

As to the potential reviewers of the Eagleton Voter ID study, here are my suggestions, in order:
Jonathan Nagler, New York University
Jan Leighley, University of Arizona
Ben Highton, UC-Davis
Adam Berinsky, MIT
Bernard Grofman, UC-Irvine

All have worked with the CPS turnout/registration data, and are very familiar with this research literature.

If these don't work, or you want more recommendations, let me know.

EAGLETON INSTITUTE OF POLITICS

Request to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission for a No-Cost Extension and Reallocation of Funds

November 30, 2005

Why we need a no -cost extension

The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting based on our research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication. The draft was complete in August, but the EAC's schedule did not permit us to brief the commissioners and staff until early September. We did not receive EAC comments until October, making it impossible to complete the work on the original schedule. Taking account of those comments and guidance from EAC required several weeks. The EAC did not receive our final draft report and recommendations for best practices until late November. We are now awaiting the EAC's comments on that final draft, which we have been told to expect in January.

The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report on that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid January.

Because the EAC has decided to issue recommendations for best practices on these topics, rather than voluntary guidance, we will finish the work within two months of the original completion date since the adoption process will be shorter. Note that meeting this schedule is dependent on the time needed by the EAC to review our work.

This extension will entail additional personnel time but, since no public hearings on "best practices" are required, if the EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work.

When will work be completed and funds fully expended?

As shown on the attached schedule, work on this contract will be completed in three phases. The EAC will receive our final report and recommendations for best practices in provisional voting during the week of January 23, 2006 (assuming that we receive the EAC's comments on the draft report submitted on November 28 by January 9).

We will submit our draft report, alternative approaches, and compendium of statutes, regulations, and litigation on Voter Identification Issues during the week of January 16, 2006. If the EAC is able to return comments to us no later than the week of January 30, we will have submit the final report and recommendations for best practices on Voter Identification to the EAC during the week of February 13.

The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $399,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project.

Subject Fw: Survey Cover Letter and Questionnaire

This is an important e-mail (for audit purposes) related to the large survey of election officials which Eagleton did.

By law, the EAC could not do this survey without going through a lengthy OMB approval process. Eagleton was free to do this survey as long as it was for their clarification purposes and they did not seek our advice on the survey.

A review of the EAC's Statement of Work for Research Assistance to develop Voluntary Guidance on Provisional Voting and Voting Identification procedures, does not require that a survey of the elections community, regarding their experiences with provisional voting or voter identification be conducted. Therefore, the EAC is not required to review or approve such a survey.

Should Eagleton elect to conduct such a survey to further educate and inform their work on these topics, they may conduct such a survey on their behalf only.

Subject Survey Cover Letter and Questionnaire

Karen,

Attached are the two documents we just discussed. The cover letter will go to 2800+ election officials around the country. It alerts the recipients that they may be called to participate in a survey as a part of our research for the EAC. The survey will, in fact, interview only 400 of the local election officials, but notifying them all is necessary because the selection of those called will be random, and, if the surveyors cannot reach the first county drawn for the sample, they will move on to the next. The need to have your review of the letter is the most urgent. Unless it goes to SBRI, the survey firm that will make the actual calls, today, we will fall behind an already tight schedule.

The questionnaire would also benefit from your review. As you know, question wording is an art. A good question elicits the information sought without biasing the response. Your review, however, can help ensure that the survey elicits information that EAC will find useful. We will rely on the results to draw conclusions about provisional voting as experienced by county-level election officials. It inquires about the quality and timeliness of information and training they may have received from state-level officials and about the information and training that they, in turn, passed on to poll workers. I don't believe this information is available anywhere else. We are over-sampling officials in states that did not offer provisional ballots before 2004 so that we can draw some inferences about the difference between their experience and the experience of officials for whom provisional voting was more familiar. These inferences may provide helpful in shaping the guidance the EAC offers the states for the 2006 election.

Your comments on the questionnaire are also needed urgently, but I believe we can hold SBRI at bay on this document until tomorrow.

As I mentioned, my computer died on Monday, so I have only sporadic access to email. I will have access until about 2 today and then won't be back on-line until early evening. You can always reach me by phone at [REDACTED]. If you would like to send a fax, that number is [REDACTED].

Thanks,

TITLE

CITY STATE ZIP

Dear NAME,

Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, is conducting a national survey of elections officials' experiences with provisional voting in the 2004 national election. Through this survey we will learn the perspective of those who administer elections. It will improve our understanding of the process as we complete a broad research project on provisional voting in the context of effective election administration, voter access, and ballot security. The findings of the project will be the basis for recommendations to the U. S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) to consider in the development of its guidance to the states in 2006.

The EAC was established by the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) of 2002. It is an independent, bipartisan, federal agency that provides federal funds to states to upgrade voting systems and improve election administration. The EAC publishes voluntary guidelines for the states and serves as a national clearinghouse of information regarding election administration. The EAC is funding the research project.

Participants in this study will be selected randomly and asked to share their experiences administering the provisional voting process in the 2004 election. The study will be conducted July 18th through August 5th. During that period a survey researcher may call you if you are, in fact, chosen at random from a national list of election officials. The researcher will ask you questions about your experience with provisional voting, your evaluation of the process, and your recommendations to improve it. The survey will take approximately 10-15 minutes. All of your answers will be completely confidential, and no statement or comment you make will be ascribed to you.

At the conclusion of the research project, we will present a report to the EAC including analysis of provisional voting procedures as well as recommendations for future practices and procedures. The guidance document based on our research will be published by the EAC in the Federal Register for public review and comment, and the EAC will hold a hearing on the guidance document this fall before adopting it.

Your participation in the survey will assure that we understand the views of election officials who have direct experience with provisional voting. We hope you will participate if called. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Subject July 12 and Peer Review Group

Karen:

The Eagleton project team usually meets on Tuesdays from 9:30 -- 11. At tomorrow's meeting I'll confirm with the group that we will meet on July 12, if that will fit your schedule. If that is a bad time for you, we have moved our meeting time before and can do so again if we can align participants' calendars. This week for the first time, Laura Williams --representing Moritz-- will join the session by telephone. For the meeting on the 12th I'll try to arrange for Ned Foley and Dan Tokaji to participate as well.

On the Peer Review Group

Your request to include the election officials on the group caused us to think anew about its purpose and composition. We agreed that election officials would add a useful dose of real world experience to the research. One of them could be Peter Veniero, who as AG (where he served before appointment to our Supreme Court) was New Jersey's chief election official. We would like Tom Wilkey to suggest a couple of former, senior election officials who could contribute to the PRG's work. While the PRG needs the experience of election administrators, we believe that perspective can be conveyed best by a senior, former official who is not appointed to represent a group of such officials --only to represent him or herself. We believe the group's advice would be most useful if came from people with the perspective provided by now being some distance from the daily fray.

This analysis emerged from a Friday conference call in which Ingrid Reed, Ned Foley, Laura Williams and I rethought the composition of the PRG. We concluded that the group should not, after all, include members from organizations that have taken advocacy positions on the issues we are researching. We agreed that the PRG should focus on methodologies and research findings rather than debate policy outcomes. PRG members should be free to represent themselves, rather than argue from an existing institutional position on policy. The PRG is not an advisory committee or a group of stakeholders to vet and take some ownership of policy recommendations. We'll consult the stakeholders separately, beginning with the list of groups in the proposal.

To replace those from advocacy organizations, we believe it would be preferable to add more members(from academia and the law, such as Pam Karlan, Guy-Uriel Charles, or Dan Lowenstein, whose CVs are summarized on the attachment. Finally, I will draft a mission statement for the PRG. Attached is a revised list of proposed PRG members, showing 2 slots to be filled by senior, former election officials.

Hope you have received the Gantt chart by now and that it fits your needs.

Ingrid Reed and I will attend the meeting in New York on Thursday and look forward to seeing you there.

Tom

Subject Peer Review Group

Karen,

As you probably recall, one of the features of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group to look over our findings, conclusions and draft reports before we prepare final drafts for the EAC's review. The EAC asked that before recruiting members of the PRG we submit names for EAC's review. The aim, course, is to assemble a panel that is experienced, informed, and balanced.

013454

Attached is a list of potential PRG members drawn from academia, the law, and non-profit organizations with interests in this area. Please look it over.

We may conclude that the PRG should also include two or three former government officials now in academia or related fields. We have a conference call with our partners at Moritz planned for tomorrow or Friday to decide a) if former officials should be included in the PRG and b) if so, who they should be. I'll keep you informed of our thinking as it develops.

Commissioners -

We have tentatively scheduled May 26 at 2:30 for a kickoff meeting here with Eagleton Institute. What will happen at this meeting is Eagleton will introduce their key people and make a brief presentation on their approach to performing the provisional voting and voter ID studies. It will be an opportunity to ask questions, raise any concerns, and/or provide guidance as they begin this work. Please advise if you wish to attend this meeting. I expect it will last about an hour.

Tim, Tom, John, et.al--

The EAC has identified three academics who are going to serve as peer reviewers of the Eagleton Voter ID paper and research.

They are Jonathan Nagler of New York University, Jan Leighley, University of Arizona, and Adam Berinsky of MIT.

They are ready to review the documents as soon as they are available.

I would like to them one week to review the material and then have a joint conference call on Thursday, May 11, in which we would all have an opportunity to discuss the research methodology and statistical analysis, along with general comments and suggestions.

If you are able to get to me the paper and the supporting data analysis, I will distribute to the documents ASAP.

Also let me know, if you would, your availability on May 11 to do this conference all.

I anticipate that it will last approximately 90 minutes.

Subject Rutgers Contract Close

Karen - I am writing to summarize our phone conversation initiated by me yesterday in response to receipt of Tom Wilkey's June 29th letter. To close out the contract, we will do the following:

1. Prepare separate monthly reports for April, May and June which each briefly summarize our activities under the contract during that month. These reports, which will not include financial information, will be sent to you by email no later than July 24th.

2. Submit a final invoice for the project no later than September 16th, which is 75 days from the close of the contract rather than the 30 days specified in the June 29th letter. I am attaching our previously-submitted "December 1, 2005 Request for a No-Cost Extension" which noted, at the bottom of page 1, the need for a 75-day closeout period.

3. In my January 13, 2006 letter regarding our No-Cost Extension through February 28th (also attached), I had indicated that we expected to have a closing balance of approximately $10,000. As we discussed yesterday, you appreciate that, with the subsequent No-Cost Extension through June 30th, we have spent the entire contract amount, and you expect us to submit invoices accordingly that will document our use of all remaining funds from the $560,002 contract award.

Please let me know if I have left out any remaining tasks or you have a different interpretation of them. I trust you have by now received all our final work products that were FedExed to you late last week.

Thanks,

John

EAGLETON INSTITUTE OF POLITICS

Request to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission for a No-Cost Extension and Reallocation of Funds

December 1, 2005

Why we need a no -cost extension

The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting based on our research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication. The draft was complete in August, but the EAC's schedule did not permit us to brief the commissioners and staff until early September. We did not receive EAC comments until October, making it impossible to complete the work on the original schedule. Taking account of those comments and guidance from EAC required several weeks. The EAC did not receive our final draft report and recommendations for best practices until late November. We are now awaiting the EAC's comments on that final draft, which we have been told to expect in January.

The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report on that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid January.

Because the EAC has decided to issue recommendations for best practices on these topics, rather than voluntary guidance, we will finish the work within two months of the original completion date since the adoption process will be shorter. Note that meeting this schedule is dependent on the time needed by the EAC to review our work.

This extension will entail additional personnel time but, since no public hearings on "best practices" are required, if the EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work.

When will work be completed and funds fully expended?

As shown on the attached schedule, work on this contract will be completed in three phases. The EAC will receive our final report and recommendations for best practices in provisional voting during the week of January 23, 2006 (assuming that we receive the EAC's comments on the draft report submitted on November 28 by January 9).

We will submit our draft report, alternative approaches, and compendium of statutes, regulations, and litigation on Voter Identification Issues during the week of January 16, 2006. If the EAC is able to return comments to us no later than the week of January 30, we will have submit the final report and recommendations for best practices on Voter Identification to the EAC during the week of February 13.

The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $300,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project.

January 13, 2006

Karen - I am attaching a spreadsheet providing the information you have requested (Attachment 1), but I want to highlight a few points which may not be immediately self-evident.

First, the original budget (Attachment 2) we submitted to the EAC, dated March 22nd, did not itemize personnel expenses by each person. In addition, when we actually began work two months after submitting that budget, we decided to reallocate more time to people within Eagleton and hire fewer outside hourly.

Second, in the figures I sent you in late December we tried to account for all the expenses and projections but overlooked a few things including neglecting to include the honoraria for our peer review team. Hence, the figures we're now sending are different than what I sent in December.

Lastly, we originally discussed a no-cost extension through February, but since we don't yet have the EAC comments on our draft Provisional Voting material nor an estimate of when they are likely to be ready, I think it is prudent to extend the no-cost extension through March 31st. We would still like to conclude by the end of February, but if you can approve the extension for another month we could avoid going through this process again if everything is not complete six weeks from now.

It is my understanding that Rutgers will soon be sending our December invoice. At this time, I would also like to request that we combine January and February an invoice the EAC once for that time period.

As you can see, we are currently projecting an ending balance of approximately $10,000. If additional expenses are incurred beyond what is currently projected, we're confident they will not exceed the original budget of $560,002.

Thanks and I look forward to hearing from you.

Subject Peer Review Group

Carol,

After our discussion in New York, you asked me to put in writing our response to the EAC's suggestions for expanding the number and kinds of groups that would review and comment on our work. I hope after your review of this response, we will be able to quickly recruit a balanced Peer Review Group (PRG) and move ahead as the schedule in our work plan indicates. Attached is a revised list of the members we propose for appointment to the PRG. We will probably not be able to persuade all of them to serve, but the number and range of views included on the proposed list should ensure that the resulting group is well-balanced.

Tom

RESPONSE TO EAC RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL REVIEW GROUPS

EAC's Recommendations for the PRG

Karen Lynn-Dyson reported this response from the EAC commissioners to our proposal for the composition of the PRG.

1. Not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG
2. Create a "tiered process" of review in which:
 - A. The PRG will prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions.
 - B. PRG's analysis would be vetted by a defined/select group of local election officials.
 - C. A defined/select group of advocacy organizations would review the 013472

comments of the local election officials

D. Empanel a final focus group of local election officials, advocates and academics for an overall, interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Project Team Response

Creating three new committees to the review process to supplement the work of the Peer Review Group (PRG) is possible, but would add at least 8 weeks –and possibly 12 weeks-- to our completion of the guidance document on provisional voting. We believe this delay would risk limiting the value of this project for the 2006 election. In addition, the change would add at least $30,000 to the cost of our work. (See the attached table showing the possible effect on our work plan, and note the optimistic assumptions such as the ability to hold a hearing the week after Christmas.). If the same groups were to be engaged in reviewing our work on Voter ID, the time for that work would also have to be stretched at a similar increased cost.

This additional cost and the added time might be worthwhile. . . if the new layers of review were to produce a consensus on how to strengthen the research, sharpen the analysis, and increase the relevance of the Guidance Document. Our team concluded, however, that additional review groups were unlikely to achieve these results.

PRG focuses on quality of research

We believe that our research would be strengthened by a balanced Peer Review Group that will focus on the design of the research and our conduct of it. Based on the EAC's recommendation, we have revised the composition of the PRG to include additional, well-recognized authorities in the field whose perspective is generally agreed to be conservative.

The PRG will focus on the strength of the research design and the quality of our analysis, not on the politics of our recommendations for the guidance document. The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Project Team focuses on analysis and recommendations

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions.” That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC’s Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC’s Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a “defined/select” group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the “defined/select” group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a “defined/select” group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC’s comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC’s comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. And further revision will follow the public hearing and comments. The EAC and individual Commissioners can always seek comment informally on our analysis or recommendations. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

PROPOSED MEMBERSJuly6.doc

REVISED
July 6, 2005

Role of the Peer Review Group

Members of the Peer Review Group will review the research design for the project, including the survey of local election officials, the analysis of Voter ID regime on turnout, the state-by-state narrative of developments in provisional voting and voter identification, and the compilation and analysis of statutes, administrative regulations, and case law affecting provisional voting and voter identification. They will also review the report on Analysis and Alternatives. They may review the draft of the Preliminary Guidance Document before it goes to the Board of Advisors for comment.

Members of the group will be respected authorities in their fields and represent a range of opinions and perspectives, although their views on policy will be less important to the study than their views on the quality of the research on which policy recommendations are based.

Ideally, the group would meet once, but even that may not be possible to arrange given the tight time period for the project, the demanding schedules of the members, and their wide dispersal across the county. They will function largely by reviewing written work and making written comments on it. The timing of their involvement is indicated on the work plan.

Hi-

Well, I've managed to secure one of the folks on your list- Jan Leighley. As you might imagine, she is very interested in the topic (voter id) and glad to help. Ben Highton is having a baby this week or next so is unavailable. I haven't heard back from the others whom I've called and left detailed messages.

I need to line up at least two others. Perhaps you would be willing to prod your colleagues (I see Nagler is a long- time colleague of yours). Alternatively, do you have a few other names you might offer?

My world has been one of economists and sociologists, not political scientists. So, I'm not able to line up the types of folks you were able to suggest. I think the list you gave me is outstanding, so I'd like folks of this caliber.

The plan is to do the review May 5- May 11 and to do a conference call with Eagleton (including the peer review folks) on or about Friday, May 12.

As always, Mike, I'm grateful for your advice and guidance.

I'm also willing to do a review for you myself. The issue is that I feel somewhat conflicted, given that I'm on their "peer review" panel. But on the other hand that does mean that I'm very well aware of the background of this project. I'd leave it up to you as to whether you think that a review from me would be appropriate or not.

EAC Advisory 2005-006: Provisional Voting and Identification Requirements

The U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) has recently received an inquiry regarding whether a state may impose an identification requirement that would limit a potential voter's access to a provisional ballot to which he or she is otherwise entitled under Section 302 of the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) (42 U.S.C. §15482). After consideration of the matter, EAC has concluded that Section 302 of HAVA creates a voter right. Specifically, the section creates the right for a potential voter to utilize a provisional ballot in the event their name does not appear on the registration list or the voter's eligibility is challenged by an election official. While States may create voter identification standards that exceed those laid out in HAVA and effect whether a provisional ballot is counted, States may not take action that limits a voter's right to receive and submit a provisional ballot. In explaining this position, this advisory reviews the plain language of HAVA Section 302, examines the differences between traditional and provisional ballots and analyzes the implementation of provisional voting under HAVA Section 303(b). This advisory also addresses the impact of a state's authority to create stricter standards than prescribed by HAVA upon HAVA's provisional voting requirements.¹

Plain Language of HAVA Section 302. The right to cast a provisional ballot is created in Section 302 of HAVA. Pursuant to HAVA, when an individual declares that he or she is a registered and eligible voter in a federal election, that individual "shall be permitted to cast a provisional ballot" if (1) their name does not appear on the official list of eligible voters or (2) "an election official asserts that the individual is not eligible to vote." (Section 302(a)). This right to receive a provisional ballot is contingent upon only one thing (per Section 302(a)(2)), the individual's execution of a written affirmation that he or she is both a registered and eligible voter for the election at issue.² See also, Sandusky County Democratic Party v. Blackwell, 387 F.3d 565, 574 (6th Cir. 2004). However, notwithstanding the above, HAVA goes on to recognize that the right to submit a provisional ballot constitutes neither a means to avoid State imposed voter eligibility requirements nor a vote. Instead, HAVA requires election officials at a polling place to transmit a provisional ballot (or information associated with the written affirmation) to appropriate election officials for verification. (Section 302(a)(4) of HAVA). These election officials ultimately determine the voter's eligibility based upon information presented to or gathered by it, in accordance with State law. In this way, the State determines whether any provisional ballot submitted will be counted as a vote. Id.

¹ The EAC is the Federal agency charged with the administration of HAVA. While the EAC does not have rulemaking authority in the area of provisional voting, HAVA does require the Commission to draft guidance to assist states in their implementation of HAVA's provisional voting requirements. Although EAC's administrative interpretations do not have the force of law associated with legislative rules, the Supreme Court has long held that the interpretations of agencies charged with the administration of a statute are to be given deferential treatment by Courts when faced with issues of statutory construction. York v. Secretary of Treasury, 774 F. 2d 417, 419 – 420 (10th Cir. 1985) (citing Compensation Commission of Alaska v. Aragon, 329 U.S. 143, 153 – 154 (1963)) See also Christian v. Harris County, 529 U.S. 576 (2000); Edelman v. Lynchburg College, 122 S. Ct. 1145 (2002).

In simplest terms, provisional voting represents the right of an individual (whose eligibility to vote has been challenged), to reserve their right to vote and postpone the voter eligibility determination to a time when more perfect or complete information may be provided. See Sandusky County Democratic Party, 387 F.3d at 570 and Florida Democratic Party v. Hood, 342 F.Supp 1073, 1079-1080 (N.D. Fla. 2004). A provisional ballot does not represent a different way to vote, nor does it serve as a bypass to State laws governing voter eligibility. Rather, it is designed to prevent an individual from losing his or her right to vote due to the fact that a poll worker did not have all the information available or needed to accurately assess voter eligibility. Thus, based upon the plain language of Section 302(a) of HAVA, a challenge to an individual's eligibility to vote (such as a challenge based upon identification requirements) cannot serve as a bar to the receipt of a provisional ballot, because it is the election official's challenge that triggers the provisional ballot procedure in the first place. To hold otherwise would defeat the purpose of provisional voting. In the end, to understand this concept one must understand the differences between traditional and provisional ballots.

Traditional vs. Provisional Ballots. The nature and procedures associated with a provisional ballot are wholly distinct from those of a traditional ballot. Because of this fact, the two processes must be treated differently. While voter identification requirements may serve as a bar to the casting of a traditional ballot, they may not prevent the submission of a provisional ballot.

First, the nature and purpose of traditional and provisional ballots are essentially different. The purpose of a traditional ballot is to allow a confirmed, eligible voter to cast a vote. The purpose of a provisional ballot is to allow individuals whose voter eligibility is challenged to reserve the right to vote by memorializing both their intent to vote and their proposed vote. This is evident by the HAVA processes discussed above. The bottom line is that the casting of a proper, traditional ballot constitutes a vote, while the casting or submission of a provisional ballot does not. A traditional ballot is cast only after voter eligibility has been determined by the State. Hence, the moment it is cast, it becomes an individual's vote. On the other hand, the submission or casting of a provisional ballot is not a vote. Rather, it is a claim that the potential voter who submitted it has the right to vote and reserves that right. As the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals stated:

[T]he primary purpose of HAVA was to prevent on-the-spot denials of provisional ballots to voters deemed ineligible to vote by poll workers. Under HAVA, the only permissible requirement that may be imposed upon a would-be voter before permitting that voter to cast a provisional ballot is the affirmation contained in [42 U.S.C.] §15482(a): that the voter is a registered voter in the jurisdiction in which he or she desires to vote, and that the voter is eligible to vote in an election for federal office. Sandusky County Democratic Party, 387 F.3d at 574.

This goes to the very heart of provisional voting. If provisional voting is a right triggered by an election official's determination that an individual has not met a voter eligibility requirement, how can such a requirement also serve as a bar to that right? The concept of provisional voting works only if the right is always available when the application of voter eligibility requirements is in question.

Second, consistent with the differences in purpose between traditional and provisional ballots, the other major distinction between the two lies in the application of voter eligibility requirements. This difference is primarily one of procedural timing. States have the right to create voter eligibility requirements and these requirements must be applied to both traditional and provisional ballots. In casting a traditional ballot, one must meet all eligibility requirements prior to receiving the ballot. However, in the provisional process, the potential voter has already failed to meet these preliminary requirements and the application of State law must occur after the ballot has been received. State voter eligibility requirements should be applied after the provisional ballot and/or supporting affirmation has been transmitted pursuant to Section 302(a)(3) of HAVA. Provisional ballots are counted as votes only after election officials have determined that the individual can meet voter eligibility standards consistent with state law. Again, the purpose of the process is to allow election officials more time, so that they may have more perfect information when making a decision about voter eligibility. Provisional ballots are subject to the full effect of State law regarding the eligibility to vote and the opportunity the law provides provisional voters to supply additional information. Provisional ballots do not escape state or federal voter eligibility requirements, those provisional ballots that do not meet State standards will not be counted.

Provisional Voting Under HAVA Section 303(b). Congress provided an example of how provisional voting works by applying the right to a specific circumstance. Section 303(b)(2)(B) of HAVA, entitled Fail-Safe Voting, provides that when a first-time voter who registered by mail is required by HAVA Section 303(b) to show identification, that person must be given a provisional ballot if he or she fails to provide such identification at the polling place. This section is important as it clarifies Congressional intent regarding how provisional voting should function.

The Fail-Safe Voting provision of Section 303(b)(2)(B) grants clear insight into how provisional voting should be implemented. While Section 303(b) deals with a specific subset of voters (first-time voters who registered by mail), its application of Section 302(a) supports the concept that a provisional ballot must be given to a voter who is determined (at the polling place) not to meet voter identification requirements. A review of the section shows that in the one area where HAVA set a Federal voter identification requirement Congress made clear that an individual's failure to meet this eligibility requirement triggered the statute's provisional voting section. Congress saw no difference between an individual's failure to meet the voter identification requirements it issued in Section 303(b) and the failure to meet eligibility requirements which trigger provisional voting under Section 302. Section 303(b) makes it clear that Congress did not intend voter identification requirements to limit access to provisional voting. Instead, Congress viewed provisional voting as a right, or more specifically, as a fail-safe. The EAC strongly believes that HAVA provisions must be interpreted to bring about consistent and evenly applied results. In this case, if individuals who fail to meet Federal identification standards have the right to a provisional ballot, so must individuals who fail to meet similar State standards.

Stricter Eligibility Standards and Provisional Voting. HAVA specifically provides that States may create stricter voter eligibility standards than provided in HAVA.³ Arizona's "Proposition 200" identification requirements are a prime example of this authority. However, the HAVA authority to create stricter eligibility standards does not grant the state authority to create standards that bar access to a provisional ballot. To interpret HAVA otherwise (i.e. allowing stricter state identification standards to bar access to provisional ballots) would render HAVA's provisional voting mandate (Section 302) void and meaningless. HAVA cannot be read to grant both (1) the right to a provisional ballot if an individual's voting eligibility is challenged by a State and, (2) the right of that State to deny an individual a provisional ballot if they do not meet voter eligibility standards. These concepts are mutually exclusive. HAVA cannot be interpreted to allow a State to create voter eligibility standards that bar the Section 302 right to cast a provisional ballot without nullifying the effect and intent of that provision. Any such interpretation of HAVA would run afoul of both HAVA Section 304 and longstanding principles of statutory construction.

First, HAVA notes in Section 304 that while States may create standards that are stricter than those established under HAVA, this authority is limited to the extent "such State requirements are not inconsistent with the Federal requirements under [HAVA]." Clearly, provisional voting is a requirement under HAVA. Section 302(a) notes that qualified individuals "shall be permitted to cast a provisional ballot." (Emphasis added). In this way, States may not create standards that are inconsistent or interfere with the provisional voting mandate.

Furthermore, long established principles of statutory construction further prohibit an interpretation of HAVA that would render any of its provisions meaningless. It is "'a cardinal principle of statutory construction' that 'a statute ought, upon the whole, to be so construed that, if it can be prevented, no clause, sentence, or word shall be superfluous, void, or insignificant.'" TRW Inc. v. Andrews, 534 U.S. 19, 31, 122 S.Ct. 441, 151 L.Ed.2d 339 (2001), (quoting Duncan v. Walker, 533 U.S. 167, 174, 121 S.Ct. 2120, 150 L.Ed.2d 251 (2001)).

A Stricter Provisional Voting Standard. As discussed above, States' have the right to impose stricter requirements than those laid out in HAVA. The EAC has already made it clear, above, that a stricter voter eligibility requirement cannot be read to bar an individual's right to a provisional ballot. However, could a stricter requirement regarding provisional voting serve to limit access to such ballots? No. A stricter State requirement for provisional voting would be a standard that enhances a person's access to a provisional ballot. As the Sixth Circuit noted, "HAVA is quintessentially about being able to cast a provisional ballot." Sandusky County Democratic Party, 387 F.3d at 576. "HAVA's requirements 'are minimum requirements' permitting deviation from its provisions provided that such deviation is 'more strict than the requirements established under' HAVA (in terms of encouraging provisional voting)...." Id., (quoting 42 U.S.C. §15484, emphasis added). Thus, in terms of provisional voting, a stricter standard is one that serves to further encourage provisional voting. When passing laws affecting provisional voting, States must ensure that their provisions are consistent with HAVA or otherwise serve to further an individual's access to a provisional ballot. EAC concludes that any policy asserting that States may pass laws limiting access to provisional ballots conflicts with HAVA.

Conclusion. A state may not impose an identification requirement that would limit a potential voter's access to and submission of a provisional ballot. However, such requirements (when coupled with a state's provisional ballot procedures) may prevent a provisional ballot from being counted.

On September 13, 2005 the U.S. Election Assistance Commission issued an advisory (2005-006) and, after consideration of the matter, EAC concluded that Section 302 of HAVA creates a voter right. Specifically, the section creates the right for a potential voter to utilize a provisional ballot in the event his or her name does not appear on the registration list or the voter's eligibility is challenged by an election official. While States may create voter identification standards that exceed those laid out in HAVA and effect whether a provisional ballot is counted, States may not take action that limits a voter's right to receive and submit a provisional ballot.

The right to cast a provisional ballot is created in Section 302 of HAVA. Pursuant to HAVA, when an individual declares that he or she is a registered and eligible voter in a federal election, that individual "shall be permitted to cast a provisional ballot" if (1) their name does not appear on the official list of eligible voters or (2) "an election official asserts that the individual is not eligible to vote." (Section 302(a)). This right to receive a provisional ballot is contingent upon only one thing (per Section 302(a)(2)), the individual's execution of a written affirmation that he or she is both a registered and eligible voter for the election at issue.¹

In simplest terms, provisional voting represents the right of an individual (whose eligibility to vote has been challenged), to reserve his or her right to vote and postpone the voter eligibility determination to a time when more perfect or complete information may be provided. A provisional ballot does not represent a different way to vote, nor does it serve as a bypass to State laws governing voter eligibility. Rather, it is designed to prevent an individual from losing his or her right to vote due to the fact that a poll worker did not have all the information available or needed to accurately assess voter eligibility. Thus, based upon the plain language of Section 302(a) of HAVA, a challenge to an individual's eligibility to vote (such as a challenge based upon identification requirements) cannot serve as a bar to the receipt of a provisional ballot, because it is the election official's challenge that triggers the provisional ballot procedure in the first place. To hold otherwise would defeat the purpose of provisional voting. In the end, to understand this concept one must understand the differences between traditional and provisional ballots.

A traditional ballot is cast only after voter eligibility has been determined by the State. Hence, the moment it is cast, it becomes an individual's vote. On the other hand, the submission or casting of a provisional ballot is not a vote. Rather, it is a claim that the potential voter who submitted it has the right to vote and reserves that right.

This goes to the very heart of provisional voting. If provisional voting is a right triggered by an election official's determination that an individual has not met a voter eligibility requirement, how can such a requirement also serve as a bar to that right? The concept of provisional voting works only if the right is always available when the application of voter eligibility requirements is in question.

Section 303(b)(2)(B) of HAVA, entitled Fail-Safe Voting, provides that when a first-time voter who registered by mail is required by HAVA Section 303(b) to show identification, that person must be given a provisional ballot if he or she fails to provide such identification at the polling place. This section is important as it clarifies Congressional intent regarding how provisional voting should function.

The Fail-Safe Voting provision of Section 303(b)(2)(B) grants clear insight into how provisional voting should be implemented. While Section 303(b) deals with a specific subset of voters (first-time voters who registered by mail), its application of Section 302(a) supports the concept that a provisional ballot must be given to a voter who is determined (at the polling place) not to meet voter identification requirements. Congress saw no difference between an individual's failure to meet the voter identification requirements it issued in Section 303(b) and the failure to meet eligibility requirements which trigger provisional voting under Section 302. Section 303(b) makes it clear that Congress did not intend voter identification requirements to limit access to provisional voting. Instead, Congress viewed provisional voting as a right, or more specifically, as a fail-safe. The EAC strongly believes that HAVA provisions must be interpreted to bring about consistent and evenly applied results. In this case, if individuals who fail to meet Federal identification standards have the right to a provisional ballot, so must individuals who fail to meet similar State standards.

HAVA notes in Section 304 that while States may create standards that are stricter than those established under HAVA, this authority is limited to the extent "such State requirements are not inconsistent with the Federal requirements under [HAVA]." Clearly, provisional voting is a requirement under HAVA. Section 302(a) notes that qualified individuals "shall be permitted to cast a provisional ballot." (Emphasis added). In this way, States may not create standards that are inconsistent or interfere with the provisional voting mandate.

States' have the right to impose stricter requirements than those laid out in HAVA. The EAC has made it clear, that a stricter voter eligibility requirement cannot be read to bar an individual's right to a provisional ballot. However, could a stricter requirement regarding provisional voting serve to limit access to such ballots? No. A stricter State requirement for provisional voting would be a standard that enhances a person's access to a provisional ballot. A state may not impose an identification requirement that would limit a potential voter's access to and submission of a provisional ballot. However, such requirements (when coupled with a state's provisional ballot procedures) may prevent a provisional ballot from being counted.

OVERVIEW OF RECOMMENDATIONS FOR SUCCESSFUL PRACTICES

The wide variation in the implementation of provisional voting among and particularly within states suggests that EAC can help states strengthen their processes. Research-based recommendations for best, or at least better, practices based on the experience gained in the 2004 election can be useful in states' efforts to achieve greater consistency in the administration of provisional voting.

Self-evaluation of Provisional Voting -4 Key Questions

The first step to achieving greater consistency within each state is to think about provisional voting systematically. As legislators, election officials, and citizens in the states prepare for the 2006 election, they should ask themselves these questions about their provisional voting systems.

1. Does the provisional voting system distribute, collect, record, and tally provisional ballots with sufficient accuracy to be seen as procedurally legitimate by both supporters and opponents of the winning candidate? Does the tally include all votes cast by properly registered voters who correctly completed the steps required?
2. Is the provisional voting system sufficiently robust to perform well under the pressure of a close election when ballot evaluation will be under scrutiny and litigation looms?
3. Do the procedural requirements of the system permit cost-efficient operation? Are the administrative demands of the system reasonably related to the staff and other resource requirements available?
4. How great is the variation in the use of provisional voting in counties or equivalent levels of voting jurisdiction within the state? Is the variation great enough to cause concern that the system may not be administered uniformly across the state?

If the answers to these questions leave room for doubt about the effectiveness of the system or some of its parts, the EAC's recommendation of sound practices should provide the starting point for a state's effort to improve its provisional voting system.

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS FOR Sound PRACTICES

State efforts to improve the provisional voting process have been underway since the 2004 election. By recommending best practices, the EAC will offer informed advice while respecting diversity among the states.

Take a Quality-improvement approach

Defining what constitutes a successful provisional voting system is difficult. Defining quality requires a broad perspective about how well the system works, how open it is to error recognition and correction, and how well provisional voting processes are connected to the registration and voter identification regimes. A first step is for states to recognize that improving quality begins with seeing the provisional voting process as a system and taking a systems approach to regular evaluation through standardized metrics with explicit goals for performance. EAC can facilitate action by the states by recommending as a best practice that:

- Each state collect data systematically on the provisional voting process to permit evaluation of its voting system and assess changes from one election to the next. The data collected should include: provisional votes cast and counted by county; reasons why provisional ballots were not counted, measures of variance among jurisdictions, and time required to evaluate ballots by jurisdiction

Emphasize the importance of clarity

Above all else, the EAC should emphasize the importance of clarity in the rules by which each state governs provisional voting. As state legislators and election officials prepare for the 2006 election, answers to the questions listed in the recommendations section of this report could be helpful. Among those questions are:

ional voting system distribute, collect, record, and tally provisional efficient accuracy to be seen as procedurally legitimate by both supporters of the winning candidate?
ral requirements of the system permit cost-efficient operation?

than one precinct, a voter's provisional ballot should count so long as the voter cast that ballot at the correct polling site even if at the wrong precinct within that location. While the best practice might be for poll workers to direct the voter to correct precinct poll workers' advice is not always correct, and the voter should be protected against ministerial error.

- Officials should follow a written procedure, and perhaps a checklist, to identify the reason why a provisional ballot is rejected. Colorado's election rules offer particularly clear guidance to the official evaluating a provisional ballot.

In verifying provisional ballots, the time by which election officials must make their eligibility determinations is particularly important in presidential elections because of the need to certify electors to the Electoral College. Our research did not identify an optimum division of the five weeks available.

- The best practice here is for states to consider the issue and make a careful decision about how to complete all steps in the evaluation of ballots and challenges to those determinations within the five weeks available.

After the election, timely information to voters about the disposition of their provisional ballot can enable voters to determine if they are registered for future elections and, if not, what they need to do to become registered.

- Best practice for the states is to establish mechanisms to ensure that voters casting provisional ballots are informed whether they are now registered for future elections and, if not, what they need to do to become registered.

Final observation

The detailed examination of each stage in the provisional voting process can lay the foundation each state needs to improve its system. Efforts to improve provisional voting may be most effective as part of a broader effort by state and local election officials to strengthen their systems. Collecting and analyzing data about those systems will enable states to identify which aspects of the registration and electoral system are most important in shunting voters into the provisional ballot process. Responsible officials can then look to their registration system, identification requirements or poll worker training as ways to reduce the need for voters to cast their ballots provisionally.

Best Practices For Each Step In The Process

We examined each step of the provisional voting process to identify specific areas where the states should focus their attention to reduce the inconsistencies noted in our analysis. We offer recommendations in each area appropriate to the responsibilities that HAVA assigns the EAC for the proper functioning of the provisional voting process.

The Importance of Clarity

The EAC should emphasize above all else the importance of clarity in the rules governing every stage of provisional voting. As the Century Foundation's recent report observed, "Close elections increasingly may be settled in part by the evaluating and counting of provisional ballots ... To avoid post election disputes over provisional ballots--disputes that will diminish public confidence in the accuracy and legitimacy of the result-- well in advance of the election, states should establish, announce, and publicize clear statewide standards for every aspect of the provisional ballot process, from who is entitled to receive a provisional ballot to which ones are counted."²⁶

Litigation surrounding the 2004 election resulted in decisions that, if reflected in state statutes or regulations and disseminated in effective training for poll workers, can increase the clarity of provisional ballot procedures, increase predictability, and bolster confidence in the system. By taking the following steps, states can incorporate those court rulings into their procedures.

- Promulgate, ideally by legislation, clear standards for evaluating provisional ballots, and provide training for the officials who will apply those standards. For example, in Washington State, the court determined that an election official's failure in evaluating ballots to do a complete check against all signature records is an error serious enough to warrant re-canvassing.²⁷ Clear direction by regulation or statute on what records to use in evaluating ballots could have saved precious time and effort and increased the reliability of the provisional voting system.
- States should provide standard information resources for the training of poll workers by local jurisdictions. Training materials might include, for example, maps or databases with instruction on how to locate polling places for potential voters who show up at the wrong place. Usable and useful information in the hands of poll workers can protect voters from being penalized by ministerial errors at the polling place.²⁸
- State training materials provided to local jurisdictions should make clear that the only permissible requirement to obtain a provisional ballot is an affirmation that the voter is registered in the jurisdiction and eligible to vote in an election for federal office. ²⁹ Recent legislation in Arizona indicates that recommendations should emphasize HAVA's requirement that persons appearing at the polling place claiming to be registered voters cannot be denied a ballot because they do not have identification with them. While rejecting the notion that all ballots cast in the wrong precinct should be counted, the court ruled that provisional votes cast in the wrong precinct should be thrown out provided that the voter had been directed to the correct precinct. This meant that provisional votes cast in the wrong precinct (and even the wrong polling place) would count if there were no evidence that the voter had been directed to a different polling place. The court placed a duty upon election officials to make sure the voters were in the correct locations. Note that this question would not arise in a state that counted ballots cast in the wrong polling place but within the correct county.

U.S. Election Assistance Commission
1225 New York Ave. – Suite 1100
Washington, DC 20005

On September 13, 2005 the U.S. Election Assistance Commission issued an advisory (2005-006) and, after consideration of the matter EAC concluded that Section 302 of HAVA creates a voter right. Specifically, the section creates the right for a potential voter to utilize a provisional ballot in the event his or her name does not appear on the registration list or the voter's eligibility is challenged by an election official. While States may create voter identification standards that exceed those laid out in HAVA and effect whether a provisional ballot is counted, States may not take action that limits a voter's right to receive and submit a provisional ballot.

The right to cast a provisional ballot is created in Section 302 of HAVA. Pursuant to HAVA, when an individual declares that he or she is a registered and eligible voter in a federal election, that individual "shall be permitted to cast a provisional ballot" if (1) their name does not appear on the official list of eligible voters or (2) "an election official asserts that the individual is not eligible to vote." (Section 302(a)). This right to receive a provisional ballot is contingent upon only one thing (per Section 302(a)(2)), the individual's execution of a written affirmation that he or she is both a registered and eligible voter for the election at issue.¹

In simplest terms, provisional voting represents the right of an individual (whose eligibility to vote has been challenged), to reserve their right to vote and postpone the voter eligibility determination to a time when more perfect or complete information may be provided. A provisional ballot does not represent a different way to vote, nor does it serve as a bypass to State laws governing voter eligibility. Rather, it is designed to prevent an individual from losing his or her right to vote due to the fact that a poll worker did not have all the information available or needed to accurately assess voter eligibility. Thus, based upon the plain language of Section 302(a) of HAVA, a challenge to an individual's eligibility to vote (such as a challenge based upon identification requirements) cannot serve as a bar to the receipt of a provisional ballot, because it is the election official's challenge that triggers the provisional ballot procedure in the first place. To hold otherwise would defeat the purpose of provisional voting. In the end, to understand this concept one must understand the differences between traditional and provisional ballots.

The nature and procedures associated with a provisional ballot are wholly distinct from those of a traditional ballot. Because of this fact, the two processes must be treated differently. While voter identification requirements may serve as a bar to the casting of a traditional ballot, they may not prevent the submission of a provisional ballot.

First, the nature and purpose of traditional and provisional ballots are essentially different. The purpose of a traditional ballot is to allow a confirmed, eligible voter to cast a vote. The purpose of a provisional ballot is to allow individuals whose voter eligibility is challenged to reserve the right to vote by memorializing both their intent to vote and their proposed vote. This is evident by the HAVA processes discussed above. The bottom line is that the casting of a proper, traditional ballot constitutes a vote, while the casting or submission of a provisional ballot does not. A traditional ballot is cast only after voter eligibility has been determined by the State. Hence, the moment it is cast, it becomes an individual's vote. On the other hand, the submission or casting of a provisional ballot is not a vote. Rather, it is a claim that the potential voter who submitted it has the right to vote and reserves that right.

This goes to the very heart of provisional voting. If provisional voting is a right triggered by an election official's determination that an individual has not met a voter eligibility requirement, how can such a requirement also serve as a bar to that right? The concept of provisional voting works only if the right is always available when the application of voter eligibility requirements is in question.

Section 303(b)(2)(B) of HAVA, entitled Fail-Safe Voting, provides that when a first-time voter who registered by mail is required by HAVA Section 303(b) to show identification, that person must be given a provisional ballot if he or she fails to provide such identification at the polling place. This section is important as it clarifies Congressional intent regarding how provisional voting should function.

The Fail-Safe Voting provision of Section 303(b)(2)(B) grants clear insight into how provisional voting should be implemented. While Section 303(b) deals with a specific subset of voters (first-time voters who registered by mail), its application of Section 302(a) supports the concept that a provisional ballot must be given to a voter who is determined (at the polling place) not to meet voter identification requirements. Congress saw no difference between an individual's failure to meet the voter identification requirements it issued in Section 303(b) and the failure to meet eligibility requirements which trigger provisional voting under Section 302. Section 303(b) makes it clear that Congress did not intend voter identification requirements to limit access to provisional voting. Instead, Congress viewed provisional voting as a right, or more specifically, as a fail-safe. The EAC strongly believes that HAVA provisions must be interpreted to bring about consistent and evenly applied results. In this case, if individuals who fail to meet Federal identification standards have the right to a provisional ballot, so must individuals who fail to meet similar State standards.

First, HAVA notes in Section 304 that while States may create standards that are stricter than those established under HAVA, this authority is limited to the extent "such State requirements are not inconsistent with the Federal requirements under [HAVA]." Clearly, provisional voting is a requirement under HAVA. Section 302(a) notes that qualified individuals "shall be permitted to cast a provisional ballot." (Emphasis added). In this way, States may not create standards that are inconsistent or interfere with the provisional voting mandate.

States' have the right to impose stricter requirements than those laid out in HAVA. The EAC has already made it clear, above, that a stricter voter eligibility requirement cannot be read to bar an individual's right to a provisional ballot. However, could a stricter requirement regarding provisional voting serve to limit access to such ballots? No. A stricter State requirement for provisional voting would be a standard that enhances a person's access to a provisional ballot. A state may not impose an identification requirement that would limit a potential voter's access to and submission of a provisional ballot. However, such requirements (when coupled with a state's provisional ballot procedures) may prevent a provisional ballot from being counted.

Subject No Cost Extension Request

History:

☞ This message has been replied to and forwarded.

Karen - I am attaching a spreadsheet providing the information you have requested (Attachment 1), but I want to highlight a few points which may not be immediately self-evident.

First, the original budget (Attachment 2) we submitted to the EAC, dated March 22nd, did not itemize personnel expenses by each person. In addition, when we actually began work two months after submitting that budget, we decided to reallocate more time to people within Eagleton and hire fewer outside hourlies.

Second, in the figures I sent you in late December we tried to account for all the expenses and projections but overlooked a few things including neglecting to include the honoraria for our peer review team. Hence, the figures we're now sending are different than what I sent in December.

Lastly, we originally discussed a no-cost extension through February, but since we don't yet have the EAC comments on our draft Provisional Voting material nor an estimate of when they are likely to be ready, I think it is prudent to extend the no-cost extension through March 31st. We would still like to conclude by the end of February, but if you can approve the extension for another month we could avoid going through this process again if everything is not complete six weeks from now.

It is my understanding that Rutgers will soon be sending our December invoice. At this time, I would also like to request that we combine January and February an invoice the EAC once for that time period.

As you can see, we are currently projecting an ending balance of approximately $10,000. If additional expenses are incurred beyond what is currently projected, we're confident they will not exceed the original budget of $560,002.

Thanks and I look forward to hearing from you.

Karen - At this time, we anticipate reallocating funds primarily from the public hearings line item and spending approximately $35,500 more than originally budgeted on personnel, $23,250 more on the subcontract with Ohio State and $20,250 more on consultants. There are other additional variances but they are not significant (e.g. less on honoraria, less on travel, and more on general operations such as phone expenses). Let me know if you need additional detail or information.

Thanks, John

for the Eagleton Institute

Karen,

Allow me to provide you some guidance (i am just that kind of guy).

First, go to FAR Part 43 (it is short and provides you an outline of the process. Given the lack of FAR clauses in the original contract, you will want to perform a bilateral modification (must be agreed to and signed by both parties). This is the most conservative way to proceed. You can find the FAR on-line.

You will use Standard Form 30 (you will find it in the FAR). I have a hard copy with some notes on it that I will provide you. It will have to be signed by both parties. The CO will have to sign for the EAC (chair?)

The form will require you to describe the modification. There are instructions to guide you.

I also recommend a memo for record signed by you and the chair (I concur). Memorializing some facts and findings. The memo should address:

- background regarding the action, a description of the action and authority (FAR 43.103 (a)(3)).
- Clearly identify the benefit this action provides the government.
- Notes/explains (presumably) that this action is within the scope of the original agreement.
- State (presumably) that there is no cost for the modification.
- recommend modification
- place document in file.

Subject Process to be followed to request a no-cost extension-- for the Eagleton Institute

Folks-

I'm not certain what process must be followed in order for a contractor to request a no-cost extension.

Eagleton Institute is requesting one to extend their contract beyond the December 31 deadline. It's my understanding that EAC did one for the National Academy of Sciences, although I wasn't a part of that process and therefore not aware of how that one was handled.

Tom-

EAC contract staff indicate that the reallocation you propose can occur and that all other such reallocations that are made from your project budget for this contract budget can be done at your own discretion.

From a contractual standpoint, EAC's only concern is that Eagleton is able to accomplish all of the activities and provide all of the deliverables that have been set forth in your contract.

Subject Request for reallocation within existing budget

History: This message has been replied to.

Karen:

As we discussed on Tuesday morning in the teleconference, we would like to reallocate within the current budget $9,500 to the survey of local election officials. This will raise the budget for the survey to $24,500 from $15,000.

The additional funding will permit us to double the sample of local election officials from 200 to 400. The larger sample will allow more detailed comparisons between the experience of local election officials in states that offered some form of provisional ballot before HAVA and those that did not. This comparison is a topic of special interest identified in the contract.

The increase of $9,500 is based on an estimate made by SRBI, the contractor that will actually administer the interviews. I can furnish you with a copy of the estimate if you like. We believe the additional funds will improve significantly our ability to provide relevant analysis to EAC on this important issue.

Commissioner,

Per your question about how much of the contract was actually spent on voter ID research vs provisional voting... I have yet to find the answer. I have reviewed the RFP and the invoices, but so far, it does not appear that these tasks were tracked separately. Karen and I continue to look into this, but I wanted to let you know what we've found so far.

OFFICE OF THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

June 15, 2006

Mr. John Weingart, Associate Director
Eagleton Institute of Politics
Rutgers University
191 Ryders Lane
New Brunswick NJ 08901-8557

Dear Mr. Weingart:

During a recent briefing by staff, the EAC discussed and reviewed possible next steps with the provisional voting and voter identification studies as well as the Eagleton contract which is scheduled to conclude on June 30, 2006.

We were in agreement that Eagleton's work on the EAC contract should conclude, as scheduled, by June 30, 2006. In preparation for this conclusion, the EAC requests that the comments and suggestions which were noted during the EAC's recent Board of Advisors and Standards Boards meeting (and were described in Mr. O'Neil's June 8, 2006 letter to Chairman DeGregorio) be included in the final draft report on provisional voting which Eagleton will deliver to the EAC on or about June 30, 2006. The Commissioners have determined that they will take this final draft report and, from it, may develop guidance and best practice recommendations that will be presented to the Board of Advisors and Standards Boards for further review.

The EAC Commissioners have also reviewed and considered next steps with the voter identification draft report which Eagleton has prepared. While the final disposition of the results and findings of this study, on the part of the EAC, are still unclear, the Commissioners have asked that the final draft report of this study also be prepared and submitted to the EAC not later than June 30, 2006.

We look forward to receiving these reports. On behalf of the EAC thank you for the considerable time and energy which the Eagleton/Moritz team has devoted to these critical election issues.

Sincerely,

Thomas R. Wilkey

Subject No-Cost Extension Request

History:

✉ This message has been replied to and forwarded.

Karen - We are requesting a no-cost extension on the EAC contract to the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University to have the contract's concluding date move from March 31, 2006 to June 30, 2006. As I indicated earlier, it would be very helpful if we could receive approval of this request no later than April 28th.

This extension is necessary to enable the following activities:

1. The EAC has informed us that it will assemble a panel of researchers the week of May 8th to review the Eagleton/Moritz draft background report on Voter Identification. The EAC wishes to supplement the review of this draft already conducted by the Peer Review Group called for in the contract. The Eagleton/Moritz research team, as well as at least some of the Peer Review Group will participate in the conference call or meeting of the EAC's reviewers;
2. Eagleton/Moritz will revise the draft Voter Identification report based upon comments made by the two sets of reviewers, and distribute the revised report to the EAC and its Advisory Board in mid-May.
3. Eagleton/Moritz will present its draft reports on Provisional Voting and Voter Identification to the EAC Advisory Board at its May 25th meeting in Washington, D.C.;
4. Eagleton/Moritz will revise both draft reports to take into account comments made by the EAC Advisory Board, and submit printed final reports to the EAC before June 23rd. Eagleton/Moritz will also prepare a PowerPoint presentation for both reports.
5. Eagleton/Moritz will present both reports at the EAC public meeting in Washington, D.C. on June 23rd, thus concluding its work under this contract.

Please let me know if you need any additional information.

Thanks,

John

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

On May 24, 2005 the U.S. Election Assistance Commission awarded an eight month contract (December 30, 2005) in the amount of $560,002.00 to the Eagleton Institute of Politics (Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey) to provide research assistance to support development of guidelines on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification procedures.

On November 15, 2005, John Weingart, Associate Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics, requested via e-mail, a no-cost extension on this contract (E4014127). Mr. Weingart has requested an extension to complete the work of this contract to February 28, 2006.

In subsequent correspondence, Mr. Weingart notes the following as the reason for the request:

“The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October, voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting, based on Eagleton’s research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication.... The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report of that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid-January”.

He further notes:

“If EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work....

“The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $300,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project”.

Karen Lynn-Dyson, the EAC's Contracting Officer Representative assigned to this contract has reviewed this request, the rationale and authority for it (FAR 43.103(a)(3)) and finds it to be appropriate. To-date the Eagleton Institute has consistently met its deadlines for major project deliverables and stayed within the project budget. To grant the Eagleton Institute a two month extension on this contract in order to obtain the necessary feedback on major documents it has produced will be within the best interests of the Election Assistance Commission, and thus, the federal government.

EAC's Contracting Officer Representative finds that to grant the Eagleton Institute a no-cost extension for the modification of its contract with the EAC is within the scope of the original agreement and is recommending that this modification to the contract be made.

Karen,

I am assuming that there original proposal included an estimate for public hearing proposals and that they want to shift money from this expense to labor.

Thus I am assuming that you have determined that there will be no public hearing and therefore this shift is appropriate.

Are these assumption correct? Perhaps a quick explanation regarding this processes would be helpful.

Karen - At this time, we anticipate reallocating funds primarily from the public hearings line item and spending approximately $35,500 more than originally budgeted on personnel, $23,250 more on the subcontract with Ohio State and $20,250 more on consultants. There are other additional variances but they are not significant (e.g. less on honoraria, less on travel, and more on general operations such as phone expenses). John-

I just had a more detailed conversation with our Deputy General Counsel about Eagleton's no-cost extension.

He indicates that we need a bit more information that will accompany the material we will send to the Commissioners for a vote (hopefully next week)

We need to know the number of labor hours, the labor costs and a brief description of the tasks to be performed by each of the staff who will be working on the EAC contract until its completion.

Since we have eliminated the public hearing (a major contract deliverable) it is unclear why staff labor hours and costs will continue at the same level and rate.

As always, thanks for your patience and prompt response.

Subject Re: No Cost Extension Request

Karen - Our request for a no-cost, reallocation of resources is based on (a) the fact that our personnel costs have already been higher than we anticipated and (b) the reality that keeping the project operating for at least nine months, instead of seven as planned, will require the participants to devote more time than anticipated. While we are not producing more product than originally promised, the time involved in our work continues to increase. Both Provisional Voting and Voter ID have proved to be very dynamic topics requiring us to continually monitor developments and update our data, analysis and evolving work products as we learn of new or revised information. As a result, despite the extension of the schedule, the staff and consultants on this project have had no "down" time. We anticipate this research, monitoring and revising to continue for the months added to the project, necessitating significantly more hours by all members of the project team than anticipated.

Our request asks for changes to three line items which I will address below on the assumption that the EAC response to our already-submitted Provisional Voting draft and to-be-submitted Voter ID draft will be sufficiently timely to enable us to complete our work on both topics by the end of February.

1. Eagleton Institute of Politics personnel: We originally budgeted $110,695 ($15,813 average per month) for Eagleton faculty, staff and graduate student assistants for the seven-month project from May 24,

2005-December 31, 2005. Our actual costs have been approximately $14,500 more than that. In addition, we are anticipating needing another $21,000 for personnel costs in January and February, calculated on the basis of 2/3 of the original monthly estimate. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $110,695 to approximately $146,000.

2. Consultant Services: We originally budgeted $79,50 ($11,357 average per month) for consultant services which we have used to engage Tom O'Neill as the project manager. We anticipate no additional cost for the original contract period of May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005, but do anticipate needing his services during January and February at a slightly reduced rate of $10,125 per month or $20,250 total additional. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $79,500 to $99,750.

3. Moritz School of Law: We originally budgeted $84,744 ($12,106 average per month) for staff and overhead for the May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005 period. We anticipate needing an additional $23,171 ($11,585 average per month) to support their time on this project in January and February. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $84,744 to $107,915.

With these revisions, approximately $22,000 of the EAC contract award to Eagleton would remain not yet allocated, primarily because the cost for the public hearings would have incurred Rutgers University overhead whereas the additional expenditures for consultants and the subcontract with Moritz do not.

I hope this provides you the information you need. While Rutgers is shutting down until January 3rd, I will be checking email at least every day or two.

Attached please find a copy of a portion of the memo that is part of the paperwork related to the no-cost extension.

While I am the Contracting Officer Representative on this project, I never received your project's cost proposal, and am unable to locate a copy. Otherwise, I would have completed more of the chart.

Please, take a moment to fill in the information on the attached chart, and, if you could, have one of the Eagleton staff send me the cost proposal which originally accompanied the technical proposal.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

On May 24, 2005 the U.S. Election Assistance Commission awarded an eight month contract (December 30, 2005) in the amount of $560,002.00 to the Eagleton Institute of Politics (Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey) to provide research assistance to support development of guidelines on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification procedures.

On November 15, 2005, John Weingart, Associate Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics, requested via e-mail, a no-cost extension on this contract (E4014127). Mr. Weingart has requested an extension to complete the work of this contract to February 28, 2006.

In subsequent correspondence, Mr. Weingart notes the following as the reason for the request:

“The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October, voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting, based on Eagleton’s research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication..... The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report of that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid-January”.

He further notes:

“If EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work....

“The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $300,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project”.

Karen Lynn-Dyson, the EAC's Contracting Officer Representative assigned to this contract has reviewed this request, the rationale and authority for it (FAR 43.103(a)(3)) and finds it to be appropriate. To-date the Eagleton Institute has consistently met its deadlines for major project deliverables and stayed within the project budget. To grant the Eagleton Institute a two month extension on this contract in order to obtain the necessary feedback on major documents it has produced will be within the best interests of the Election Assistance Commission, and thus, the federal government.

EAC's Contracting Officer Representative finds that to grant the Eagleton Institute a no-cost extension for the modification of its contract with the EAC is within the scope of the original agreement and is recommending that this modification to the contract be made.

Subject Rutgers Contract Close

History: This message has been replied to.

Karen - I am writing to summarize our phone conversation initiated by me yesterday in response to receipt of Tom Wilkey's June 29th letter. To close out the contract, we will do the following:

1. Prepare separate monthly reports for April, May and June which each briefly summarize our activities under the contract during that month. These reports, which will not include financial information, will be sent to you by email no later than July 24th.
2. Submit a final invoice for the project no later than September 16th, which is 75 days from the close of the contract rather than the 30 days specified in the June 29th letter. I am attaching our previously-submitted "December 1, 2005 Request for a No-Cost Extension" which noted, at the bottom of page 1, the need for a 75-day closeout period.
3. In my January 13, 2006 letter regarding our No-Cost Extension through February 28th (also attached), I had indicated that we expected to have a closing balance of approximately $10,000. As we discussed yesterday, you appreciate that, with the subsequent No-Cost Extension through June 30th, we have spent the entire contract amount, and you expect us to submit invoices accordingly that will document our use of all remaining funds from the $560,002 contract award.

Please let me know if I have left out any remaining tasks or you have a different interpretation of them. I trust you have by now received all our final work products that were FedExed to you late last week.

Thanks,

John

OUTLINE OF SUMMARY REPORT

- Introduction
- Provisional Voting
- Voter Identification Requirements
- Project Management
- Financial Report

INTRODUCTION

This report summarizes our progress from May 1, 2006 through May 31, 2006. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks and progress made.

This Monthly Progress Report is divided into 3 sections: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, and Project Management. Each section references specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract. The Financial Report will be sent separately by the Rutgers Division of Grant and Contract Accounting. Please direct questions or comments about this report to john.weingart@rutgers.edu or by telephone at (732) 932-9384, ext. 290.

PROVISIONAL VOTING

We prepared and delivered a briefing on provisional voting to EAC Advisory Boards on May 23 and 24. We continued revising the provisional voting analysis based on comments made by the Advisory Boards.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

We continued to review and revise the voter identification requirement analysis. We also completed a new statistical analysis in response to Peer Review Group comments.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and an internal website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law is being merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding Provisional Voting and voter identification.

Projections: The entire project team continues to use the Information System which contains the above referenced research, in working toward the preparation for our final reports to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: All project team members have signed on to the Intranet site, and regularly post drafts, completed materials and spreadsheets online for internal review. The Intranet facilitates the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

FINANCIAL REPORT

The financial reporting for this project is supervised and prepared by the Division of Grant and Contract Accounting (DGCA) at Rutgers. The contact at DGCA is: Constance Bornheimer, (732) 932-6103, [REDACTED]. A combined final invoice will be submitted by September 15, 2006.

PROVISIONAL VOTING

We completed preparing a briefing on Provisional Voting for presentation to EAC on April 3. Comments made by the Peer Review Group were taken into account in the briefing development.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

We briefed the EAC in Washington on April 3 regarding our Provisional Voting report and the analysis of Voter Identification Requirements. Subsequent to this briefing and to a meeting with Peer Review Group, we have made revisions to the Voter Identification analysis.

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Revision of Provisional Voting report continued. We participated in a teleconference on June 6 with EAC on Provisional Voting and Voter ID issues. The final Provisional Voting report was completed. It was submitted to EAC with appendices and supplementary materials on June 28, 2006. This concluded our contract with EAC.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

We completed the final Voter ID report and submitted it to EAC with appendices and supplementary materials on June 28, 2006. This was our final work product required under our contract with the EAC.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

As we have completed and submitted our final work products to the EAC, the project team has continued to communicate via frequent conference calls and group emails.

Subject Data request from provisional ballot report

Tom and Adam,

Attached are two papers from Rutgers that appear to use data drawn from the EAC's grant to Rutgers and Ohio State for reports on provisional balloting (from a paper presented at the Midwest Political Science Association Conference in April) and voter identification (from a paper to be presented at the upcoming American Political Science Association Conference this week). My check of the EAC's website this morning shows that these EAC commissioned reports have not been publicly released.

My requests for the basic legal data contained in these reports' appendices have been refused. It is unfair that Rutgers researchers are allowed to publish scholarly work from this data while it is being held by the EAC. When I worked on the Election Day Survey; at the EAC's direction, Kim Brace and I did not publish or make these data publicly available until our report was publicly released. Either the same standard must apply to all persons working under EAC grants or, if a new policy is in place, I would request again that these data be released to me for my research on provisional balloting. If not, it gives the appearance and has the effect that the data are being withheld so that Rutgers scholars can publish their EAC subsidized research in scholarly outlets before others like myself have a chance to do so.

Best regards,

Subject Hinchey statement

Hinchey Statement on U.S. Election Assistance Commission's

Release of Report on Voter Identification Issues

Washington, DC - Congressman Maurice Hinchey (D-NY) today released the following report in response to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission's (EAC) release of a report on voter identification issues that was submitted to them by Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, through its Eagleton Institute of Politics, and Ohio State University's Moritz College of Law. Hinchey directly requested the release of the report when EAC Chairwoman Donetta Davidson appeared earlier this month before the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Financial Services, of which the congressman is a member. Davidson told Hinchey at the hearing that she would provide the subcommittee with the report that is being released to the public today. Hinchey also requested the release of a separate report on voter fraud and intimidation. The Help America Vote Act (HAVA) requires the EAC to conduct and make available to the public studies regarding certain voting issues.

"I am very pleased that following Chairwoman Davidson's appearances before Congress the EAC decided to do the right thing and make public the Eagleton Institute of Politics study on voter identification issues. I hope that this decision signals a new day of transparency and sets a precedent for all future and previous studies and reports submitted to the EAC.

"When Chairwoman Davidson came before our subcommittee a few weeks ago, I also requested that the EAC make public another report about voter fraud and voter intimidation submitted to them by two outside consultants. It is my hope they will release this report to the public as well. The EAC has the responsibility to keep the public informed on any findings it has with regards to voter fraud, intimidation, and any other electoral issues.

"As we work to increase voter turnout and make our democracy function more effectively, it is imperative that potential voters are assured that they will be able to cast their votes fairly and in an environment free of intimidation. To achieve that goal, the EAC must be open with the information it receives in order to help identify voting problems and make recommendations on fixing them."

Subject: FYI--Letter from Serrano

All,

Today we received a faxed copy of a letter signed by Jose Serrano as Chair of the Financial Services and General Government Appropriations Subcommittee. The Chairman urges the EAC to publicly release the full draft version of the Provisional Voting report prepared by Eagleton. The letter states that the Congressman was pleased with our decision to engage our Inspector General and to release the draft version of the Voter ID study (though he was disappointed that we did not adopt it).

Chairman stated in his letter that if we do not decide to release the draft report, he would like an update regarding the study's status, time line for release and a statement regarding why the EAC would deviate from the "precedent" it has now set in releasing draft studies.

It is my understanding that this report was made public at the Board of Advisor and Standards Board meetings in May 2006. I do not know if any changes were made to the document after that time. Perhaps Karen can provide additional information regarding this concern. It is also my understanding that this document has been released to third parties upon request under FOIA. Additionally, I believe a best practices document was created by the EAC based on the research. That document is on our website. Also, Stephanie informed me (and Karen confirmed) that the study is posted on Eagleton's website.

A copy of Serrano's letter is attached.

Karen,

Attached is Tim Vercellotti's Voter ID analysis revised to use Citizen Voting Age population as the base for turnout calculations and to take account of comments or issues raised by the EAC and our Peer Review Group. This draft is for distribution to the reviewers who will meet by teleconference on May 11, at, we understand, 11:30 a.m.

You are receiving this at the same time that it is being distributed to the Eagleton-Moritz team so that the new reviewers will have a week to prepare for our conversation on the 11th. Early next week you will receive a revised summary paper on Voter ID that incorporates the new data and findings in Tim's revised analysis. That too will be for distribution to the new reviewers.

Subject Re: Review of EAC research on Voter Identification

History: This message has been replied to.

I just got your phone message. I will still do the review, but I should note that I won't be able to do a full 90 minute phone call on the 11th -- perhaps we could schedule 30 minutes or so for me to be on the phone call.

At 05:36 PM 5/1/2006, you wrote:

Dr. Berinsky-

On behalf of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC), thank you in advance for agreeing to assist us with the review of research conducted by the Eagleton Institute of Politics on voter identification. By Friday, May 5, 2006, you will receive, in electronic form, the research paper and relevant data analysis which supports the paper's findings. Through this independent review by a small group of experts familiar with elections data and research we are seeking feedback on:

- The research methodology which was used to support the paper's conclusions
- The specific statistical applications which were used to analyze the data and arrive at various conclusions

If there are alternate methodological and statistical approaches to analyzing the data on voter identification, and if there is other data on voter identification that you think should have been included in the analysis, please be certain to note this in your comments.

On May 11, 2006 EAC will conduct a 60-90 minute phone call with key Eagleton Institute staff responsible for the research, members of Eagleton's peer review group and the EAC-identified reviewers who have been asked to consider the research. Through this dialogue EAC hopes to gather varying perspectives and insights on the research strategies and methods that were employed by Eagleton. As a result of this conversation, EAC anticipates that some revisions will be made to the Eagleton research paper. This paper is scheduled to be presented to EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Boards in late May.

While we are unable to offer financial compensation for your review of this research we greatly appreciate your willingness to assist us with this important task. We believe that the research findings we will provide on voter identification are important and will most certainly be enhanced by your insights and expertise.

Dear Jonathan Nagler

Dear Adam Berinsky

On behalf of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC), thank you in advance for agreeing to assist us with the review of research conducted by the Eagleton Institute of Politics on voter identification. By Friday, May 5, 2006, you will receive, in electronic form, the research paper and relevant data analysis which supports the paper's findings. Through this independent review by a small group of experts familiar with elections data and research we are seeking feedback on:

- The research methodology which was used to support the paper's conclusions
- The specific statistical applications which were used to analyze the data and arrive at various conclusions

If there are alternate methodological and statistical approaches to analyzing the data on voter identification, and if there is other data on voter identification that you think should have been included in the analysis, please be certain to note this in your comments.

On May 11, 2006 EAC will conduct a 60-90 minute phone call with key Eagleton Institute staff responsible for the research, members of Eagleton's peer review group and the EAC-identified reviewers who have been asked to consider the research. Through this dialogue EAC hopes to gather varying perspectives and insights on the research strategies and methods that were employed by Eagleton. As a result of this conversation, EAC anticipates that some revisions will be made to the Eagleton research paper. This paper is scheduled to be presented to EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Boards in late May.

While EAC agency policy does not allow us to provide you with financial compensation for your review of this research we greatly appreciate your willingness to assist us with this important task. We believe that the research findings we will provide on voter identification are important and will most certainly be enhanced by your insights and expertise.

Hi -- nice to meet you in person, finally!

And thanks for inviting me to your gathering, I enjoyed it and hope I was helpful. Of course, any time you want anything, you do know where to track me down.

As to the potential reviewers of the Eagleton Voter ID study, here are my suggestions, in order:
Jonathan Nagler, New York University
Jan Leighley, University of Arizona
Ben Highton, UC-Davis
Adam Berinsky, MIT
Bernard Grofman, UC-Irvine

All have worked with the CPS turnout/registration data, and are very familiar with this research literature.

If these don't work, or you want more recommendations, let me know.

Karen,

Glad the paper arrived. Sorry it was a bit later than promised, but we reworked the statistical analysis on the basis of some insightful suggestions by the Peer Review Group. . .that took a few extra days (and nights). Looking back at my email to you, I realize the full statistical analysis was not attached as it should have been. It is appendix to the paper that will be of interest to those who want the details of our methodology. It is attached to this email.

I will be away, without access to email, until late Monday afternoon, but if you need to, you can reach me by cell phone at [REDACTED]

Karen,

I haven't received the fax about the potential new recruit for the Peer Review Group that you mentioned to me yesterday.

We have now completed the materials to be distributed to those attending the meeting at the EAC on September 6. You will receive a hard copy of all the material by express delivery tomorrow. The most important material to get to those attending in advance is the document with the answers to the 6 questions about topics of special interest on provisional voting outlined in our contract. The bulk of the material is backup to this summary report.

Subject Eagleton Peer Review Group

Karen,

I have reviewed the Eagleton Peer Review Group recruitment list that you recently provided. Based on what I or Amie can determine from the bio's provided or an Internet search, it appears that at least 4 of the 7 people who have said yes to be on the group seem to have a liberal perspective, or have had a history of working on that side of the political spectrum. I could only identify one as being a Republican, and a moderate one at that (Verniero). Mike Alvarez has conducted a lot of research into election issues and generally seems to do it in a neutral way. I have been unable to obtain a bio or background information on Tim Storey, who is not an academic. The only person that I could identify on their list as being conservative was Brad Clark, who has declined to participate.

Therefore, based on this information regarding the Peer Review Group, I am not satisfied that they will provide Eagleton with the balanced review that I thought they would receive from such a group. I would urge you to ask them to seek the input of more conservative academics so that whatever study we receive from them will have the benefit of a balanced review. I am going to have Amie provide you with the background sheet on Professor Tim O'Rourke of Salisbury University in Maryland, whom they may want to consider for this panel. We have some calls into others who could suggest some conservative academics for this review panel.

Thanks.

Subject: Eagleton

In his note regarding the Eagleton contract, Hans has raised some of the same concerns I raised from the beginning of any discussions I had regarding this contract with our staff, and at our first formal meeting with Eagleton. In reviewing their work product from time to time, I continue to have concerns about a lack of balanced input and have repeatedly voiced them with staff and with Eagleton. I did this when the initial peer review group was proposed and again during their presentation at our meeting in Pasadena (the outreach slide in their public presentation showed outreach to seven groups, of which only one could be considered conservative-leaning). Now, as I have just had the opportunity to read their July progress report, it appears that Eagleton seems to be going into a larger analysis of the voter fraud issue than was authorized in the contract. My suspicion is that Dan Tokaji is injecting his views into this to dismiss or diminish the concerns some people may have about voter fraud. I could be wrong, but his previous writings lead me to believe otherwise.

I only found one mention of voter fraud in the contract with Eagleton. It is in Section 3.5 regarding provisional voting, where it discusses "minimizing opportunity for voter fraud." Yet, on page 4 of the July progress report from Eagleton, in describing their work plan for the next month it states: "we will expand upon vote fraud research and examine further the relationship between instances of vote fraud and ensuing election reforms." This clearly seems to be going beyond the mandate we gave them as I thought they were going to be looking at voter fraud relating to provisional voting (as the contract calls for), not voter fraud as it relates to election reforms. While voter fraud was never mentioned in the contract regarding the voter ID issue, page 5 of their July report indicates that their narratives "will include an appraisal of the prevalence and nature of vote fraud." In addition to this, page 6 describes a look into the "relationship between voter ID regime and vote fraud."

Voter fraud is clearly an issue that is perceived differently from the Right and from the Left. I have struggled with determining what a clear definition of voter fraud is myself, and therefore want to obtain various perspectives and good analysis on this issue before I formulate a solid conclusion in my mind. It has been my understanding all along that the whole voter fraud/voter intimidation issue is going to be studied by the EAC using a balanced group of consultants--not Eagleton and Moritz, who are likely to focus on just on the number of prosecutions of voter fraud, rather than the complaints made or the fact that many election officials are frustrated that some prosecutors don't take their complaints about voter fraud seriously. I am not convinced at this point that we will get a balanced and objective study from Eagleton/Moritz on voter fraud. I am puzzled on why they seem to be expending a significant portion of their time on this and would want to know if we somehow authorized them to do more research into the voter fraud issue.

On page 7 of their July report Eagleton indicates that communications with the EAC on the Peer Review

Group "were not clear or timely." I would like to know what this refers to. Also, I may have missed it, but I do not recall seeing the final list of who is serving as the Peer Review group.

The August 15th copy of the July report that I received from Karen did not include the attachment of the financial report of expenses incurred. I would like to see that attachment.

Outside of our NIST work, this contract represents our largest single outside expenditure of our operational funds. Any single expenditure of $500,000+ needs to be closely monitored. I, for one, am not going to sign off on any report that appears to have been written from a biased viewpoint, especially one that doesn't appear to be interested in hearing from conservative organizations or right-leaning researchers, or seems to minimize any input from them. I've already had questions from congressional staff and others on why we picked Eagleton and Moritz, as they are perceived by some as biased against Republicans. I assured the critics that we have insisted all along on an objective study from Eagleton. An unbalanced or biased study from them will not only hurt my credibility, but also that of the EAC. I'm not suggesting that we stop their work, but I do want Tom and Julie to inform them in no uncertain terms that we will not accept a report that does not seriously consider all viewpoints on provisional voting and the voter ID issue, and that any study or interpretations they present to us reflect a diversity of opinions on these subjects. We also need for staff to determine whether their considerable work into the voter fraud area is authorized in the contract. We should not be paying for and receiving work we did not authorize.

The contract clearly calls for "alternative approaches" on voter ID requirements and "alternatives" on provisional voting. I agreed to support this contract to Eagleton because I was assured that we would receive a variety of approaches from their work, and not just those from a liberal perspective.

Karen:

As we discussed on Tuesday morning in the teleconference, we would like to reallocate within the current budget $9,500 to the survey of local election officials. This will raise the budget for the survey to $24,500 from $15,000.

The additional funding will permit us to double the sample of local election officials from 200 to 400. The larger sample will allow more detailed comparisons between the experience of local election officials in states that offered some form of provisional ballot before HAVA and those that did not. This comparison is a topic of special interest identified in the contract.

The increase of $9,500 is based on an estimate made by SRBI, the contractor that will actually administer the interviews. I can furnish you with a copy of the estimate if you like. We believe the additional funds will improve significantly our ability to provide relevant analysis to EAC on this important issue.

Tom-

I will be back to you early next week with EAC's feedback on this.

Our initial reaction is that the group needs to include some local and/or state-level election officials, who have first-hand experience with these issues.

We will get you additional names and reactions by mid-week next week.

Thanks

Karen,

As you probably recall, one of the features of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group to look over our findings, conclusions and draft reports before we prepare final drafts for the EAC's review. The EAC asked that before recruiting members of the PRG we submit names for EAC's review. The aim, course, is to assemble a panel that is experienced, informed, and balanced.

Attached is a list of potential PRG members drawn from academia, the law, and non-profit organizations with interests in this area. Please look it over.

Karen, Tom -

I am not taking any action on the email Tom sent a few days ago regarding the Peer Review Group because the Eagleton project is not my responsibility. As I indicated earlier to Karen, I didn't know why this was sent to me since Karen is the Project Manager. I endorse her comment below regarding the need for including her in all correspondence with anyone at the EAC regarding the project.

When I was the Interim Executive Director it was part of my job to stay on top of all EAC project work. I now have other responsibilities at the EAC, and while I am happy to continue involvement in other projects for continuity and transition purposes as needed, that needs to be very limited. My involvement with the Eagleton work has only been from the contracting perspective, and that is the only continuing role I have. Any substantive project activities have to be taken up with Karen.

Carol,

After our discussion in New York, you asked me to put in writing our response to the EAC's suggestions for expanding the number and kinds of groups that would review and comment on our work. I hope after your review of this response, we will be able to quickly recruit a balanced Peer Review Group (PRG) and move ahead as the schedule in our work plan indicates. Attached is a revised list of the members we propose for appointment to the PRG. We will probably not be able to persuade all of them to serve, but the number and range of views included on the proposed list should ensure that the resulting group is well-balanced.

013629

RESPONSE TO EAC RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL REVIEW GROUPS

EAC's Recommendations for the PRG

Karen Lynn-Dyson reported this response from the EAC commissioners to our proposal for the composition of the PRG.

1. Not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG
2. Create a "tiered process" of review in which:
 - A. The PRG will prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions.
 - B. PRG's analysis would be vetted by a defined/select group of local election officials.
 - C. A defined/select group of advocacy organizations would review the comments of the local election officials
 - D. Empanel a final focus group of local election officials, advocates and academics for an overall, interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Project Team Response

Creating three new committees to the review process to supplement the work of the Peer Review Group (PRG) is possible, but would add at least 8 weeks –and possibly 12 weeks-- to our completion of the guidance document on provisional voting. We believe this delay would risk limiting the value of this project for the 2006 election. In addition, the change would add at least $30,000 to the cost of our work. (See the attached table showing the possible effect on our work plan, and note the optimistic assumptions such as the ability to hold a hearing the week after Christmas.). If the same groups were to be engaged in reviewing our work on Voter ID, the time for that work would also have to be stretched at a similar increased cost.

This additional cost and the added time might be worthwhile. . . if the new layers of review were to produce a consensus on how to strengthen the research, sharpen the analysis, and increase the relevance of the Guidance Document. Our team concluded, however, that additional review groups were unlikely to achieve these results.

PRG focuses on quality of research

We believe that our research would be strengthened by a balanced Peer Review Group that will focus on the design of the research and our conduct of it. Based on the EAC's recommendation, we have revised the composition of the PRG to include additional, well-recognized authorities in the field whose perspective is generally agreed to be conservative.

The PRG will focus on the strength of the research design and the quality of our analysis, not on the politics of our recommendations for the guidance document. The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions." That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC's Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a "defined/select" group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the "defined/select" group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a "defined/select" group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC's comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC's comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. And further revision will follow the public hearing and comments. The EAC and individual Commissioners can always seek comment informally on our analysis or recommendations. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Project Team focuses on analysis and recommendations

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions." That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC's Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a "defined/select" group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the "defined/select" group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a "defined/select" group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC's comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC's comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. And further revision will follow the public hearing and comments. The EAC and individual Commissioners can always seek comment informally on our analysis or recommendations. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

Karen, Tom -

I am not taking any action on the email Tom sent a few days ago regarding the Peer Review Group because the Eagleton project is not my responsibility. As I indicated earlier to Karen, I didn't know why this was sent to me since Karen is the Project Manager. I endorse her comment below regarding the need for including her in all correspondence with anyone at the EAC regarding the project.

When I was the Interim Executive Director it was part of my job to stay on top of all EAC project work. I now have other responsibilities at the EAC, and while I am happy to continue involvement in other projects for continuity and transition purposes as needed, that needs to be very limited. My involvement with the Eagleton work has only been from the contracting perspective, and that is the only continuing role I have. Any substantive project activities have to be taken up with Karen.

Subject Peer Review Group

Carol,

After our discussion in New York, you asked me to put in writing our response to the EAC's suggestions for expanding the number and kinds of groups that would review and comment on our work. I hope after your review of this response, we will be able to quickly recruit a balanced Peer Review Group (PRG) and move ahead as the schedule in our work plan indicates. Attached is a revised list of the members we propose for appointment to the PRG. We will probably not be able to persuade all of them to serve, but the number and range of views included on the proposed list should ensure that the resulting group is well-balanced.

Tom

RESPONSE TO EAC RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL REVIEW GROUPS

EAC's Recommendations for the PRG

Karen Lynn-Dyson reported this response from the EAC commissioners to our proposal for the composition of the PRG.

1. Not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG
2. Create a "tiered process" of review in which:
 - A. The PRG will prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions.
 - B. PRG's analysis would be vetted by a defined/select group of local election officials.
 - C. A defined/select group of advocacy organizations would review the comments of the local election officials
 - D. Empanel a final focus group of local election officials, advocates and academics for an overall, interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

013643

Project Team Response

Creating three new committees to the review process to supplement the work of the Peer Review Group (PRG) is possible, but would add at least 8 weeks –and possibly 12 weeks-- to our completion of the guidance document on provisional voting. We believe this delay would risk limiting the value of this project for the 2006 election. In addition, the change would add at least $30,000 to the cost of our work. (See the attached table showing the possible effect on our work plan, and note the optimistic assumptions such as the ability to hold a hearing the week after Christmas.). If the same groups were to be engaged in reviewing our work on Voter ID, the time for that work would also have to be stretched at a similar increased cost.

This additional cost and the added time might be worthwhile. . . if the new layers of review were to produce a consensus on how to strengthen the research, sharpen the analysis, and increase the relevance of the Guidance Document. Our team concluded, however, that additional review groups were unlikely to achieve these results.

PRG focuses on quality of research

We believe that our research would be strengthened by a balanced Peer Review Group that will focus on the design of the research and our conduct of it. Based on the EAC's recommendation, we have revised the composition of the PRG to include additional, well-recognized authorities in the field whose perspective is generally agreed to be conservative.

The PRG will focus on the strength of the research design and the quality of our analysis, not on the politics of our recommendations for the guidance document. The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions." That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC's Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a "defined/select" group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the "defined/select" group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a "defined/select" group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC's comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC's comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. And further revision will follow the public hearing and comments. The EAC and individual Commissioners can always seek comment informally on our analysis or recommendations. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

Thanks, Karen. I received both your emails and also had a telephone conversation with Aletha Barrington to fill me in on the details.

Also participating in the conference call on Thursday will be 3 members of our Peer Review Group: Mike Alvarez, Martha Kropf, and Tim O'Rourke.

The Eagleton-Moritz team on the call will include: John Weingart, Dan Tokaji, Tim Vercellotti, Ingrid Reed, and me.

I'm assuming you will guide the conversation and keep us all on time and topic.

Thanks for the schedule with the details of the EAC's review of our work.

Assume you just got the e-mail I sent to the EAC review team that included the paper, the analysis and the call-in information

Thursday at 11:30

A few items on timelines and materials for May 23-24 meetings:

The Commissioners will review the final Eagleton Voter ID and Provisional Voting reports at their Tuesday, May 16 meeting. At this meeting they will decide how they wish to present these reports to the EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Boards.

Your materials that will be distributed to the EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Boards must be finalized and ready for our Xeroxing process by Thursday, May 18. I will be in touch along the way to provide input/guidance on what these materials should be, based on the Commissioner's review and decisions

Also, in your original phone message you said that there would be an honorarium associated with the review process, but this e-mail states that there will be no compensation for the review. I of course did not expect to be compensated at my market rate for consulting jobs (which is $225 an hour) but I was led to believe that I would be compensated in some manner for my time.

On behalf of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC), thank you in advance for agreeing to assist us with the review of research conducted by the Eagleton Institute of Politics on voter identification. By Friday, May 5, 2006, you will receive, in electronic form, the research paper and relevant data analysis which supports the paper's findings. Through this independent review by a small group of experts familiar with elections data and research we are seeking feedback on:

- The research methodology which was used to support the paper's conclusions
- The specific statistical applications which were used to analyze the data and arrive at various conclusions

If there are alternate methodological and statistical approaches to analyzing the data on voter identification, and if there is other data on voter identification that you think should have been included in the analysis, please be certain to note this in your comments.

On May 11, 2006 EAC will conduct a 60-90 minute phone call with key Eagleton Institute staff responsible for the research, members of Eagleton's peer review group and the EAC-identified reviewers who have been asked to consider the research. Through this dialogue EAC hopes to gather varying perspectives and insights on the research strategies and methods that were employed by Eagleton. As a result of this conversation, EAC anticipates that some revisions will be made to the Eagleton research paper. This paper is scheduled to be presented to EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Boards in late May.

While we are unable to offer financial compensation for your review of this research we greatly appreciate your willingness to assist us with this important task. Tom-

You'll recall that we discussed the fact that the peer review group who Eagleton has assembled do not have the sufficient technical expertise to give us the expert/technical advice we need on the statistical analysis of the Voter ID piece. Only two persons on Eagleton's peer review group have a requisite research and statistical background and knowledge.

You may also remember that Mike told me that he thought that the paper needed an additional set of eyes and review by academics with a background and expertise in election statistics and analysis. When I initially proposed a review panel of six you said that was too many; we agreed that I would find three persons to do the review and that we would pay them a small honoraria for doing the review.

The EAC has identified three academics who are going to serve as peer reviewers of the Eagleton Voter ID paper and research.

They are Jonathan Nagler of New York University, Jan Leighley, University of Arizona, and Adam Berinsky of MIT.

They are ready to review the documents as soon as they are available.

I would like to them one week to review the material and then have a joint conference call on Thursday, May 11, in which we would all have an opportunity to discuss the research methodology and statistical analysis, along with general comments and suggestions.

If you are able to get to me the paper and the supporting data analysis, I will distribute to the documents ASAP.

Glad to help. I don't want to step on toes, but I'd recommend that you think about some sort of single-blind peer review, of the sort that is employed by many research journals and other organizations (like the NSF or National Academies of Science). I think that if you offer them a modest honoraria (perhaps $100) I think you'll find that the folks on that list would be likely to provide quick and thorough feedback to you.

Again, let me know if there is more that I can do to help.

I'm also willing to do a review for you myself. The issue is that I feel somewhat conflicted, given that I'm on their "peer review" panel. But on the other hand that does mean that I'm very well aware of the background of this project. I'd leave it up to you as to whether you think that a review from me would be appropriate or not.

Thank you for sharing this list of your Peer Review Group members, to-date. I will share this list with the Commissioners and will be certain to let your know of their feedback, if any.

I will also be back in touch regarding Eagleton's research around voter fraud and the research project EAC will be undertaking, this fall, around voting fraud and voter intimidation. The EAC is presently in the process of finalizing a work and staff plan for this project and once it is completed, I will be certain to brief you on it.

In the meantime, EAC staff and several of the Commissioners looks forward to meeting with the Eagleton/Moritz team on September 6 at 1:30 PM.

Karen,

Attached is a report on the status of recruitment of members of the Peer Review Group. We extended 9 invitations. We have four confirmed members, one reluctant turn-down, one who has yet to respond to an initial inquiry, and are awaiting confirmation from 3 others who initially agreed. Please let me know if you need additional information.

Karen,

Thanks. We are aiming to complete drafting the recommendations for Guidance and Best Practice for Provisional Voting in the next 10 days, so the written comments will be most helpful if they arrive in that time. And, of course, we will be revising the analysis documents in line with the comments from the EAC and the PRG during that time period as well.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

On May 24, 2005 the U.S. Election Assistance Commission awarded an eight month contract (December 30, 2005) in the amount of $560,002.00 to the Eagleton Institute of Politics (Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey) to provide research assistance to support development of guidelines on the topics of provisional voting and voter identification procedures.

On November 15, 2005, John Weingart, Associate Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics, requested via e-mail, a no-cost extension on this contract (E4014127). Mr. Weingart has requested an extension to complete the work of this contract to February 28, 2006.

In subsequent correspondence, Mr. Weingart notes the following as the reason for the request:

“The original work schedule called for EAC to publish in mid-October, voluntary guidance and/or recommended best practices for provisional voting, based on Eagleton’s research. In making that time estimate, we did not provide sufficient time for the EAC to review and consider the draft reports that would form the basis for that publication.... The additional time required to complete the work on provisional voting has delayed the completion of our analysis of Voter Identification issues. The draft report of that topic will be submitted to the EAC in mid-January”.

He further notes:

“If EAC does not object, funds originally allocated for the hearings would be available for transfer to support the additional staff and consultant time necessary to complete the work....

“The total project budget is $560,002. As of October 31st, the EAC has been invoiced for $259,081.79; the balance remaining is $300,920.21. We anticipate that the project will be complete and the balance of funds fully expended by February 28, 2006. The final invoice for the contract will be submitted to the EAC within 75 days of the close of the project”.

I am assuming that there original proposal included an estimate for public hearing proposals and that they want to shift money from this expense to labor.

Thus I am assuming that you have determined that there will be no public hearing and therefore this shift is appropriate.

Are these assumption correct? Perhaps a quick explanation regarding this processes would be helpful.

I just had a more detailed conversation with our Deputy General Counsel about Eagleton's no-cost extension.

He indicates that we need a bit more information that will accompany the material we will send to the Commissioners for a vote (hopefully next week)

We need to know the number of labor hours, the labor costs and a brief description of the tasks to be performed by each of the staff who will be working on the EAC contract until its completion.

Since we have eliminated the public hearing (a major contract deliverable) it is unclear why staff labor hours and costs will continue at the same level and rate.

As always, thanks for your patience and prompt response.

Subject Re: No Cost Extension Request

Karen - Our request for a no-cost, reallocation of resources is based on (a) the fact that our personnel costs have already been higher than we anticipated and (b) the reality that keeping the project operating for at least nine months, instead of seven as planned, will require the participants to devote more time than anticipated. While we are not producing more product than originally promised, the time involved in our work continues to increase. Both Provisional Voting and Voter ID have proved to be very dynamic topics requiring us to continually monitor developments and update our data, analysis and evolving work products as we learn of new or revised information. As a result, despite the extension of the schedule, the staff and consultants on this project have had no "down" time. We anticipate this research, monitoring and revising to continue for the months added to the project, necessitating significantly more hours by all members of the project team than anticipated.

Our request asks for changes to three line items which I will address below on the assumption that the EAC response to our already-submitted Provisional Voting draft and to-be-submitted Voter ID draft will be sufficiently timely to enable us to complete our work on both topics by the end of February.

1. Eagleton Institute of Politics personnel: We originally budgeted $110,695 ($15,813 average per month) for Eagleton faculty, staff and graduate student assistants for the seven-month project from May 24

2005-December 31, 2005. Our actual costs have been approximately $14,500 more than that. In addition, we are anticipating needing another $21,000 for personnel costs in January and February, calculated on the basis of 2/3 of the original monthly estimate. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $110,695 to approximately $146,000.

2. Consultant Services: We originally budgeted $79,50 ($11,357 average per month) for consultant services which we have used to engage Tom O'Neill as the project manager. We anticipate no additional cost for the original contract period of May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005, but do anticipate needing his services during January and February at a slightly reduced rate of $10,125 per month or $20,250 total additional. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $79,500 to $99,750.

3. Moritz School of Law: We originally budgeted $84,744 ($12,106 average per month) for staff and overhead for the May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005 period. We anticipate needing an additional $23,171 ($11,585 average per month) to support their time on this project in January and February. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $84,744 to $107,915.

With these revisions, approximately $22,000 of the EAC contract award to Eagleton would remain not yet allocated, primarily because the cost for the public hearings would have incurred Rutgers University overhead whereas the additional expenditures for consultants and the subcontract with Moritz do not.

I hope this provides you the information you need. While Rutgers is shutting down until January 3rd, I will be checking email at least every day or two.

Subject Peer Review Group

Karen,

As you probably recall, one of the features of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group to look over our findings, conclusions and draft reports before we prepare final drafts for the EAC's review. The EAC asked that before recruiting members of the PRG we submit names for EAC's review. The aim, course, is to assemble a panel that is experienced, informed, and balanced.

Attached is a list of potential PRG members drawn from academia, the law, and non-profit organizations with interests in this area. Please look it over.

We may conclude that the PRG should also include two or three former government officials now in academia or related fields. We have a conference call with our partners at Moritz planned for tomorrow or Friday to decide a) if former officials should be included in the PRG and b) if so, who they should be. I'll keep you informed of our thinking as it develops.

Subject Fw: Peer Review Group

Commissioners-

Enclosed please find a preliminary list of Peer Review Group members, whom Eagleton is considering for their Peer Review Group. Tom Wilkey will be bringing this item to you for discussion and input at Monday's Commissioner's meeting.

Eagleton envisions this Peer Review Group as the body that will review the draft analysis that it will prepare on provisional voting and on voter identification. The Group would also provide comment on the development of alternative approaches to provisional voting and voter identification which Eagleton will develop for the EAC.

I have included the e-mail from the Eagleton Project Director, Tom O'Neil, so that you could get a feel for his approach/philosophy to assembling the Group.

Subject RE: Peer Review Group

Tom-

Had a very good review and discussion of the PRG at this morning's Commissioner meeting.

Also, the Commissioners have marked their calendars for a conference call with the Eagleton/Moritz team on July 12 at 9:30 AM.

Several concerns were raised about the composition of the PRG and, after some discussion, I indicated that Eagleton will provide the EAC with a revised participant list, and with a more detailed description of the PRG's mission, goals, objectives, workplan and timelines for accomplishing its work.

The Vice Chair is concerned that there is not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG. I would suggest the team do more research to identify well-recognized conservative academics to put on the Group.

Further, the Commissioners recommend a tiered process in which the PRG will prepare a "dispassionate" analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions. This analysis and these conclusions will then be vetted with a defined/select group of local election officials, and then, with a defined/select group of advocacy organizations.

It was also suggested that a final round of focus group meetings be held with a cross-section of these election officials, advocates and academics for an overall interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Hope this helps clarify concerns; I look forward to sharing your revisions to the PRG with them.

Carol,

After our discussion in New York, you asked me to put in writing our response to the EAC's suggestions for expanding the number and kinds of groups that would review and comment on our work. I hope after your review of this response, we will be able to quickly recruit a balanced Peer Review Group (PRG) and move ahead as the schedule in our work plan indicates. Attached is a revised list of the members we propose for appointment to the PRG. We will probably not be able to persuade all of them to serve, but the number and range of views included on the proposed list should ensure that the resulting group is well-balanced.

Tom

RESPONSE TO EAC RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL REVIEW GROUPS

EAC's Recommendations for the PRG

Karen Lynn-Dyson reported this response from the EAC commissioners to our proposal for the composition of the PRG.

1. Not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG
2. Create a "tiered process" of review in which:
 - A. The PRG will prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions.
 - B. PRG's analysis would be vetted by a defined/select group of local election officials.
 - C. A defined/select group of advocacy organizations would review the comments of the local election officials
 - D. Empanel a final focus group of local election officials, advocates and academics for an overall, interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Project Team Response

Creating three new committees to the review process to supplement the work of the Peer Review Group (PRG) is possible, but would add at least 8 weeks --and possibly 12 weeks-- to our completion of the guidance document on provisional voting. We believe this delay would risk limiting the value of this project for the 2006 election. In addition, the change would add at least $30,000 to the cost of our work. (See the attached table showing the possible effect on our work plan, and note the optimistic assumptions such as the ability to hold a hearing the week after Christmas.). If the same groups were to be engaged in reviewing our work on Voter ID, the time for that work would also have to be stretched at a similar increased cost.

This additional cost and the added time might be worthwhile. . . if the new layers of review were to produce a consensus on how to strengthen the research, sharpen the analysis, and increase the relevance of the Guidance Document. Our team concluded, however, that additional review groups were unlikely to achieve these results.

PRG focuses on quality of research

We believe that our research would be strengthened by a balanced Peer Review Group that will focus on the design of the research and our conduct of it. Based on the EAC's recommendation, we have revised the composition of the PRG to include additional, well-recognized authorities in the field whose perspective is generally agreed to be conservative.

The PRG will focus on the strength of the research design and the quality of our analysis, not on the politics of our recommendations for the guidance document. The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions." That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC's Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a "defined/select" group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the "defined/select" group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a "defined/select" group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the

013701

Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC's comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC's comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

Subject Peer Review Group

Carol,

After our discussion in New York, you asked me to put in writing our response to the EAC's suggestions for expanding the number and kinds of groups that would review and comment on our work. I hope after your review of this response, we will be able to quickly recruit a balanced Peer Review Group (PRG) and move ahead as the schedule in our work plan indicates. Attached is a revised list of the members we propose for appointment to the PRG. We will probably not be able to persuade all of them to serve, but the number and range of views included on the proposed list should ensure that the resulting group is well-balanced.

RESPONSE TO EAC RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL REVIEW GROUPS

EAC's Recommendations for the PRG

Karen Lynn-Dyson reported this response from the EAC commissioners to our proposal for the composition of the PRG.

1. Not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG
2. Create a "tiered process" of review in which:
 - A. The PRG will prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions.
 - B. PRG's analysis would be vetted by a defined/select group of local election officials.
 - C. A defined/select group of advocacy organizations would review the comments of the local election officials
 - D. Empanel a final focus group of local election officials, advocates and academics for an overall, interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Project Team Response

Creating three new committees to the review process to supplement the work of the Peer Review Group (PRG) is possible, but would add at least 8 weeks –and possibly 12 weeks-- to our completion of the guidance document on provisional voting. We believe this delay would risk limiting the value of this project for the 2006 election. In addition, the change would add at least $30,000 to the cost of our work. (See the attached table showing the possible effect on our work plan, and note the optimistic assumptions such as the ability to hold a hearing the week after Christmas.) If the same groups were to be engaged in reviewing our work on Voter ID, the time for that work would also have to be stretched at a similar increased cost.

This additional cost and the added time might be worthwhile. . . if the new layers of review were to produce a consensus on how to strengthen the research, sharpen the analysis, and increase the relevance of the Guidance Document. Our team concluded, however, that additional review groups were unlikely to achieve these results.

PRG focuses on quality of research

We believe that our research would be strengthened by a balanced Peer Review Group that will focus on the design of the research and our conduct of it. Based on the EAC's recommendation, we have revised the composition of the PRG to include additional, well-recognized authorities in the field whose perspective is generally agreed to be conservative.

The PRG will focus on the strength of the research design and the quality of our analysis, not on the politics of our recommendations for the guidance document. The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions." That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC's Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a "defined/select" group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the "defined/select" group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a "defined/select" group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC's comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC's comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. And further revision will follow the public hearing and comments. The EAC and individual Commissioners can always seek comment informally on our analysis or recommendations. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

REVISED
July 6, 2005

Role of the Peer Review Group

Members of the Peer Review Group will review the research design for the project, including the survey of local election officials, the analysis of Voter ID regime on turnout, the state-by-state narrative of developments in provisional voting and voter identification, and the compilation and analysis of statutes, administrative regulations, and case law affecting provisional voting and voter identification. They will also review the report on Analysis and Alternatives. They may review the draft of the Preliminary Guidance Document before it goes to the Board of Advisors for comment.

Members of the group will be respected authorities in their fields and represent a range of opinions and perspectives, although their views on policy will be less important to the study than their views on the quality of the research on which policy recommendations are based.

Ideally, the group would meet once, but even that may not be possible to arrange given the tight time period for the project, the demanding schedules of the members, and their wide dispersal across the county. They will function largely by reviewing written work and making written comments on it. The timing of their involvement is indicated on the work plan.

I sent you the email on the Peer Review Group because you asked me to. When we discussed the issue in New York, you told me to send to you in writing our response to the Commission's suggestions for a new, more elaborate review process. I believe I copied Karen on that email.

Learning now, almost a week later, that you have taken no action is disheartening. As you know, our schedule is tight, and we need the counsel the Peer Review Group can provide. I hope, therefore, that Karen will take immediate action to resolve the situation so we can begin to recruit the review group in time to assure the quality of the resource design.

Karen, Tom -

I am not taking any action on the email Tom sent a few days ago regarding the Peer Review Group because the Eagleton project is not my responsibility. As I indicated earlier to Karen, I didn't know why this was sent to me since Karen is the Project Manager. I endorse her comment below regarding the need for including her in all correspondence with anyone at the EAC regarding the project.

When I was the Interim Executive Director it was part of my job to stay on top of all EAC project work. I now have other responsibilities at the EAC, and while I am happy to continue involvement in other projects for continuity and transition purposes as needed, that needs to be very limited. My involvement with the Eagleton work has only been from the contracting perspective, and that is the only continuing role I have. Any substantive project activities have to be taken up with Karen.

RESPONSE TO EAC RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL REVIEW GROUPS

EAC's Recommendations for the PRG

Karen Lynn-Dyson reported this response from the EAC commissioners to our proposal for the composition of the PRG.

1. Not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG
2. Create a "tiered process" of review in which:
 - A. The PRG will prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions.
 - B. PRG's analysis would be vetted by a defined/select group of local election officials.
 - C. A defined/select group of advocacy organizations would review the comments of the local election officials
 - D. Empanel a final focus group of local election officials, advocates and academics for an overall, interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Project Team Response

Creating three new committees to the review process to supplement the work of the Peer Review Group (PRG) is possible, but would add at least 8 weeks –and possibly 12 weeks-- to our completion of the guidance document on provisional voting. We believe this delay would risk limiting the value of this project for the 2006 election. In addition, the change would add at least $30,000 to the cost of our work. (See the attached table showing the possible effect on our work plan, and note the optimistic assumptions such as the ability to hold a hearing the week after Christmas.). If the same groups were to be engaged in reviewing our work on Voter ID, the time for that work would also have to be stretched at a similar increased cost.

This additional cost and the added time might be worthwhile. . . if the new layers of review were to produce a consensus on how to strengthen the research, sharpen the analysis, and increase the relevance of the Guidance Document. Our team concluded, however, that additional review groups were unlikely to achieve these results.

PRG focuses on quality of research

We believe that our research would be strengthened by a balanced Peer Review Group that will focus on the design of the research and our conduct of it. Based on the EAC's recommendation, we have revised the composition of the PRG to include additional, well-recognized authorities in the field whose perspective is generally agreed to be conservative.

The PRG will focus on the strength of the research design and the quality of our analysis, not on the politics of our recommendations for the guidance document. The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Project Team focuses on analysis and recommendations

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions." That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC's Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a "defined/select" group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the "defined/select" group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a "defined/select" group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC's comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC's comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. And further revision will follow the public hearing and comments. The EAC and individual Commissioners can always seek comment informally on our analysis or recommendations. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

As we discussed on Tuesday morning in the teleconference, we would like to reallocate within the current budget $9,500 to the survey of local election officials. This will raise the budget for the survey to $24,500 from $15,000.

The additional funding will permit us to double the sample of local election officials from 200 to 400. The larger sample will allow more detailed comparisons between the experience of local election officials in states that offered some form of provisional ballot before HAVA and those that did not. This comparison is a topic of special interest identified in the contract.

The increase of $9,500 is based on an estimate made by SRBI, the contractor that will actually administer the interviews. I can furnish you with a copy of the estimate if you like. We believe the additional funds will improve significantly our ability to provide relevant analysis to EAC on this important issue.

This e-mail will reiterate our conversation of this morning.

After a close review of your e-mail of July 12th, EAC staff determined that it is appropriate for the Eagleton/Moritz team to proceed with the composition of its Peer Review Group as it deems suitable and necessary. EAC staff will assume that your team is satisfied that it has created a politically and ideologically balanced group to review your work.

EAC staff, the Commissioners, the Advisory and Standards Boards will, we are certain, have opportunities to review the findings and analyses that your team creates, at critical junctures during the process.

Subject Invitation to Tom Wilkey

Karen,

For your information, Ruth Mandel, Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics, sent the letter below to Tom Wilkey this afternoon. It is an invitation for him to meet with the project team in August at Rutgers.

Have a good weekend.

Tom O'Neill

I'm writing on behalf of my colleagues at the Eagleton Institute of Politics to send congratulations on your appointment as Executive Director of the Election Assistance Commission and to extend a warm invitation for you to visit the Institute to meet our research team. The Eagleton Institute and our partners at the Moritz College of Law are delighted to have been selected to provide research services to the EAC for developing guidance to the states on provisional voting and voter identification requirements.

The Eagleton and Moritz team conducting the research and analysis would appreciate an opportunity to discuss the project with you so that we can gain a full understanding of your perspective on this work and make our research as useful as possible for you, the EAC, the states, and eventually the voters.

I understand that you continue to travel between New York and Washington, which would make a visit to Eagleton simple to arrange. Since the Rutgers campus in New Brunswick is not far from the Metropark Amtrak station, we could easily pick you up at Metropark and return you at the end of the visit. Our Moritz partners would also attend.

The agenda for such a meeting could include a briefing on our progress, discussion of challenges to be met, and a conversation about your goals for this research. We believe that the earlier in the research process we can arrange to meet, the better for the project.

I hope you agree that a meeting in the near future would be useful, and that you like the idea of a visit to the research site. If so, we can search for convenient dates in the next few weeks, perhaps starting with the possibility that you would be available on August 12, 15, or 16.

We all look forward to continuing our work together on this worthwhile project.

Director, The Eagleton Institute of Politics

Subject Re: Request for reallocation within existing budget

Tom-

EAC contract staff indicate that the reallocation you propose can occur and that all other such reallocations that are made from your project budget for this contract budget can be done at your own discretion.

From a contractual standpoint, EAC's only concern is that Eagleton is able to accomplish all of the activities and provide all of the deliverables that have been set forth in your contract.

Karen, I'll survey the group about the best time for a conference call. The 24th does not look like a good time. We have a teleconference with the Peer Review Group on the Voter ID paper scheduled for Feb. 22, and therefore would be hard-pressed to review the précis of your comments in time for a discussion on the 24th. The next week would be more promising, perhaps Tuesday, Feb 28 in the afternoon.

We still plan to deliver the Voter ID paper to you the first week in March.

Subject: Peer Review Group

Carol,

After our discussion in New York, you asked me to put in writing our response to the EAC's suggestions for expanding the number and kinds of groups that would review and comment on our work. I hope after your review of this response, we will be able to quickly recruit a balanced Peer Review Group (PRG) and move ahead as the schedule in our work plan indicates. Attached is a revised list of the members we propose for appointment to the PRG. We will probably not be able to persuade all of them to serve, but the number and range of views included on the proposed list should ensure that the resulting group is well-balanced.

Tom

RESPONSE TO EAC RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL REVIEW GROUPS

EAC's Recommendations for the PRG

Karen Lynn-Dyson reported this response from the EAC commissioners to our proposal for the composition of the PRG.

1. Not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG
2. Create a "tiered process" of review in which:
 - A. The PRG will prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions.
 - B. PRG's analysis would be vetted by a defined/select group of local election officials.
 - C. A defined/select group of advocacy organizations would review the comments of the local election officials

013728

D. Empanel a final focus group of local election officials, advocates and academics for an overall, interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Project Team Response

Creating three new committees to the review process to supplement the work of the Peer Review Group (PRG) is possible, but would add at least 8 weeks –and possibly 12 weeks-- to our completion of the guidance document on provisional voting. We believe this delay would risk limiting the value of this project for the 2006 election. In addition, the change would add at least $30,000 to the cost of our work. (See the attached table showing the possible effect on our work plan, and note the optimistic assumptions such as the ability to hold a hearing the week after Christmas.). If the same groups were to be engaged in reviewing our work on Voter ID, the time for that work would also have to be stretched at a similar increased cost.

This additional cost and the added time might be worthwhile. . . if the new layers of review were to produce a consensus on how to strengthen the research, sharpen the analysis, and increase the relevance of the Guidance Document. Our team concluded, however, that additional review groups were unlikely to achieve these results.

PRG focuses on quality of research

We believe that our research would be strengthened by a balanced Peer Review Group that will focus on the design of the research and our conduct of it. Based on the EAC's recommendation, we have revised the composition of the PRG to include additional, well-recognized authorities in the field whose perspective is generally agreed to be conservative.

The PRG will focus on the strength of the research design and the quality of our analysis, not on the politics of our recommendations for the guidance document. The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Project Team focuses on analysis and recommendations

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions." That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC's Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a "defined/select" group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the "defined/select" group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a "defined/select" group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC's comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC's comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. And further revision will follow the public hearing and comments. The EAC and individual Commissioners can always seek comment informally on our analysis or recommendations. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

RESPONSE TO EAC RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL REVIEW GROUPS

EAC's Recommendations for the PRG

Karen Lynn-Dyson reported this response from the EAC commissioners to our proposal for the composition of the PRG.

1. Not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG
2. Create a "tiered process" of review in which:
 - A. The PRG will prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions.
 - B. PRG's analysis would be vetted by a defined/select group of local election officials.
 - C. A defined/select group of advocacy organizations would review the comments of the local election officials
 - D. Empanel a final focus group of local election officials, advocates and academics for an overall, interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Project Team Response

Creating three new committees to the review process to supplement the work of the Peer Review Group (PRG) is possible, but would add at least 8 weeks --and possibly 12 weeks-- to our completion of the guidance document on provisional voting. We believe this delay would risk limiting the value of this project for the 2006 election. In addition, the change would add at least $30,000 to the cost of our work. (See the attached table showing the possible effect on our work plan, and note the optimistic assumptions such as the ability to hold a hearing the week after Christmas.) This additional cost and the added time might be worthwhile. . . if the new layers of review were to produce a consensus on how to strengthen the research, sharpen the analysis, and increase the relevance of the Guidance Document. Our team concluded, however, that additional review groups were unlikely to achieve these results.

PRG focuses on quality of research

We believe that our research would be strengthened by a balanced Peer Review Group that will focus on the design of the research and our conduct of it. Based on the EAC's recommendation, we have revised the composition of the PRG to include additional, well-recognized authorities in the field whose perspective is generally agreed to be conservative.

The PRG will focus on the strength of the research design and the quality of our analysis, not on the politics of our recommendations for the guidance document. The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions." That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC's Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a "defined/select" group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the "defined/select" group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a "defined/select" group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC's comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC's comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. And further revision will follow the public hearing and comments. The EAC and individual Commissioners can always seek comment informally on our analysis or recommendations. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

PROPOSED MEMBERSJuly6.doc

REVISED
PROPOSED MEMBERS OF PEER REVIEW GROUP

July 6, 2005

Role of the Peer Review Group

Members of the Peer Review Group will review the research design for the project, including the survey of local election officials, the analysis of Voter ID regime on turnout, the state-by-state narrative of developments in provisional voting and voter identification, and the compilation and analysis of statutes, administrative regulations, and case law affecting provisional voting and voter identification. They will also review the report on Analysis and Alternatives. They may review the draft of the Preliminary Guidance Document before it goes to the Board of Advisors for comment.

Members of the group will be respected authorities in their fields and represent a range of opinions and perspectives, although their views on policy will be less important to the study than their views on the quality of the research on which policy recommendations are based.

Ideally, the group would meet once, but even that may not be possible to arrange given the tight time period for the project, the demanding schedules of the members, and their wide dispersal across the county. They will function largely by reviewing written work and making written comments on it. The timing of their involvement is indicated on the work plan.

Karen,

John and I reviewed your recent email today, and he asked me to respond.

Important to us is a clear commitment now by the EAC to schedule a presentation of our Voter ID research at the May meeting of the Advisory Board, if its review is required before the paper is published and presented at the EAC's public meeting in June. Your email made no mention of that June public meeting. Our schedule (submitted with the request for the no-cost extension) —and our previous discussion with you—treats that meeting as the key event that will conclude our research under this contract. Therefore, we also look for an explicit understanding that a presentation of our reports will be included in the agenda for that public meeting.

We can deliver a final report on Provisional Voting by May 5 and will be prepared for whatever role we might play at the May 24 meeting of the Advisory Board.

The team is looking forward to a discussion of Tim Vercellotti's revised statistical analysis of Voter ID with the academic reviewers you are in the process of identifying during the week of May 8. Knowing the specific date and time of that discussion in the next day or so would facilitate the participation of appropriate members of our Peer Review Group in that conversation.

John and Tom-

A couple of items related to timing over the next several weeks:

1. Is it possible to get your final report on Provisional Voting by COB May 5? If so, I can get this to the four Commissioners for final review and approval. It will then be ready to present to the EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Board at the May 24 meeting.

2. As we discussed I have been working to identify a small group of academics(three or so) who will be available to review the Voter ID paper the week of May 8. The focus of the review will be on Tim's research methodology and statistical analysis. I am fairly certain that this review can be done via conference call , preferably on May 11 or May 12. This would assume each of the reviewers will have spent time reviewing the paper, taking extensive notes and summarizing his or her comments. I expect that you all, Tim, Mike Alvarez and any others from your peer review panel, who have an expertise in research and statistics, will be available for the conference call, as well?

3. While I expect you will be able to have your final Voter ID paper to me sometime during the week of May 15, it is not clear whether or not the paper will be presented to the EAC Standards and Advisory Boards the following week. As you know, the paper contains some controversial information, so the Commissioners may elect to spend additional time reviewing the findings among themselves, and before it is formally presented to our Boards.

Let me know if this schedule works for you all.

Subject Review of new Voter ID Analysis

History:

 This message has been replied to

Karen,

Tim Vercellotti and I have a proposal to meet your schedule for a conference call on May 11 with Jonathan Nagler, Jan Leighley, and Adam Berinsky, as well as a few members of our Peer Review Group.

Tim's revision will not be complete until May 4. We propose to send this new analysis immediately to you for distribution to the reviewers that day. I will need several days more to incorporate Tim's new data in our summary report.

Since the reviewers will be focused on our methodology, they will need several days to digest the new statistical analysis. In the meantime, I will plug the the new statistical conclusions into our report. We will send the revised summary report to you for distribution to the reviewers on May 9, after our team has looked it over to ensure that it reflects Tim's work accurately and that its policy conclusions and recommendations are well supported by the statistical analysis.

The reviewers will then have a couple of days to satisfy themselves about those same issues, and we can meet the tight time schedule.

This schedule is demanding, but meeting it is important to us so that our report is ready to be discussed with the Advisory Board at its meeting on May 24.

Please let me know if this timetable works for you.

How about if we ask Eagleton for an estimate of the percent of costs they would attribute to the Voter ID portion of the study?

That way we can say the Voter ID study cost approximately X dollars.
(And deductively, the Prov Vote study cost X dollars.)

Commissioner,

Per your question about how much of the contract was actually spent on voter ID research vs provisional voting... I have yet to find the answer. I have reviewed the RFP and the invoices, but so far, it does not appear that these tasks were tracked separately. Karen and I continue to look into this, but I wanted to let you know what we've found so far.

Well, I certainly wouldn't want us to do anything inappropriate. And I don't know the regs and rules on what we can and cannot ask.

What do you suppose the problem might be with our asking that question?

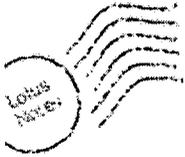

We received 2 distinct products and we find that it would be helpful for us to know what we spent on each effort. We aren't questioning their record keeping, we aren't asking them to reconstruct or research their records, we aren't asking them for an itemization, just an estimate.

The problem is that EAC is saying we spent 500 thou on the Voter ID study. That is wrong info. We need to stop saying that and I hope that has not been said publically, otherwise we need to correct the record ASAP.

And we also did not spend 500 thou on the Provisional Voting study. So, I guess we just have to say we spent 500 thou for both and when asked what we spent for one, we say we don't know. ??

Subject More thoughts on Eagleton draft report

After having read the Eagleton draft report, I have some thoughts and questions:

I am troubled by the concept that Eagleton compared states as if they were equal. They assume that, all factors being equal, that the voter turn out in each state would be equal. I am not at all certain that this is the case. Further, there is no evidence that the staticians actually compared previous years' turnout in the same state to determine whether 2004 was some sort of anomaly for that state (high or low). Long story short, I am very skeptical of the data that they used to draw conclusions. We should ask questions about what data they used, how they parsed it, why they used the data, what other data could have been used to provide better, more reliable results.

My second concern is how they (statistically speaking) differentiate between a minimum requirement (i.e. state name, photo i.d., etc) and a maximum requirement (i.e., state name, photo i.d., etc.). It makes no sense to me how they could possibly arrive at a different percentage for these requirement levels.

My third issue is the persistent use of the phrases "ballot access" and "ballot integrity" without some definition or some explanation of what those concepts are.

The EAC has identified three academics who are going to serve as peer reviewers of the Eagleton Voter ID paper and research.

They are Jonathan Nagler of New York University, Jan Leighley, University of Arizona, and Adam Berinsky of MIT.

They are ready to review the documents as soon as they are available.

I would like to them one week to review the material and then have a joint conference call on Thursday, May 11, in which we would all have an opportunity to discuss the research methodology and statistical analysis, along with general comments and suggestions.

If you are able to get to me the paper and the supporting data analysis, I will distribute to the documents ASAP.

Also let me know, if you would, your availability on May 11 to do this conference all.

I anticipate that it will last approximately 90 minutes.

You'll recall that we discussed the fact that the peer review group who Eagleton has assembled do not have the sufficient technical expertise to give us the expert/technical advice we need on the statistical analysis of the Voter ID piece. Only two persons on Eagleton's peer review group have a requisite research and statistical background and knowledge.

You may also remember that Mike told me that he thought that the paper needed an additional set of eyes and review by academics with a background and expertise in election statistics and analysis. When I initially proposed a review panel of six you said that was too many; we agreed that I would find three persons to do the review and that we would pay them a small honoraria for doing the review.

Dear Adam Berinsky

On behalf of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC), thank you in advance for agreeing to assist us with the review of research conducted by the Eagleton Institute of Politics on voter identification. By Friday, May 5, 2006, you will receive, in electronic form, the research paper and relevant data analysis which supports the paper's findings. Through this independent review by a small group of experts familiar with elections data and research we are seeking feedback on:

- The research methodology which was used to support the paper's conclusions
- The specific statistical applications which were used to analyze the data and arrive at various conclusions

If there are alternate methodological and statistical approaches to analyzing the data on voter identification, and if there is other data on voter identification that you think should have been included in the analysis, please be certain to note this in your comments.

On May 11, 2006 EAC will conduct a 60-90 minute phone call with key Eagleton Institute staff responsible for the research, members of Eagleton's peer review group and the EAC-identified reviewers who have been asked to consider the research. Through this dialogue EAC hopes to gather varying perspectives and insights on the research strategies and methods that were employed by Eagleton. As a result of this conversation, EAC anticipates that some revisions will be made to the Eagleton research paper. This paper is scheduled to be presented to EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Boards in late May.

While EAC agency policy does not allow us to provide you with financial compensation for your review of this research we greatly appreciate your willingness to assist us with this important task. We believe that the research findings we will provide on voter identification are important and will most certainly be enhanced by your insights and expertise.

Subject Fw: Revised Voter ID Analysis

Colleagues-

Attached please find the data analysis on voter identification requirements which the Eagleton Institute of Politics has prepared for the U.S. Election Assistance Commission.

As you will note from Eagleton's Project Manager, Tom O'Neill, the voter id paper which incorporates this analysis, and will be presented to the public in June, is forthcoming early next week.

EAC's Contract's Assistant, Aletha Barrington, will be in touch with each of you to provide specifics regarding the May 11, 11:30 am conference call, in which we will discuss the papers.

In the meantime, many thanks again for agreeing, on such short notice, to lend your expertise to this effort.

Subject Revised Voter ID Analysis

Karen,

Attached is Tim Vercellotti's Voter ID analysis revised to use Citizen Voting Age population as the base for turnout calculations and to take account of comments or issues raised by the EAC and our Peer Review Group. This draft is for distribution to the reviewers who will meet by teleconference on May 11, at, we understand, 11:30 a.m.

You are receiving this at the same time that it is being distributed to the Eagleton-Moritz team so that the new reviewers will have a week to prepare for our conversation on the 11th. Early next week you will receive a revised summary paper on Voter ID that incorporates the new data and findings in Tim's revised analysis. That too will be for distribution to the new reviewers.

Analysis of Effects of Voter Identification Requirements on Turnout
Tim Vercellotti
Eagleton Institute of Politics
Rutgers University
May 4, 2006

Introduction

A key area of disagreement in the policy debate over voter identification requirements concerns whether such requirements dampen voter turnout. Opponents of voter identification laws argue that they constitute an institutional barrier to voting, particularly among the poor, African-Americans, Hispanics, the elderly and people with disabilities (Baxter and Galloway 2005, Electionline.org 2002, Jacobs 2005, Young 2006). This argument holds that voter identification requirements create an extra demand on voters, and thus may discourage some of them from participating in elections. Further, critics of voter identification requirements contend that the effect is greater for some specific types of requirements. For example, critics argue that requiring voters to produce government-issued photo identification on Election Day is more demanding than, say, requiring that they state their names at the polling place. Supporters of voter identification requirements, on the other hand, argue that the requirements are necessary to combat voter fraud, safeguard the integrity of the electoral process, and engender faith in the electoral process among citizens (Young 2006).

This report examines the potential variation in turnout rates based on the type of voter identification requirement in place in each state on Election Day 2004. It draws on two sets of data – aggregate turnout data at the county level for each state, as compiled by the Eagleton Institute of Politics, and individual-level survey data included in the November 2004 Current Population Survey conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau. Classification of voter identification requirements comes from a review of state statutes conducted by the Moritz College of Law at the Ohio State University.

Types of voter identification requirements

Based on research performed for this study by the Moritz College of Law, states had one of five types of requirements in place on Election Day 2004. Upon arrival at polling places, voters had to: state their names (nine states); sign their names (13 states and the District of Columbia); match their signature to a signature on file with the local election board (eight states); provide a form of identification that did not necessarily include a photo (15 states); or provide a photo identification (five states).¹ It was then possible to code the states according to these requirements, and test the assumption that voter identification requirements would pose an increasingly demanding requirement in this order: stating one's name, signing one's name, matching one's signature to a signature on file, providing a form of identification, and providing a form of photo identification.

But election laws in numerous states offer exceptions to these requirements if individuals lack the necessary form of identification, and laws in those states set a minimum standard that a voter must meet in order to vote using a regular ballot (as opposed to a provisional ballot). Thus it is also possible to categorize states based on the minimum requirement for voting with a regular ballot. In 2004 the categories were somewhat different compared to the maximum requirement, in that none of the states required photo identification as a minimum standard for voting with a regular ballot. Four states, however, required voters to swear an affidavit as to their identity (Florida, Indiana, Louisiana, and North Dakota). The five categories for minimum requirements were: state name (12 states), sign name (14 states and the District of Columbia), match one's signature to a signature on file (six states), provide a non-photo identification (14 states), or swear an affidavit (four states). For the purposes of this analysis I treated the array of minimum identification requirements also in terms of increasing demand on the voter: state name, sign name, match signature, provide non-photo identification, and, given the potential legal consequences for providing false information, swearing an affidavit.

Estimating turnout among citizens in the voting-age population

This report examines turnout among U.S. citizens of voting age in both the aggregate- and the individual-level data. Determining citizenship status in the individual-level data simply involved restricting the analyses to individuals who identified themselves as citizens in the November 2004 Current Population Survey. (Those who said they were not citizens did not have the opportunity to answer the supplemental voting questions contained in the Current Population Survey.)

In the aggregate data, determining the percentage of the voting-age population that has U.S. citizenship posed a methodological challenge. The Census Bureau gathers information on the citizenship status of adults ages 18 and older only during the decennial census. While the Census Bureau provides annual estimates of the population to account for changes between decennial censuses, the bureau does not offer estimates for the proportion of the adult population who are citizens as part of the annual estimates. To address this issue I estimated the 2004 citizen voting-age population for each county using a method reported in the analysis of the 2004 Election Day Survey conducted for the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (U.S. Election Assistance Commission, 2005). I calculated the percentage of the 2000 voting-age population who were citizens in 2000, and applied that percentage to the July 1, 2004 estimates for voting-age population in each county. In other words, I assumed that the percentage of the voting-age population that had U.S. citizenship in 2004 was similar to the percentage of the voting-age population who were citizens in 2000.²

² McDonald and Popkin (2001) recommend an even more stringent approach to voter turnout calculations. They point out that voting-age population estimates include adults who are ineligible to vote (such as convicted felons), and the estimates overlook eligible citizens living overseas. While estimates of the voting-eligible population are available at the state level, I was unable to find such estimates for individual counties, which provide the unit of analysis for the aggregate data analyzed here.

Analysis of aggregate data

If one treats maximum voter identification requirements as an ordinal variable, with photo identification as the most demanding requirement, one finds some statistical support for the premise that as the level of required proof increases, turnout declines. Averaging across counties in each state, statewide turnout is negatively correlated with maximum voter identification requirements ($r = -.30, p < .0001$). In considering the array of minimum requirements, with affidavit as the most demanding requirement, voter identification also is negatively correlated with turnout ($r = -.20, p < .0001$). Breaking down the turnout rates by type of requirement reveals in greater detail the relationship between voter identification requirements and voter turnout.

The aggregate data show that 60.9 percent of the estimated citizen voting age population voted in 2004. Differences in voter turnout at the state level in 2004 varied based on voter identification requirements. Taking into account the maximum requirements, an average of 64.6 percent of the voting age population turned out in states that required voters to state their names, compared to 58.1 percent in states that required photo identification. A similar trend emerged when considering minimum requirements. Sixty-three percent of the voting age population turned out in states requiring voters to state their names, compared to 60.1 percent in states that required an affidavit from voters.

Voter identification requirements alone, however, do not determine voter turnout. Multivariate models that take into account other predictors of turnout can paint a more complete picture of the relationship between voter identification requirements and turnout. I estimated the effects of voter identification requirements in multivariate models that also took into account the electoral context in 2004 and demographic characteristics of the population in each county. I coded the voter identification requirements on a scale of one to five, with one representing the least demanding form of identification and five representing the most demanding form of identification. To capture electoral context I included whether the county was in a presidential battleground state (any state in which the margin of victory for the winning candidate was five percent or less), and whether the county was in a state with a competitive race for governor and/or the U.S. Senate (also using the threshold of a margin of victory of five percent or less). Drawing from U.S. Census projections for 2003, I included the percentage of the voting-age population in each county that was Hispanic or African-American to control for ethnicity and race. I controlled for age using the 2003 Census projection for the percentage of county residents age 65 and older, and I controlled for socioeconomic status by including the percentage of individuals who fell below the poverty line in each county in the 2000 Census.

I estimated a series of random intercept models to account for the likelihood that data from counties were correlated within each state (for further explanation of random intercept and other multilevel models, see Bryk and Raudenbush 1992, Luke 2004, Singer 1998).³ The dependent variable in each model was voter turnout at the county level, with turnout calculated as the percentage of the estimated citizen voting-age population that voted in the 2004 election.

Turning first to an analysis using the maximum identification requirements, those requirements had a small and negative effect on turnout in 2004 controlling for electoral context and demographic factors. Both contextual factors (whether the county was in a state that was a battleground state and whether that state had a competitive race for governor and/or U.S. Senate) increased voter turnout. As the percentage of senior citizens in the county increased, so did turnout. The percentage of African-Americans in the county exerted a positive effect on voter turnout, and the percentage of individuals living below the poverty line had a negative effect. The effect of the percentage of Hispanic adults in the county on turnout fell just short of statistical significance ($p = .05$).

I then sought to test the hypothesis that voter identification requirements dampen turnout among minorities and the poor, a claim voiced by some critics of the requirements. To test this idea I incorporated a series of interactions between the maximum voter identification requirements and the percentage of African-Americans, Hispanics, and poor individuals in the counties. The interaction involving African-Americans was not significant, but those involving Hispanics and poor individuals were significant.⁴ In addition, adding the interactions to the model resulted in the percentage of Hispanics in the population having a direct and negative effect on turnout. The interactions suggest that voter identification requirements have a greater effect for Hispanics and those living below the poverty line. A chi-square test of the difference in the deviance for each model (represented by $-2 \log$ likelihood in Table 2), shows that the model with interactions provides a better fit to the data ($p < 0.005$).

I also estimated the effects of the minimum voter identification requirements holding constant the effects of electoral context and the demographic variables.

The effects of the minimum requirements fell short of statistical significance ($p = 0.08$). The battleground state variable continued to exert a positive influence on turnout, while the presence of a competitive race for governor and/or U.S. Senate had no statistically significant effect. As in the maximum identification requirement model, as the percentage of the population that is poor increased, turnout declined. As the percentage of elderly increased, so did turnout. The proportion of African-Americans in the population had a positive effect on turnout, while the percentage of Hispanics did not affect turnout.

⁴ The interactions are labeled in Tables 2 and 3 as VID*African-American, VID*Hispanic, and VID*Poverty. To calculate the effects of voter identification requirements for a specific group, one must add the estimates for voter identification, the group, and the interaction. Doing so for Hispanic adults results in an estimate of $-0.13 [-0.03 (\text{voter id}) - 0.13 (\text{Hispanic}) + 0.03 (\text{voter id X Hispanic})]$.

Adding interactive effects to the model resulted in a statistically significant and negative effect of minimum voter identification requirements on turnout. The percentage of Hispanic adults in the county had a significant and negative effect on turnout, and the percentage of individuals below the poverty line continued to have a negative effect. Interactions between the percentages of Hispanics and those below the poverty line and minimum voter identification requirements also were significant. The percentage of African-Americans in the county and the interaction between African-Americans and voter identification requirements were not significant. A chi-square test for the difference in fit between the two models showed that the model with interactions provides a better fit to the data ($p < .025$).

Analysis of the aggregate data at the county level generates some support for the hypothesis that as the demands of voter identification requirements increase, turnout declines. This is particularly so for counties with concentrations of Hispanic residents or individuals who live below the poverty line. But aggregate data cannot fully capture the individual demographic factors that may figure into the decision to turn out to vote. For example, previous research has found that education is a powerful determinant of turnout (Wolfinger and Rosenstone 1980, but see also Nagler 1991).⁵ Married individuals also are more likely to vote than those who are not married (Alvarez and Ansolabehere 2002; Alvarez, Nagler and Wilson 2004; Fisher, Kenny, and Morton 1993). To fully explore the effects of voter identification requirements on turnout, it is important to examine individual-level data as well.

Individual-level analysis

Individual-level turnout data exists in the November 2004 Current Population Survey conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau. The Census Bureau conducts the CPS monthly to measure unemployment and other workforce data, but the bureau adds a battery of voter participation questions to the November survey in even-numbered years to coincide with either a presidential or midterm Congressional election.

One of the advantages of the CPS is the sheer size of the sample. The survey's Voting and Registration Supplement consisted of interviews, either by telephone or in person, with 96,452 respondents.⁶ The large sample size permits analyses of smaller groups, such as Black or Hispanic voters or voters with less than a high school education. The analyses reported here are based on reports from self-described registered voters. I omitted those who said they were not registered to vote. I also excluded those who said they cast absentee ballots because the identification requirements for absentee ballots may differ from those required when one votes in person. In addition, I eliminated from the sample respondents who said they were not U.S.

⁵ A reviewer for an earlier version of this paper recommended adding an education variable to the aggregate model. One version of the aggregate model not reported here included the percentage of adults in the county who had at least a college degree. The measure was highly collinear with the percentage of residents living below the poverty line, necessitating removal of the college degree variable from the model.

⁶ It is important to note that the Census Bureau allows respondents to answer on behalf of themselves and others in the household during the interview. While proxy reporting of voter turnout raises the possibility of inaccurate reports concerning whether another member of the household voted, follow-up interviews with those for whom a proxy report had been given in the November 1984 CPS showed 99 percent agreement between the proxy report and the information given by the follow-up respondent (U.S. Census Bureau 1990).

The dependent variable in these analyses is whether a respondent said he or she voted in the November 2004 election.⁷ As in the analysis of aggregate data, I coded voter identification requirements for each respondent's state of residence on a scale of one to five, with one representing the least demanding requirement (stating one's name) and five representing the most demanding requirement (photo identification or affidavit).

In addition to the voter identification requirements, the models include two other state-level factors that might have influenced turnout in 2004: whether the state was considered a battleground state in the presidential election, and whether there was a gubernatorial and/or U.S. Senate race in the state (see Alvarez and Ansolabehere 2002, Alvarez et al. 2004, and Kenny et al. 1993 for similar approaches). As in the aggregate data analysis, the threshold that determined whether the state was a battleground state or had a competitive statewide race was a margin of victory of five percent or less. At the individual level, I controlled for gender, age in years, education, household income, and dummy variables representing whether a voter was Black/non-Hispanic, Hispanic, or another non-white race (with white/non-Hispanic voters as the omitted category for reference purposes).⁸ Drawing on previous research on voting behavior, I also controlled for whether an individual was employed, or at least a member of the workforce (as opposed to being a full-time student, a homemaker, or retired). Both employment and workforce membership have been shown to be positive predictors of turnout (see Mitchell and Wlezien 1995). Marital status, whether one is a native-born citizen and residential mobility also have emerged as significant predictors of turnout (Alvarez and Ansolabehere 2002, Alvarez et al. 2004, Kenney et al. 1993, Wolfinger and Rosenstone 1980). I included in the model variables for whether a respondent was married (coded 1 if yes, 0 otherwise), and whether one was a native-born citizen (coded 1 if yes, 0 otherwise). I measured residential mobility by coding for whether the respondent had moved to a new address in the six months prior to the interview (coded 1 if yes, 0 otherwise).

Results

The dependent variable is whether a respondent said he or she voted in the November 2004 election (coded 1 for yes, 0 for no). I estimated models using probit analysis, which

⁷ The U.S. Census Bureau reported, based on the November 2004 CPS, that 89 percent of those who identified themselves as registered voters said they voted in 2004 (U.S. Census Bureau 2005). Previous research has shown that, generally speaking, some survey respondents overstate their incidence of voting. Researchers speculate that over-reports may be due to the social desirability that accompanies saying one has done his or her civic duty, or a reluctance to appear outside the mainstream of American political culture (U.S. Census Bureau 1990). It is also possible that voting is an indication of civic engagement that predisposes voters to agree to complete surveys at a higher rate than non-voters (Flanigan and Zingale 2002). Hence the voter turnout rates reported in the CPS tend to be up to 10 percentage points higher than the actual turnout rate for the nation (Flanigan and Zingale 2002). Even with this caveat, however, the CPS serves as a widely accepted source of data on voting behavior.

⁸ Asian-Americans are included in the "other non-white races" category. In response to a request from officials at the U.S. Election Assistance Commission who had read an earlier version of this paper and were curious about the experiences of Asian-Americans, I ran models using Asian-Americans as a separate category in addition to the models presented here. Voter identification requirements did not have a statistically significant effect on whether Asian-American voters said they turned out in the 2004 election.

calculates the effects of independent variables on the probability that an event occurred – in this case whether a respondent said he or she voted. I estimated the models using robust standard errors to control for correlated error terms for observations from within the same state.

The two models in Table 4 use either the maximum or minimum voter identification requirements in each state. The two models generate virtually identical results. Voter identification requirements exert a statistically significant, negative effect on whether survey respondents said they had voted in 2004. Of the other state factors, only the competitiveness of the presidential race had a significant effect on turnout. In terms of demographic influences, African-American voters were more likely than white voters to say they had cast a ballot, while those of other non-white races were less likely than white voters to say they had turned out. Hispanic voters were not statistically different from white voters in terms of reported turnout. Consistent with previous research, age, education, income, and marital status all were positive predictors of voting. Women also were more likely to say they voted than men. Those who had moved within six months before the interview were less likely to say they had voted.

While the probit models provide statistical support for the influence of voter identification requirements and other variables on turnout, probit coefficients do not lend themselves to intuitive interpretation. Another common approach in studies of election requirements is to examine how the predicted probability of voter turnout would vary as election requirements vary. I used the probit coefficients to calculate the predicted probability of voting at each level of voter identification requirements while holding all other independent variables in the models at their means.⁹ I calculated the probabilities taking into account both maximum and minimum requirements, with photo identification serving as the most demanding of the maximum requirements and affidavits as the most demanding minimum requirement.

Allowing the voter identification requirement to vary while holding constant all other variables in the model showed that the predicted probability of turnout ranged from 0.912 for stating one's name to 0.887 for photo identification under the maximum requirements. In other words, the probability of voting dropped with each level of voter identification requirement, with a total drop of .025, or 2.5 percent, across the five types of identification.¹⁰ When taking into account the minimum requirement for identification, the probability showed a similar decline, with a slightly larger total drop of 3.3 percent.

Among the key variables of interest in the debate over voter identification requirements are race, age, income, and education. Given the large sample size (54,973 registered voters), it was possible to break the sample into sub-samples along those demographic lines to explore variation in predicted probability by group. I disaggregated the sample by the variable of interest, omitting that variable while I re-ran the probit model with the remaining predictors of voter turnout, including the voter identification requirements.¹¹ If the analysis showed that the voter identification requirements had a statistically significant effect on turnout, I used the probit coefficients from the model to calculate the predicted probability of voting for each group across the five requirements while holding the other variables in the model constant.

¹⁰ The voter turnout percentages may seem disproportionately high compared to the turnout rates reported in the aggregate data analysis. It is important to consider that the turnout rates in the aggregate data were a proportion of all citizens of voting-age population, while the turnout rates for the individual-level data are the proportion of only registered voters who said they voted.

Both the maximum and minimum identification requirements had negative and statistically significant effects for White/Non-Hispanic voters. Allowing the requirements to vary from stating one's name to providing photo identification or an affidavit showed drops of 2.5 percent and 3.2 percent respectively in the predicted probability of voting. The identification requirements had no effect on the probability of Black/Non-Hispanics voting, but the minimum identification requirements had a comparatively sizable effect on voter turnout among Hispanics. The predicted probability of Hispanics voting ranged from 87 percent if stating one's name was the required form of identification to 77.3 percent if a voter would have to provide an affidavit in order to vote, a difference of 9.7 percent.

The effects of voter identification requirements also varied by age, with the greatest variation occurring among voters ages 18 to 24.

Voters in that age group had a predicted probability of 83.9 percent when the maximum requirement was stating one's name, and the probability dropped 8.9 percentage points if voters would have to provide photo identification. The range was from 83.1 percent to 75.4 percent under the minimum requirements. The gap in probability narrowed in older age groups (4.8 percent for the maximum requirements and 5.8 percent for the minimum requirements for those ages 25 to 44; 1.8 percent for the minimum requirements for those ages 45 to 64, and 2.4 percent for the minimum requirements for those ages 65 and older).

Breaking down the 18- to 24-year-old age group by race shed additional light on the effects of voter identification requirements on specific groups.

The gap in predicted probability that White/Non-Hispanic voters in the 18- to 24-year-old category would turn out was 9.2 percent when the identification requirements varied from stating one's name to providing photo identification. The gap was 7.8 percent when taking into account the minimum requirements. The effects of maximum voter identification requirements also were statistically significant for African-Americans in the 18- to 24-year-old age group, with a gap in the predicted probability of voting of 10.6 percent. Maximum and minimum voter identification requirements were not a significant predictor of voting among Hispanics ages 18 to 24.

Variation also emerged along the lines of income, with the effects of voter identification requirements varying to a greater extent for voters in households below the poverty line compared to those living above the poverty line.¹²

While the maximum set of requirements did not have a statistically significant effect for voters living below the poverty line, the minimum set of requirements had a significant and negative effect. The probability of voting was .784 for poor voters if they would have to identify themselves by giving their name, and the probability declined to .731 if they would have to provide an affidavit attesting to their identity. Both the maximum and minimum sets of requirements had a significant and negative effect on voters living above the poverty line, but the difference in probability across the effects was narrower (2.3 percent for the maximum requirements and 3.1 percent for the minimum requirements). Given that political discourse about voter identification requirements includes concerns about the effects of the requirements on poor and minority voters, I also ran probit analyses for sub-samples of white and minority voters who fell below the poverty line. The voter identification requirements did not exert statistically significant effects on turnout among poor White/Non-Hispanic and Hispanic voters, but did have a significant effect on Black/Non-Hispanic voters who were below the poverty line.¹³ Allowing the maximum voting requirement to vary from the least to the most demanding, the probability that African-American voters below the poverty line said they had voted dropped by 7.5 percent.

The effects of voter identification requirements varied across education levels as well, with those lowest in education demonstrating the widest variation in probabilities as identification requirements ranged from least to most demanding.

Registered voters who had less than a high school education had a 77.5 percent probability of voting if the maximum requirement would be stating one's name, and a 70.8 percent probability if they would have to provide photo identification under the maximum requirement, a difference of 6.7 percent. The difference from the lowest to the highest requirement among the minimum requirements was 7.4 percent. The difference in probabilities ranged from 3.3 percent for the maximum requirements to 4.5 percent for the minimum requirements for voters with a high school diploma. The range of effects of voter identification requirements was smaller among those with higher levels of education (and non-existent for one category – voters with some college education).

¹³ The lack of significant effects for poor Hispanic voters is in contrast to the results from the aggregate data analysis. The sub-sample of poor Hispanic voters was small (n = 491), which may have contributed to the lack of statistical significance.

Discussion and conclusion

The results presented here provide evidence that as the level of demand associated with voter identification requirements increases, voter turnout declines. This point emerged from both the aggregate data and the individual-level data, although not always for both the maximum and minimum sets of requirements. The overall effect for all registered voters was fairly small, but still statistically significant.

The effects of voter identification requirements were more pronounced for specific subgroups. Hispanic voters and the poor appeared to be less likely to vote as the level of required identification became more demanding, according to both the aggregate and the individual-level data. In the individual-level data, for Hispanic voters, the probability of voting dropped by 9.7 percent across the various levels of minimum identification requirements. Survey respondents living in poor households were 5.3 percent less likely to vote as the requirements varied from stating one's name to attesting to one's identity in an affidavit. African-American voters from households below the poverty line were 7.5 percent less likely to vote as the maximum requirements varied from stating one's name to providing photo identification.

Effects of voter requirements also varied with education. Registered voters who had not graduated from high school were 6.7 percent less likely to say they voted as the maximum requirements ranged from stating one's name to providing photo identification. When considering the minimum requirements, those with less than a high school education were 7.4 percent less likely to say they voted if the requirement was an affidavit as opposed to stating one's name. Age was also a key factor, with voters ages 18 to 24 being 7.7 percent to 8.9 percent less likely to vote as the requirements ranged from stating one's name to providing a photo identification or affidavit. Breaking down the age group by race, the effects were significant for young White/Non-Hispanic and Black/Non-Hispanic voters.

The results shed additional light on the effects of voter identification requirements on two groups often projected as being particularly sensitive to such requirements: African-American voters and elderly voters. The effects on African-American voters were pronounced for two specific sub-samples: African-American voters living below the poverty line and those in the 18- to 24-year-old age group. Also, the elderly, while they would be slightly less likely to vote as requirements ranged from least to most demanding, would not necessarily be affected in the dramatic manner predicted by some opposed to photo identification requirements in particular.

In examining the effects of voter identification requirements on turnout, there is still much to learn. The data examined in this project could not capture the dynamics of how identification requirements might lower turnout. If these requirements dampen turnout, is it because individuals are aware of the requirements and stay away from the polls because they cannot or do not want to meet the requirements?¹⁴ Or, do the requirements result in some voters

¹⁴ The individual-level data offer some insight here. If advance knowledge of the voter identification requirements were to dampen turnout, it is reasonable to expect that advance knowledge of those requirements also could discourage some individuals from registering to vote. I ran the same probit models using voter registration as the dependent variable (coded 1 if the respondent said he or she was registered, and 0 if the respondent was not being turned away when they cannot meet the requirements on Election Day? The CPS data do not include measures that can answer this question. Knowing more about the “on the ground” experiences of voters concerning identification requirements could guide policy-makers at the state and local level in determining whether and at what point in the electoral cycle a concerted public information campaign might be most effective in helping voters to meet identification requirements. Such knowledge also could help in designing training for election judges to handle questions about, and potential disputes over, voter identification requirements.

registered). Neither the maximum nor minimum array of voter identification requirements had a statistically significant effect on the probability that a survey respondent was registered to vote.

I'd like to be able to include the final report on Provisional Voting in the materials going to EAC Standards Board and Board of Advisors in advance of their meetings.

It cannot be included unless it has been reviewed and approved by the four Commissioners.

I believe you said I would have the final copy of it sometime this week?

Karen,

I plan to send you late today or early tomorrow the revised Voter ID report that will be included in our teleconference on Thursday. Once that is in your hands, I will turn my attention to the Provisional Voting report, and will have that to you before the end of the week.

Has 11:30 been confirmed as the time for the teleconference?

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE EAC VOTER IDENTIFICATION ISSUES

Report Background

This report to the United States Election Assistance Commission (EAC) analyzes the effects of voter identification requirements on turnout in the 2004 election and makes recommendations for best practices to evaluate proposals for voter ID requirements. It is based on research conducted by the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, and the Moritz College of Law at Ohio State University under a contract to the EAC, dated May 24, 2005. The research included a review and legal analysis of state statutes, regulations and litigation concerning voter identification and provisional voting, and a statistical analysis of the effects of various requirements for voter identification on turnout in the 2004 election. This report is a companion to a draft report on Provisional Voting submitted to the EAC on November 28, 2005 under the same contract.

The Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) (Public Law 107-252) authorizes the EAC (Sec. 241, 42 USC 15381) to conduct periodic studies of election administration issues. The purpose of these studies is to promote methods for voting and administering elections, including provisional voting, that are convenient, accessible and easy to use; that yield accurate, secure and expeditious voting systems; that afford each registered and eligible voter an equal opportunity to vote and to have that vote counted; and that are efficient.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Methods

To explore the effects of voter ID requirements on electoral participation in 2004, as measured by turnout, we gathered information on the requirements in effect in the 50 states and the District of Columbia in that year. We assigned each state to one of five categories based on its ID requirements. They are progressively more rigorous based on the demands they make on voters.¹ The categories range from "Stating Name" which we judge to be somewhat less demanding than "Signing Name." "Signature Match" requires poll workers to examine the signature and compare it to a sample, which is slightly more demanding than the voter simply signing. "Present ID" requires voters to offer some documentary evidence of their identity, ranging from a utility bill to a passport. It is more demanding than the previous three categories because it requires that the voter remember to bring this documentation to the polls. (Even a simple ID, such as a utility bill, may not be available to some renters or, say, those in group housing.) We regard a government "Photo ID" as the most rigorous requirement. Such identity documents may not be uniformly and conveniently available to all voters.

¹ Even the most relaxed provisions for identification at the polls—anything stricter than the honor system used in North Dakota—will impose some burden on particular voters. Harvard Law Review 119:1105

To examine the potential variation on turnout rates associated with each type of voter ID requirements in effect on Election Day 2004, we drew on two sets of data. These were, first, aggregate turnout data at the county level for each state and, second, the reports of individual voters collected in the November 2004 Current Population Survey by the U. S. Census Bureau. Using two different data sets makes it possible to check the validity of one analysis against the other. It also provides insights not possible using only one of the data sets. The aggregate analysis cannot provide valid estimates on the effects of different ID requirements on particular demographic groups (e.g., the old, the young, African-Americans, the poor, or high school graduates). The Current Population Survey data does permit that kind of analysis, although it has the disadvantage of relying on self-reports by respondents about their registration status and experience in the polling place.

To understand legal issues that have been raised in recent litigation over voter ID requirements, we collected and analyzed the few major cases that have been decided on this issue. The decisions so far suggest the constitutional and other constraints on voter ID requirements.

Findings

Our analysis of data from the 2004 election indicates that the form of identification required of voters affects turnout. Lack of ID can keep voters from the polls or prevent them from casting a regular ballot if they go to the polling place.² This finding emerged from both the analysis of aggregate, county-level data and the individual-level data of the Current Population Survey. The overall effect for all registered voters was fairly small, but statistically significant.

Voter turnout in 2004 was lower in states where voter identification requirements were more demanding. The data show a general movement toward lower turnout as voters are required to present levels of proof of their identify.

² It also seems reasonable to conclude that in states that require an identity document to vote, more voters—those lacking the required ID—will cast provisional ballots. This conclusion is a conjecture because we lack precise information on why voters must cast their ballots provisionally.

The aggregate data show that 60.9 percent of the estimated citizen voting age population turned out in 2004. An average of 64.6 percent turned out in states that required voters to state their names, compared to 58.1 percent in states that required photo identification, a reduction of 6.5 percentage points. That figure, however, probably overstates the effect of voter ID requirements since the inclusion of other factors in the analysis diminishes the extent of influence of voter ID on turnout. After taking account of other factors, the analysis supports the hypothesis that as voter identification requirements increases, turnout declines.

The effects were more pronounced for some specific subgroups. Hispanic voters, the poor and those who did not graduate from high school appear to be less likely to vote as the identification requirement becomes more demanding. The analysis for some other demographic groups illustrate the range of effects predicted for more rigorous voter ID requirements:

Race or Ethnicity

- In the individual-level data for Hispanic voters, the probability of voting dropped by 9.7 percent across the various levels of identification requirements.
- More rigorous ID requirements did not have a statistically significant effect when looking at all African-Americans, but
- African-American voters from households below the poverty line were 7.5 percent less likely to vote as the ID requirements varied from stating one's name to providing photo identification.

Income

- Citizens from poor households were 5.3 percent less likely to vote as the requirements varied from stating one's name to attesting to one's identity in an affidavit.

Education

- Registered voters who had not graduated from high school were 6.7 percent less likely to say they voted as the requirements ranged from stating one's name to providing photo identification.

013794

REVISED FINAL D R A F T
05/08/06

Age

- Age was also a key factor, with voters ages 18 to 24 being 7.7 percent to 8.9 percent less likely to vote as the requirements ranged from stating one's name to providing a photo identification or affidavit.
- Turnout by young (18-24) African-American voters in states that required a government-issued photo ID was about 10% less likely to vote than in states where they had only to state their name.
- The elderly, while they would be slightly less likely to vote as the requirements changed from stating name to providing photo ID, would not necessarily be affected in the dramatic manner predicted by opponents of photo identification requirements.

Our analysis of litigation suggests that the courts will look strictly at requirements that voters produce a photo ID in order to cast a regular ballot. The courts have used a balancing test to weigh the legitimate interest in preventing election fraud against the citizen's right to privacy (protecting social security numbers from public disclosure, for example) and the reasonableness of requirements for identity documents. To provide both the clarity and certainty in administration of elections needed to forestall destabilizing challenges to outcomes, best practice for the states may be to limit requirements for voter identification to the minimum needed to prevent duplicate registration and ensure eligibility.

Evidence on the incidence of vote fraud, especially on the kind of vote fraud that could be reduced by requiring more rigorous voter identification is not now sufficient to evaluate the tradeoffs between ensuring ballot access and ensuring ballot integrity.³ Assessing the effectiveness of voter ID as a way to protect the integrity of the ballot should logically include an estimate of the nature and frequency of vote fraud. This research does not include consideration of vote fraud nor the possible effectiveness of various voter ID regimes to counter attempts at vote fraud. As a result, our analysis of the effects of voter ID requirements on turnout cannot take into account how many potential voters who did not turn out under comparatively stricter voter ID requirements might have been ineligible or eligible to vote.

The current lack of understanding of precisely how voter ID requirements affect turnout can be remedied by requiring the collection and reporting of data on the reasons potential voters are required to cast a provisional ballot and the reasons for rejecting provisional ballots during the ³ The EAC has contracted with other researchers to study vote fraud issues.

2006 and subsequent elections. Also useful would be the results of surveys of voters on their experiences in meeting voter ID requirements and on what type of ballot they cast.⁴ And, of course, more information is needed on the incidence and varieties of vote fraud, but that inquiry is outside the scope of this report.

A voting system that requires voters to produce an identify document or documents may indeed prevent the ineligible from voting. It may also prevent eligible voters from casting a ballot. If the ID requirement of a ballot protection system blocks ineligible voters from the polls at the cost of preventing eligible voters who lack the required forms of identification, the integrity of the ballot may not have been improved; the harm may be as great as the benefit.

Recommendations for consideration and action by the EAC

The dynamics of Voter ID requirements –how more rigorous voter ID requirements affect the decision by potential voters to go or stay away from the polls-- are not well understood. This lack of understanding should be recognized in the policy process in the states. The debate over voter ID in the states would be improved by additional research sponsored by the EAC.

The EAC should consider the following actions to improve understanding of the relationship between voter ID requirements and the two important goals of ensuring ballot access and ensuring ballot integrity.

1. Encourage or sponsor further research to clarify the connection between Voter ID requirements and the number of potential voters actually able to cast a ballot.
2. Recommend as a best practice the publication of a "Voting Impact Statement" by states as they assess their voter ID requirements to protect the integrity of the ballot. The analysis will help ensure that efforts to increase ballot security have a neutral effect on electoral participation by eligible voters. The Voter Impact Statement would estimate the number and demographics of 1) eligible, potential voters that may be kept from the polls or permitted to cast a provisional ballot by a stricter ID requirement; and 2) and assess the number of ineligible voters who will be prevented from voting by the stricter ID requirements.

⁴ Arizona held its first election with its new, stricter ID requirements on March 14, 2006. In at least one county (Maricopa) election officials handed a survey to voters that asked if they knew about the voter identification law and if they did, how they found out about it. Edythe Jensen, "New Voter ID Law Goes Smoothly in Chandler," Arizona Republic, March 15, 2006. More surveys of this kind can illuminate the dynamics of voter ID and voting in ways that are not possible now because of insufficient data. 013796

3. Encourage or require the states in the 2006 election and beyond, to collect and report reliable, credible information on the relationship between ballot access and ballot security. EAC should publish an analysis of this information to provide a sound factual basis for the states to consider as they estimate the incidence of the kinds of vote fraud that more stringent ID requirements may prevent. The analysis should describe the dynamics of the voter ID process in preserving the security of the ballot. EAC can also use this information to encourage the states to assess the effectiveness of programs to ensure that all eligible voters have required ID and are permitted to vote in future elections.
 - I. Useful information could be supplied by state-sponsored surveys of voters by local election officials. It would make clear why those who cast a provisional ballot were found ineligible to cast a regular ballot. The answers would illuminate the frequency with which ID issues divert voters into the provisional ballot line.
 - II. Surveys to ask voters what they know about the voter id requirements would also provide useful context for evaluating the effect of various voter ID requirements on electoral participation.
 - III. Spot checks by state election officials on how the identification process works at polling places could provide information on how closely actual practice tracks statutory or regulatory requirements. Such reports should be available to the public.
4. Encourage states to examine the time period allowed for voters who cast a provisional ballot because they lacked required ID to return with their identification. In eleven states, voters who had to cast a provisional ballot because they lacked the ID required for a regular ballot were permitted to return later with their ID. Their provision of this ID is the critical step in evaluating the ballots. The length of the period in which the voter may return with ID is important. In setting the time period for return, which now varies among the states from the same day to about two weeks, states should consider three factors: the convenience of the voter, the total time allowed to evaluate ballots⁵, and the safe harbor provision in presidential elections.
5. Recommendations to the states from EAC should reflect current judicial trends. Requirements that voters provide some identifying documentation have been upheld, where photo ID is not the only acceptable form. Whether laws requiring photo ID will be upheld is more doubtful. To date, only one court has considered a law requiring voters to show photo ID (Common Cause v. Billups), and that court concluded that this requirement is likely unconstitutional.

SUMMARY OF RESEARCH

Background and Approach of the Study

Establishing the eligibility of a person to vote has long been part of the electoral process. Voters may have to identify themselves twice in the electoral process: when registering to vote and then when casting a ballot. The pressures felt by the voter arising from the need to check ID, even so simple a check as a signature match, can be greater at the polls on Election Day than at the time of registration. Poll workers may feel under pressure when faced with long lines and limited time.

This analysis focuses on ID requirements on Election Day, but with an appreciation that the ID requirements at time of registration and on Election Day are inter-related.⁶ The emphasis in this report is on Voter ID requirements on Election Day and afterwards as election judges evaluate provisional ballots. This is the critical period for the electoral system, the time when ballot access and ballot security are in the most sensitive balance.

The report looks broadly at voter ID issues and goes beyond the rather narrow identification requirements in HAVA. Much of the current debate in state legislatures over voter ID ranges beyond HAVA to require more rigorous documentation of identity for all would-be voters, not just those who had not registered in person and are casting a ballot for the first time. Current controversies in the states over voter ID seems to have been sparked in part by the HAVA requirements, but goes beyond those requirements, and sets the context for the analysis here.⁷

We recognize that the previously technical, rather dull subject of voter ID requirements has become fiercely partisan and divisive in many states. The polarization of the debate has raised the stakes over this issue, making dispassionate analysis both more valuable and more rare.⁸

⁸ "Of the various electoral procedure laws passed in the fifty states since the 2000 and 2004 presidential elections and those still being debated in state legislatures and local media, few arouse more potent partisan feelings than voter identification laws." Harvard Law Review 119:1144. John Fund's 2004 book, Stealing Elections: How Voter Fraud Threaten Our Democracy, cites (pages 16 – 17) a Rasmussen Research poll that asked respondents if they were more concerned with voting by ineligible participants or with disenfranchisement of eligible voters. Sixty-two percent of Kerry supporters, but only 18 percent of Bush supporters, worried more about disenfranchisement; 58 percent of Bush supporters, but only 19 percent of Kerry supporters were more concerned with voter fraud.

REVISED FINAL D R A F T

Voter ID is often described as the critical step in protecting the integrity of the ballot, the process to ensure that the potential voter is eligible and , if eligible, is permitted to cast one ballot and one ballot only. Truly protecting the integrity of the ballot, however, requires a perspective that takes in the entire voting process. It demands more than preventing the ineligible from voting, and should also ensure that all those who are eligible and want to vote can cast a ballot that counts. The protection effort must embrace all forms of voting, including absentee ballots, and consider each step in the process from registration through vote counting.

A voting system that requires voters to produce an identity document or documents may prevent the ineligible from voting. It may also prevent the eligible from casting a ballot. If the ID requirements block ineligible voters from the polls at the cost of preventing eligible voters who cannot obtain or have left at home the required forms of identification, the integrity of the ballot may not have been improved; the harm may be as great as the benefit.

Assessing the effectiveness of voter ID as a way to protect the integrity of the ballot should logically include an estimate of the nature and frequency of vote fraud. The EAC has informed us that it has commissioned a separate analysis of the incidence of vote fraud. Consequently, this research does not include consideration of vote fraud nor the possible effectiveness of various voter ID regimes to counter attempts at vote fraud. As a result, our analysis of the effects of voter ID requirements on turnout cannot take into account how many potential voters who did not turn out under comparatively stricter voter ID requirements might have been ineligible or eligible to vote.

In some states, voters lacking required ID, or who have ID that does not reflect their current address, are able to vote only by casting a provisional ballot.⁹ Voter ID requirements that require voters to bring a document to the polls --rather than simply sign their names-- can divert more voters to the provisional ballot. Requiring poll workers to request and check ID, can put stress on the already demanding environment of the polling place. Scrutiny of ID can create lines at the polling places. Further delays can result when voters cast a provisional ballot and fill out the ballot envelope. Voters who cast a provisional ballot because they lack their ID on Election Day, and who then fail to return with the needed document or documents, will have their ballot rejected.¹⁰ And, of course, the cost of processing provisional ballots is greater than the cost of regular ballots.

⁹ For example, the Florida voter ID law adopted after the 2004 election and pre-cleared by the Department of Justice, permits voters who cannot meet the ID requirements to sign an affidavit on the envelope of a provisional ballot, which will be counted if the signature matches that on the voter's registration form.

Each of these potential consequences of more elaborate voter identification processes can increase the chance of litigation. Long lines will, at best, discourage voters and at worst make voting seem a hassle, an impression that could keep more citizens (even those with ID) from the polls. In conducting this analysis, we were sensitive to the observation that the problem with American elections may well be that too many people do not vote rather than that a few people may vote more than once.

Evaluating the effect of different Voter ID regimes can be most effective when based on clear standards --legal, equitable, practical. The standards outlined here can best be described as the questions policy-makers should ask about Voter ID requirements. We suggest 7 questions that address important dimensions of the problem.

1. Is the Voter ID system designed on the basis of valid and reliable empirical studies of the incidence of the sorts of vote fraud it is designed to prevent?¹¹
2. How effective is the ID requirement in increasing the security of the ballot? How well can it be coordinated with a statewide voter database?¹²
3. How practical is the requirement? (Can it be administered smoothly by the staff and budget likely to be made available? How much additional training of polling place workers might be required?) Is it simple enough or can it be defined with sufficient clarity that poll workers throughout the state can administer it uniformly and with a minimum of local interpretation made on the fly under the pressure of Election Day?¹³
4. How cost-effective is the system? Does it demonstrably increase the security of the ballot affordably, measured in both monetary and other costs? To improve

¹² See the final section of this report for a brief overview of possible effects of a statewide voter database on voter identification issues.

¹³ In New York, in 2004, disparities in training and voting information were made apparent in a study finding elections officials had wildly varying interpretations of what the state's voter identification requirement actually was. Tova Wang, "Warning Bell in Ohio," December 5, 2005. Website, the Foundation for National Progress.

REVISED FINAL D R A F T

understanding of the non-monetary component of the costs, conducting a voter impact study might be appropriate. The voter impact study would examine, before the adoption of the regulation, the cost of compliance by the voter (such as the cost in time and money of acquiring a photo ID card), any offsetting benefits to voters, and the possible disparate effects of the regulation on various groups of voters.¹⁴ A thorough, objective impact statement that demonstrated the nexus between the identification regime and the integrity of the ballot could provide protection against inevitable legal challenges.

5. If a side effect of the Voter ID regulation is likely to reduce turnout, generally or among particular groups, is it possible to take other steps to ameliorate the adverse consequences?¹⁵
6. Does it comply with the letter and spirit of Voting Rights Act?
7. The seventh question is the most difficult to answer. Does the Voter ID requirement have a neutral result on the composition of the qualified and eligible electorate? ID requirements should not be designed to, nor unintentionally, reduce the turnout of particular groups of voters or supporters of one party or another.

Voter ID and Turnout

As of the 2004 election, the states and the District of Columbia could be divided into 5 different Voter ID regimes. These are shown in Table 1, Voter ID Requirements. Nine states required that voters give their names; 14 that they sign their names; 8 match the signature to a sample in the registration book; 15 require some form of ID (ranging from a utility bill to a government-issued photo ID), and 5 states in 2004 required a photo ID, although in all those states voters without that credential could cast a regular ballot after signing an affidavit concerning their identity and eligibility or provide other forms of ID.

We recognize the difficulties in summarizing each state's voter ID requirements. The problem is illustrated by the number of footnotes to Table 1 below. The variety of statutory and regulatory details among the states is complex. Moving beyond the statutes and regulations, we also recognize that the assignment of each state to one category may fail to reflect actual practice at many polling places.

¹⁴ "Absent clear empirical evidence demonstrating widespread individual voter fraud, legislatures need to fashion narrowly tailored voter identification provisions with an eye toward the inevitable and well-grounded constitutional challenges that will arise in the courts. Only as states grow more adept at administering elections will courts likely demonstrate greater willingness to uphold strict identification requirements." Harvard Law Review 127:1144 (2006)

Like any system run by fallible people, the voter ID process is subject to variation in practice.¹⁶ Voters may be confronted with demands for identification different from the directives in state statutes or regulation. Under the pressures of Election Day, there is no sure way to report the wide variety of conditions each voter encounters. It seems reasonable to conclude, however, that while actual practices may vary, the variance is around each state's legal requirement for ID. The analysis of the effect of state requirements on turnout must be viewed with some caution. Nevertheless, we are satisfied that the categories used in this report provide a level of discrimination among voter identification regimes sufficient for the analysis that we have undertaken.

² Florida required a photo ID in 2004. Voters without that credential could sign an affidavit concerning their identity and eligibility and cast a regular ballot. Florida subsequently changed its law to require that voters present photo ID to cast a regular ballot, though voters without photo ID may still cast a provisional ballot by signing an affidavit, which ballot should ordinarily be counted.

Effect of Voter ID requirements on Turnout

We examined the potential variation in turnout rates based on the type of voter identification required in each state on Election Day 2004 using two sets of data: aggregate turnout data at the county level for each state, as compiled by the Eagleton Institute of Politics, and individual-level survey data included in the November 2004 Current Population Survey conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau. Classification of voter identification requirements comes from a review of state statutes conducted by the Moritz College of Law at the Ohio State University.

The Voter ID category assigned to each state is shown in Table 1. We analyzed turnout data for each county according to the voter identification requirements of its state. We also assessed self-reported turnout by the sample interviewed in the November 2004 Current Population Survey of the Census Bureau.¹⁸

Voter turnout at the state level in 2004 varied based on voter identification requirements. An average of 64.6 percent of the citizen voting age population turned out in states that required voters to state their names, compared to 58.1 percent in states that required photo identification. Other factors, of course, also influence turnout. Taking those other factors into account in the county-level analysis makes the effect of the voter ID requirement less dramatic. But the analysis supports the hypothesis that as voter identification requirements become more stringent, turnout declines. The effect is particularly noticeable in counties with concentrations of Hispanic residents or of people living below the poverty line.

The individual-level analysis, based on the CPS, produced a similar result. Voter identification requirements exert a statistically significant, negative effect on whether survey respondents said they had voted in 2004. The probability that a respondent to the survey voted dropped with each level of voter identification requirement, with a total drop of 2.5 percent across the five types of identification.

Methods

Based on research performed for this study by the Moritz College of Law, states had one of five types of requirements in place on Election Day 2004. Upon arrival at polling places, voters had to: state their names (nine states); sign their names (13 states and the District of Columbia); match their signature to a signature on file with the local election board (eight states); provide a form of identification that did not necessarily include a photo (15 states); or provide a photo identification (five states).¹⁹

We coded the states according to these requirements to test the assumption that voter identification requirements would pose an increasingly demanding requirement in this order: stating one's name, signing one's name, matching one's signature to a signature on file, providing a form of identification, and providing a form of photo identification.

Election laws in many states, however, offer exceptions to these requirements if potential voters lack the necessary form of identification, and laws in those states set a minimum standard that a voter must meet in order to vote using a regular ballot (as opposed to a provisional ballot). In recognition of this fact, we also categorized states based on the minimum requirement for voting with a regular ballot.

In 2004 none of the states required photo identification as a minimum standard for voting with a regular ballot. Four states, however, required voters to swear an affidavit as to their identity (Florida, Indiana, Louisiana, and North Dakota). The five categories for minimum requirements were: state name (12 states), sign name (14 states and the District of Columbia), match one's signature to a signature on file (six states), provide a non-photo identification (14 states), or swear an affidavit (four states).

We treated the minimum ID in terms of increasing demand on the voter: state name, sign name, match signature, provide non-photo identification, and, given the potential legal consequences for providing false information, swearing an affidavit.

We examined turnout among U.S. citizens of voting age in both the aggregate and the individual-level data. Determining citizenship status in the individual-level data simply involved restricting the analyses to individuals who identified themselves as citizens in the November 2004 Current Population Survey. (Those who said they were not citizens did not have the opportunity to answer the supplemental voting questions contained in the Current Population Survey.)

The aggregate data posed a greater challenge to determine percentage of the voting-age population that has U.S. citizenship. The Census Bureau gathers information on the citizenship status of adults ages 18 and older only during the decennial census. While the Census Bureau provides annual estimates of the population to account for changes between decennial censuses, the bureau does not offer estimates for the proportion of the adult population who are citizens as part of the annual estimates. To address this issue we estimated the 2004 citizen voting-age population for each county using a method reported. Therefore, we calculated the percentage of the 2000 voting-age population who were citizens in 2000, and applied that percentage to the July 1, 2004 estimates for voting-age population in each county. This method was used in the analysis of the 2004 Election Day Survey conducted for the U.S. Election Assistance Commission.

We classified each state as having one of five types of identification requirements in place on Election Day 2004. Upon arrival at polling places, voters had to either: state their names (9 states); sign their names (13 states and the District of Columbia); match their signature to a signature on file with the local election board (8 states); provide a form of identification that did not necessarily include a photo (15 states); or provide a photo identification (5 states). We then tested the assumption that voter identification requirements would prove to be increasingly demanding on the voter, with providing photo ID the most rigorous. In the statistical analysis, we coded the voter identification requirements on a scale of one to five, with one representing the least demanding form of identification and five representing the most demanding form of identification.

Findings

As the level of required ID proof increases, with photo identification as the most demanding requirement, turnout declines. Averaging across counties in each state, statewide turnout is negatively correlated with maximum voter identification requirements ($r = -.30, p < .0001$). In considering the array of minimum requirements, with affidavit as the most demanding requirement, voter identification also is negatively correlated with turnout ($r = -.20, p < .0001$). Breaking down the turnout rates by type of requirement reveals in greater detail the relationship between voter identification requirements and voter turnout.

Table 2 – Variation in 2004 State Turnout Based on Voter Identification Requirements

Maximum Requirement		Minimum Requirement
Voter Identification Required in the States	Mean Voter Turnout for States in that Category	Voter Identification Required in the States	Mean Voter Turnout for States in that Category
State Name	64.6 %	State Name	63.0 %
Sign Name	61.1 %	Sign Name	60.8 %
Match Signature	60.9 %	Match Signature	61.7 %
Provide Non-Photo ID	59.3 %	Provide Non-Photo ID	59.0 %
Provide Photo ID	58.1 %	Swear Affidavit	60.1 %
Average Turnout (All States)	60.9 %

The aggregate data show that 60.9 percent of the estimated citizen voting age population voted in 2004. Differences in voter turnout at the state level in 2004 varied based on voter identification requirements. Taking into account the maximum requirements, an average of 64.6 percent of the voting age population turned out in states that required voters to state their names, compared to 58.1 percent in states that required photo identification. A similar trend emerged when considering minimum requirements. Sixty-three percent of the voting age population turned out in states requiring voters to state their names, compared to 60.1 percent in states that required an affidavit from voters.

Voter identification requirements alone do not determine voter turnout. Other factors make a difference in turnout, often a greater difference than the ID requirements. Multivariate models can take into account other predictors of turnout and therefore paint a more complete picture of the relationship between voter identification requirements and turnout. The model used here also took into account such variables as:

- Was the county in a presidential battleground state?
- Was the county was in a state with a competitive race for governor and/or the U.S. Senate?
- Percentage of the voting-age population in each county that was Hispanic or African-American
- Percentage of county residents age 65 and older
- Percentage of county residents below the poverty line

The dependent variable in each model was voter turnout at the county level, with turnout calculated as the percentage of the citizen voting-age population that voted in the 2004 election.

REVISED FINAL D R A F T

The maximum ID requirements had a small and negative effect on turnout in 2004 controlling for electoral context and demographic factors. Both contextual factors (whether the county was in a state that was a battleground state and whether that state had a competitive race for governor and/or U.S. Senate) increased voter turnout. The more senior citizens and African-Americans in the county, the higher the turnout. The percentage of the population living below the poverty reduced turnout. The effect of the percentage of Hispanic adults in the county on turnout fell just short of statistical significance ($p = .05$).

The analysis tested the hypothesis that stricter voter ID requirements dampen turnout among minorities. The data revealed no statistically significant effect on turnout for African-Americans in general. But it revealed a significant reduction in turnout for Hispanics and the poor. The analysis using the minimum ID categories produced similar results.

Analysis of the aggregate data at the county level supports the hypothesis that as voter ID requirements grow stricter, turnout declines. This effect is strongest in counties with concentrations of Hispanic residents or families below the poverty line. But aggregate data cannot fully capture the individual demographic factors that may figure into the decision to turn out to vote. For example, previous research has found that education is a powerful determinant of turnout.²⁰ Married people are more likely to vote than those who are not married. To explore the effects of voter identification requirements on turnout, examining individual-level data is important.

Individual-level Analysis

Information collected for the Census Bureau Current Population Survey in November 2004 makes it possible to examine the influence of voter ID requirements at the individual level. Self-identified registered voters reported their experience at the polls in the survey. Note that the voter turnout rate for the CPS sample, an average of 89%, is much higher than the turnout rates presented in the aggregate data analysis, which average 60.9%. The difference is a result of several factors, including different denominators in calculating the turnout rate – self-reported registered voters in the CPS versus the much larger citizen voting-age population for the aggregate data. Also some survey respondents overstate their incidence of voting. Nevertheless, the CPS serves as a widely accepted source of data on voting behavior.

One of the advantages of the CPS is the sheer size of the sample. The survey's Voting and Registration Supplement consisted of interviews, either by telephone or in person, with 96,452 respondents.²¹ The large sample size permits analyses of smaller groups, such as Black or Hispanic voters or voters with less than a high school education. The analyses reported here are based on reports from self-described registered voters. Excluded are those who said they were not registered to vote and those who said they cast absentee ballots because the identification requirements for absentee ballots may differ from those required when one votes in person. Also excluded are respondents who said they were not U.S. citizens.²²

The dependent variable in these analyses is whether a respondent reported voting in the November 2004 election. As in the aggregate analysis, stricter voter ID requirements exert a statistically significant, negative effect on whether survey respondents said they had voted in 2004.

²² The CPS did not ask the voting questions of respondents who were not U.S. citizens. The design of the questionnaire skips those questions for non-citizens.

REVISED FINAL D R A F T

The influence of voter identification requirements, holding all other variables constant, is shown in Table 3 below. The probability of voting dropped with each level of voter identification requirement, with a total drop of 2.5 percent, across the five types of identification for the maximum requirement and 3.3% for the minimum requirements.²³

Among the key variables of interest in the debate over voter identification requirements are race, age, income, and education. Given the large sample size (54,973 registered voters), it was possible to break the sample into sub-samples along those demographic lines to explore variation in predicted probability by group.

Both the maximum and minimum identification requirements had negative and statistically significant effects for White/Non-Hispanic voters. Allowing the requirements to vary from stating one's name to providing photo identification or an affidavit showed drops of 2.5 percent and 3.2 percent respectively in the predicted probability of voting. The predicted probability of Hispanics voting ranged from 87 percent if stating one's name was the required form of identification to 77.3 percent if a voter would have to provide an affidavit in order to vote, a difference of 9.7 percent.

The effects of voter identification requirements also varied by age, with the greatest variation occurring among voters ages 18 to 24.

- Turnout in states requiring photo ID was predicted as 8.9 percentage points lower than in states where voters simply stated their names.
- The strictest ID requirements reduced the probability that White/Non-Hispanic voters in the 18- to 24-year-old category would turn out by 7.8 to 9.2 percentage points.
- For African-Americans in the 18- to 24-year-old age group the gap was 10.6 percentage points.

Variation also emerged along the lines of income, with the effects of voter identification requirements varying to a greater extent for voters in households below the poverty line compared to those living above the poverty line.²⁴ Allowing the maximum voting requirement to

²³ The voter turnout percentages may seem disproportionately high compared to the turnout rates reported in the aggregate data analysis. It is important to consider that the turnout rates in the aggregate data were a proportion of all citizens of voting-age population, while the turnout rates for the individual-level data are the proportion of only registered voters who said they voted.

²⁴ Respondents were coded as being above or below the U.S. Census Bureau's 2004 poverty line based on their reported annual household income and size of the household.

vary from the least to the most demanding, the probability that African-American voters below the poverty line said they had voted dropped by 7.5 percent.

The effects of voter identification requirements varied across education levels as well. Registered voters who had less than a high school education had a 77.5 percent probability of voting if the maximum requirement would be stating one's name, and a 70.8 percent probability if they would have to provide photo identification under the maximum requirement, a difference of 6.7 percent. The range of effects of voter identification requirements was smaller among those with higher levels of education (and non-existent for one category – voters with some college education).

Conclusions of the Analysis

As the stringency of voter identification requirements increases, voter turnout declines. This point emerged from both the aggregate data and the individual-level data, although not always for both the maximum and minimum sets of requirements. The overall effect for all registered voters was fairly small, but statistically significant.

The effects of voter identification requirements were more pronounced for specific subgroups. Hispanic voters and the poor appeared to be less likely to vote as the level of required identification became more demanding, according to both the aggregate and the individual-level data.

- In the individual-level data, for Hispanic voters, the probability of voting dropped by 9.7 percent across the various levels of minimum identification requirements.
- Survey respondents living in poor households were 5.3 percent less likely to vote as the requirements varied from stating one's name to attesting to one's identity in an affidavit.
- African-American voters from households below the poverty line were 7.5 percent less likely to vote as the maximum requirements varied from stating one's name to providing photo identification.

Effects of voter requirements also varied with education.

- Registered voters who had not graduated from high school were 6.7 percent less likely to say they voted as the maximum requirements ranged from stating one's name to providing photo identification.

013812

05/08/06

- When considering the minimum requirements, those with less than a high school education were 7.4 percent less likely to say they voted if the requirement was an affidavit as opposed to stating one's name.

Age was also a key factor, with voters ages 18 to 24 being 7.7 percent to 8.9 percent less likely to vote as the requirements ranged from stating one's name to providing a photo identification or affidavit. Breaking down the age group by race, the effects were significant for young White/Non-Hispanic and Black/Non-Hispanic voters.

The results shed additional light on the effects of voter identification requirements on two groups often projected as being particularly sensitive to such requirements: African-American voters and elderly voters.

- The effects on African-American voters were pronounced for two specific sub-samples, African-American voters living below the poverty line and those in the 18- to 24-year-old age group.
- The elderly, while they would be slightly less likely to vote as requirements ranged from least to most demanding, would not necessarily be affected in the dramatic manner predicted by some opposed to photo identification requirements in particular.

The data examined in this project could not capture the dynamics of how identification requirements might lower turnout. Do potential voters who cannot or do not want to meet the identification requirements simply stay away from the polls? Or, do the requirements result in some voters being turned away when they cannot meet the requirements on Election Day? (Proponents of stricter voter ID requirements might argue that some part of the reduction comes from keeping the truly ineligible from voting.)

Our data alone cannot resolve these questions. Knowing more about the "on the ground" experiences of voters concerning identification requirements could guide policy-makers at the state and local level in determining whether and at what point in the electoral cycle a concerted public information campaign might be most effective in helping voters to meet identification requirements. Such knowledge also could help in designing training for election judges to handle questions about, and potential disputes over, voter identification requirements.

It is important to note that the 2004 data do not allow us to draw conclusions about the effect of laws such as those recently passed in Georgia and Indiana, which require government-issued

05/08/06

photo ID. No such laws were in place in 2004, and the five states that then required photo ID at the time allowed voters who signed an affidavit or provided another form of identification to cast a regular ballot.

Litigation Over Voter ID Requirements

A handful of cases have challenged identification requirements in court in recent years. In general, requirements that voters provide some identifying documentation have been upheld, where photo ID is not the only acceptable form. Whether laws requiring photo ID will be upheld is more doubtful. To date, only one court has considered a law requiring voters to show photo ID (Common Cause v. Billups), and that court concluded that this requirement is likely unconstitutional. Cases challenging the mandatory disclosure of voters' Social Security numbers on privacy grounds have yielded mixed results.

Non-photo identification. For the most part, courts have looked favorably on requirements that voters present some form of identifying documents if the photo identification is not the only form accepted. In Colorado Common Cause v. Davidson, No. 04CV7709, 2004 WL 2360485, at *1 (Colo. Dist. Ct. Oct. 18, 2004), plaintiffs challenged a law requiring all in-person voters to show identification (not just first-time registrants). The court upheld this requirement against a constitutional challenge. Similarly, in League of Women Voters v. Blackwell, 340 F. Supp. 2d 823 (N.D. Ohio 2004), the court rejected a challenge to an Ohio directive requiring first-time voters who registered by mail to provide one of the HAVA-permitted forms of identification, in order to have their provisional ballots counted. Specifically, the directive provided that their provisional ballots would be counted if the voter (a) orally recited his driver's license number or the last four digits of his social security number or (b) returned to the polling place before it closed with some acceptable identification (including reciting those identification numbers). Id. This was found to be consistent with HAVA.

Photo ID. Since the 2004 election, two states have adopted laws requiring photo identification in order to have one's vote counted, without an affidavit exception: Georgia and Indiana. Both these requirements were enacted in 2005 and both have been challenged in court. The Georgia law required voters attempting to cast a ballot in person present a valid form of photographic identification. O.C.G.A. § 21-2-417. On October 18, 2005, the District Court granted the Plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction, enjoining the application of the new identification requirements on constitutional grounds. In granting the injunction, the court held that plaintiffs' claims under both the Fourteenth Amendment (equal protection) and Twenty-Fourth Amendment (poll tax) had a substantial likelihood of succeeding on the merits at trial (Common Cause v. Billups, Prelim. Inj. 96, 104). In January 2006, Georgia enacted a modified version of its photo ID law, which the court has not yet ruled on. In the other state that has enacted a photo ID requirement without an affidavit exception (Indiana), legal challenges have also been filed. (Indiana Democratic Party v. Rokita and Crawford v. Marion County Election Board). Cross-motions for summary judgment are currently pending. Another case of significance, for purposes of photo ID requirements, is American Civil Liberties Union of Minnesota v. Kiffmeyer, No. 04-CV-4653, 2004 WL 2428690, at *1 (D. Minn. Oct. 28, 2004). In that case, the court enjoined a Minnesota law that allowed the use of tribal photo ID cards, only for an Indian who lived on the reservation. 2004 WL 2428690, at *1. The Court found no rational basis for distinguishing based on whether or not the cardholder lives on the reservation. Id. at *1, 3. The court's decision in this case indicates that courts are likely to look strictly on photo ID requirements.

Privacy. In Greidinger v. Davis, 988 F.2d 1344 (4th Cir. 1993), the court struck down on due process grounds a Virginia law requiring disclosure of voters' social security numbers for voter registration. The social security numbers recorded in voter registration lists had been disclosed to the public and political parties that had requested the lists. The court found that the requirement to give the social security number effectively conditioned rights on the consent to an invasion of privacy. It concluded that this public disclosure of the social security numbers was not necessary to achieve the government's interest in preventing fraud. On the other hand, in McKay v. Thompson, 226 F.3d 752 (6th Cir. 2000), the court rejected privacy challenges based on both the Constitution and federal statutes, to a Tennessee law requiring social security numbers for voter registration since 1972. 226 F.3d at 755. Second, the NVRA only permits requiring the minimum amount of information necessary to prevent duplicate voter registration and to determine eligibility. The distinction appears to be between the use of Social Security numbers for internal purposes only, which was deemed permissible, and the disclosure of those numbers to the public which was not.

These decisions suggest that the courts will look strictly at requirements that voters produce a photo ID in order to cast a regular ballot. The courts have used a balancing test to weigh the legitimate interest in preventing election fraud against the citizen's right to privacy (protecting social security numbers from public disclosure, for example) and the reasonableness of requirements for identity documents. To provide both the clarity and certainty in administration of elections needed to forestall destabilizing challenges to outcomes, these early decisions suggest that best practice may be to limit requirements for voter identification to the minimum needed to prevent duplicate registration and ensure eligibility.

05/08/06

Developments since 2004

Since the passage of HAVA, with its limited requirements for voter identification, and following the 2004 election, debate over voter ID has taken place in state legislatures across the country. That debate has not been characterized by solid information on the consequences of tightening requirements for voters to identify themselves before being permitted to cast a regular, rather than a provisional, ballot.

Better information might improve the quality of the debate. Answers to the following key questions are not available in a form that might satisfy those on both sides of the argument.

- What is the overall incidence of vote fraud?
- How does fraud take place in the various stage of the process: registration, voting at the polls, absentee voting, or ballot counting?
- What contribution can tighter requirements for voter ID make to reducing vote fraud?
- What would be the other consequences of increasingly demanding requirements for voters to identify themselves? This is the question addressed, within the limits of the available data, in the analysis in this report.

Answering these questions would provide the information needed for more informed judgment in the states as they consider the tradeoffs among the competing goals of ballot integrity, ballot access, and administrative efficiency. The Carter-Baker Commission recognized the tradeoffs when it tied recommendation for national ID to an affirmative effort by government to identify unregistered voters and make it easy for them to register.

State Voter Databases and Voter ID

With the implementation of the HAVA Computerized Statewide Voter Registration List, an application for voter registration for an election for Federal office may not be accepted or processed unless the application includes a driver's license number or last four digits of the

05/08/06

Social Security number on the voter registration form. This information can be used to verify the identity of the registrant through interfacing with lists maintained by the Motor Vehicle office and Social Security office. If registrants do not have either a driver's license or Social Security number, the State will assign a unique identifier number to that person.

HAVA does not require that the states notify registrants to remedy any failure to provide either of these numbers or to confirm that they have provided a verifiable number. Verification at the time of registration could forestall difficulties at the polling place. HAVA is silent on how the ID might be required at the polling place for new voters whose driving license or Social Security number could not be verified. Errors in recording those numbers are sure to occur.

Some states are wrestling now with these unresolved issues. In New Jersey, for example, pending legislation would require that voters must be able to confirm their registration through a secure access to the SVRL. It also requires voters to present ID at the polls in order to cast a regular ballot if the numbers recorded on the registration have not been verified (or if no verifiable number appears on the registration). It recognizes the HAVA requirement that if the number provided by the voter has not been verified and if the voter does not present ID at the polls, that voter may cast a provisional ballot. The bill does not specify they have to provide ID within 48 hours in order for their vote to count, as is the case with first-time mail-in registrants.

As some states gain experience in this area, the EAC would perform a useful service by making timely recommendations of best practices for all states to consider.

Conclusions

The form of Voter ID required of voters affects turnout. Lack of ID can keep voters from the polls. Or, when they go to the polls, it is reasonable to conclude that stricter Voter ID requirements will divert more voters into the line for provisional ballots. (This conclusion is a conjecture because we lack good data on why voters must cast their ballots provisionally.) The result can be longer lines at the polls and confusion, without a clear demonstration that the security of the ballot is correspondingly increased.²⁵

²⁵ In this connection, the Brennan Center's response to the Carter-Baker Commission report observes that, "while it might be true that in a close election "a small amount of fraud could make the margin of difference," it is equally true that the rejection of a much larger number of eligible voters could make a much bigger difference in the outcome." Response to the Report of the 2005 Commission on Federal

The dynamics of Voter ID requirements—how the more rigorous Voter ID requirements—affect the decision by potential voters to go or stay away from the polls are not well understood. This lack of understanding should be recognized in the policy process. The debate over voter ID in the states would be improved by additional research sponsored by the EAC. So far as it may be necessary to reduce vote fraud made possible by inadequate voter ID, the research could identify methods to eliminate the need for voters to bring specific identity documents with them to the polls while assuring that each voter who casts a ballot is eligible and votes only once. One way to break the connection between the benefits of photo ID and the need for the voter to bring identification to the polling place, as recommended elsewhere by one of the authors of this report, Edward Foley: keep the information to verify a voter's identity in the records at the polling place. Other approaches could be developed.²⁶

Election Reform, The Brennan Center for Justice at NYU School of Law and Spencer Overton, On Behalf Of The National Network on State Election Reform, September 19, 2005

If the voter registration cards are used in the precinct, the election official in charge of the precinct registration file shall compare the signature upon the application with the signature upon the registration card. If voter registration lists are used in the precinct, the election inspector shall determine if the name on the application to vote appears on the voter registration list. If the name appears on the voter registration list, the elector shall provide further identification by giving his or her date of birth or other information stated upon the voter registration list. In precincts using voter registration lists, the date of birth may be required to be placed on the application to vote. If the signature or an item of information does not correspond, the vote of the person shall be challenged, and the same procedure shall be followed as provided in this act for the challenging of an elector. If the person offering to vote has signed the registration card or application by making a mark, the person shall identify himself or herself by giving his or her date of birth, which shall be compared with the date of birth stated upon the registration card or voter registration list, or shall give other identification as may be referred to upon the registration card or voter registration list. If the elector does not have an official state identification card, operator's or chauffeur's license as required in this subsection, or other generally recognized picture identification card, the individual shall sign an affidavit to that effect before an election inspector and be allowed to vote as otherwise provided in this act. However, an elector being allowed to vote without the identification required under this subsection is subject to challenge as provided in section 727. (2) If, upon a comparison of the signature or other identification, it is found that the applicant is entitled to vote, the election officer having charge of the registration list shall approve the application and write his or her initials on the application, after which the number on the ballot issued shall be noted on the application. The application shall serve as 1 of the 2 poll lists required to be kept as a record of a person who has voted. The application shall be filed with the township, city, or village clerk. If voter registration cards are used in the precinct, the date of the election shall be noted by 1 of the election officials upon the precinct registration card of each elector voting at an election. If voter registration lists are used in the precinct, the election official shall clearly indicate upon the list each elector voting at that election. If, upon such comparison, the signature upon the voter's certificate appears to be genuine, the elector who has signed the certificate shall, if otherwise qualified, be permitted to vote: Provided, That if the signature on the voter's certificate, as compared with the signature as recorded in the district register, shall not be deemed authentic by any of the election officers, such elector shall not be denied the right to vote for that reason, but shall be considered challenged as to identity and required to make the affidavit and produce the evidence as provided in subsection (d) of this section. When an elector has been found entitled to vote, the election officer who examined his voter's certificate and compared his signature shall sign his name or initials on the voter's certificate, shall, if the elector's signature is not readily legible, print such elector's name over his signature, and the number of the stub of the ballot issued to him or his number in the order of admission to the voting machines, and at primaries a letter or abbreviation designating the party in whose primary he votes shall also be entered by one of the election officers or clerks. As each voter is found to be qualified and votes, the election officer in charge of the district register shall write or stamp the date of the election or primary, the number of the stub of the ballot issued to him or his number in the order of admission to the voting machines, and at primaries a letter or abbreviation designating the party in whose primary he votes, and shall sign his name or initials in the proper space on the registration card of such voter contained in the district register. (In effect at time of, and unaltered by: 2004, Oct. 8, P.L. 807, No.-97, § 5.1 (changes procedure for first time voters, not established voters))
Rhode Island	Give Name	(a) Each person desiring to vote shall state his or her name and residence, including that person's street address, if he or she has any, to one of the first pair of bi-partisan supervisors, who shall then announce the name and residence in a loud and distinct voice, clear and audible. As each voter's name is announced, the voter shall be handed a ballot application in the following form: BALLOT APPLICATION (Poll List) Senatorial District _____ Representative District _____ Voting District _____ Election _____ Date _____ I hereby certify that I am a registered and qualified elector in the above voting district of City of _____ and hereby make application for ballots to be voted at this election. _____ (Signature of Voter) _____ (Residence Address) Number Approved _____ (Supervisor of Election)	R.I. 		(b) The voter shall sign the application in the presence and view of a bipartisan pair. They shall locate the voter's name on the certified voting list for the voting district. Upon finding the voter's name on the certified voting list for the district, they shall initial the ballot application in the place provided next to the word "Approved" and shall enter on the certified list of voters a proper notation that the applicant has voted in the election. They shall then return the ballot application to the voter who shall pass down the line and present it to the clerk. After the voter has handed the approved ballot application to the clerk, the clerk shall provide the voter with the appropriate computer ballot and security sleeve, the warden shall direct the voter to the voting booth which the voter shall use, and unless the voter needs instruction or assistance as provided in this chapter, the voter shall cast his or her vote, and if he or she desires place the voted computer ballot in a security sleeve, and shall proceed to the optical scan precinct count unit and shall personally place his or her voted ballot into the designated ballot slot on the unit, and after doing so, shall leave the enclosure at once. No voter shall remain within the voting booth longer than ten (10) minutes, and if the voter refuses to leave after the lapse of ten (10) minutes, the voter shall be removed from the voting booth by order of the warden. Except for the election officials and the election inspector, not more than two (2) voters in excess of the number of voting booths shall be permitted within the enclosed space at any time. (Last amended 2004, Current through January 2005 Session)
South Carolina	Photo ID	§ 7-13-710. Proof of right to vote; signing poll list; comparison of signatures. When any person presents himself to vote, he shall produce his valid South Carolina driver's license or other form of identification containing a photograph issued by the Department of Motor Vehicles, if he is not licensed to drive, or the written notification of registration provided for by §§ 7-5-125 and 7-5-180 if the notification has been signed by the elector. If the elector loses or defaces his registration notification, he may obtain a duplicate notification from his county board of registration upon request in person, or by telephone or mail. After presentation of the required identification, his name must be checked by one of the managers on the margin of the page opposite his name upon the registration books, or copy of the books, furnished by the board of registration. The managers shall keep a poll list which must contain one column headed "Names of Voters". Before any ballot is delivered to a voter, the voter shall sign his name on the poll list, which must be furnished to the appropriate election officials by the State Election Commission. At the top of each page the voter's oath appropriate to the election must be printed. The signing of the poll list or the marking of the poll list is considered to be an affirmation of the oath by the voter. One of the managers shall compare the signature on the poll list with the signature on the voter's driver's license, registration notification, or other identification and may require further identification of the voter and proof of his right to vote under this title as he considers necessary. If the voter is unable to write or if the voter is prevented from signing by physical handicap, he may sign his name to the poll list by mark with the assistance of one of the managers. Last amended: 1968	S.C. Tennessee	Provide ID	Identification of eligible voters (a)(1) A voter shall sign an application for ballot, indicate the primary in which the voter desires to vote, if any, and present it to a registrar. The application for ballot shall include thereon a space for the address of the voter's current residence, and the voter shall write or print such address on the application when the voter signs it. The registrar shall compare the signature and information on the application with the signature and information on the duplicate permanent registration record. The registrar shall make a determination whether the voter's address is different from the address on the voter's permanent registration record or if the registration is in inactive status. If the voter has changed residence, or the voter's registration is inactive, the registrar shall follow the procedures for voting pursuant to § 2-7-140. If, upon comparison of the signature and other identification, it is found that the applicant is entitled to vote, the registrar shall initial the application and shall note on the reverse side of the voter's duplicate permanent registration record the date of the election, the number of the voter's ballot application, and the elections in which the voter votes. If the applicant's signature is illegible, the registrar shall print the name on the application. The registrar shall give the voter the ballot application which is the voter's identification for a paper ballot or ballots or for admission to a voting machine. The voter shall then sign the duplicate poll lists without leaving any lines blank on any poll list sheet. (2) In any computerized county, the county election commission shall have the option of using an application for a ballot as provided in this section, or using the computerized voter signature list. A computerized voter signature list shall include the voter's name, current address of residence, social security number or registration number, birth date and spaces for the voter's signature, elections voted, ballot number and precinct registrar's initials. The following procedures shall be followed in the case of computerized voter signature lists: (A) The voter shall sign the signature list and indicate the election or elections the voter desires to vote in and verify the voter's address in the presence of the precinct registrar; (B) The registrar shall compare the voter's signature and information on the signature list with other evidence of identification supplied by the voter. If, upon comparison of the signature and other evidence of identification, it is found that the applicant is entitled to vote, the registrar shall initial the signature list; (C) If the applicant's signature is illegible, the registrar shall print the name of the applicant on the voter list; and (D) If a voter is unable to present any evidence of identification specified in subsection (c), the voter shall be required to execute an affidavit of identity on a form provided by the county election commission. Last amended 2003	Tenn. APPENDIX B –Court Decisions and Literature on Voter Identification and Related Issues

Court Decisions

Summary of Relevant Cases:

Challenges Prevailed:

American Civil Liberties Union of Minnesota v. Kiffmeyer, 2004

- Action for temporary restraining order – granted
- Statute: allowed use of tribal identification cards w/ name, address & photo as a valid identification to register to vote only if the voter lives on the reservation to “complete” a mail-in application (which only affected about 600 voters w/ incomplete applications)
- Claim -14th Amendment EPC: likely to prevail, no rational basis for a distinction between Indians residing on reservations and those not
- Statute: may use certain forms of photo identification lacking address together with a utility bill but not tribal identification cards
- Claim -14th Amendment EPC: likely to prevail

Greidinger v. Davis, 1993

- Statute: mandated disclosure of SS # as a precondition to voter registration (rationale was voter identification, but the numbers were rarely used to verify identity & were disclosed in voter lists to both political parties and the public upon request)
- Claims:
 - 14th Amendment EPC: no classification (applied strict scrutiny)
 - Substantive due process: law invalid; found that the statute conditioned the fundamental right to vote on the consent to an invasion of privacy; this was found to be a substantial burden (applied strict scrutiny)
 - Compelling interests: preventing voter fraud (deemed compelling)
 - Necessary: fails, preventing voter fraud when allowing names for inspection could be achieved by supplying addresses and DOBs or use of voter registration numbers
 - HOWEVER: Court also made it clear that if the registration scheme kept the SS# for internal use only – it would be valid

Challenges Rejected:

League of Women Voters v. Blackwell, 2004.

- Sec. of State Directive: provisional ballots issued if first-time voter, who registered by mail and did not provide ID, cannot produce proper ID at the polls AND that the provisional ballot will only be counted if the voter returns to the poll before it closes w/ ID or can recite SS# or DL#
- Claims – Supremacy Clause & HAVA: ruled that HAVA did not specify how the first-time voters' identifications should be verified and this method was not unreasonable or too burdensome

Colorado Common Clause v. Davidson, 2004

- Statute: required all voters to show ID (most types permitted) before voting
- Claims:
 - HAVA: ruled that HAVA did not preempt more strict state laws & allowed States to be more strict as long as consistent with the purpose of HAVA (both HAVA & CO provisions' purposes were to prevent voter fraud)
 - Substantive due process and equal protection
 - No improper discrimination

013843

REVISED FINAL D R A F T
05/08/06

- Preventing voter fraud is a compelling interest since it is irreversible once vote is cast
- Only marginally more intrusive than HAVA, many types of identification permitted – thus, valid

McKay v. Thompson, 2000

- Statute: mandated disclosure of SS # as a precondition to voter registration
- Claims:
 - Privacy Act, Section 7: ruled that Tennessee voter system exempt from Privacy Act because it is pre-75
 - NVRA, permitting only min. amt. of info. necessary to prevent duplicate registration and determine eligibility: ruled that NVRA does not specifically forbid the use of SS#s & the Privacy Act specifically permits them pre-75
 - Substantive due process: ruled that internal use of SS# not a burden
 - Free Exercise, based on Bible's supposed prohibition on use of universal identifiers: ruled that law is generally applicable and thus valid
 - P&I, Article IV: does not protect in-state citizens
 - P&I, 14th Amend.: no protection for privilege where Congress authorized its infringement

Kemp v. Tucker, 1975

- Statute: required name, occupation, address, sex, race, height, hair color, eye color, and date of birth be listed on voter registration card for identification purposes
- Claims:
 - VRA: ruled that race was not made a "qualification" for voting
 - 15th Amendment: ruled that it did not abridge right to vote on account of race because rejection of application was due to failure to provide information, not race; race only one factor in identification
 - 14th Amendment EPC: ruled there was no distinction among voters

Perez v. Riddlehoover, 1966

- Statute: date of birth, place of birth, mother's first or maiden name, color of eyes, sex, race, occupation, and whether owner, tenant or boarder must appear on the registration for identification
- Claims:
 - VRA: ruled that it was not a "test or device" because it applied equally
 - 15th Amendment: same reasons

Cases in Which the Plaintiffs Have Prevailed in Challenging the Statute Requiring Voter Identification:

American Civil Liberties Union of Minnesota v. Kiffmeyer, No. 04-CV-4653, 2004 WL 2428690, at *1 (D. Minn. Oct. 28, 2004).

This was an action just before the November 2004 election for a temporary restraining order, which was granted. The ACLU challenged a Minnesota law allowing the use of tribal identification cards with the name, address, and photograph as a valid identification (equal to a driver's license) for use in "completing" an incomplete mail-in voter registration only if the Indian lives on the reservation. 2004 WL 2428690, at *1. The Court ruled that this distinction would likely violate the Equal Protection Clause because there was no rational basis for differentiating between the validity of the identification based on whether or not the cardholder lives on the reservation. Id. at *1, 3.

REVISED FINAL D R A F T

05/08/06

Secondly, the ACLU challenged a second statute which allowed the use of certain photo identification lacking the voter's address to be used together with a utility bill or bank statement as valid identification for registration. Id. at *3. The statute did not, however, permit using a tribal identification for this same purpose. Id. The Court ruled that this likely violated the equal protection clause as well. Id.

Greidinger v. Davis*, 988 F.2d 1344 (4th Cir. 1993).

This case challenged a Virginia law requiring the social security number for voter registration, which the State subsequently disclosed to the public and political parties upon request in voter registration lists, which included the social security numbers. Failure to provide the social security number resulted in the denial of the registration application. The law was challenged under the Equal Protection Clause and under substantive due process. The Court quickly rejected the equal protection challenge because the law made no classification. 988 F.2d at 1350.

The law was invalidated under substantive due process. Id. at 1355. The Court found that the statutory scheme conditioned the fundamental right to vote on the consent to an invasion of privacy, based on concerns of identity theft. Id. at 1353-54. The Court found this to be a substantial burden on the right to vote. Id. at 1354. The Court recognized that the government's interest in preventing voter fraud was compelling. Id. However, the Court found that disclosure of the information to the public and political parties was not necessary to achieve that interest. Id. Disclosure of addresses or dates of birth would be sufficient to aid the public in distinguishing between two voters with the same name. Id. at 1355. The Court did state that required disclosure of the social security number for internal use only would be valid. Id. at 1354 n.10.

Cases in Which the Statute or Practice of Voter Identification Has Been Upheld:

League of Women Voters v. Blackwell*, 340 F. Supp. 2d 823 (N.D. Ohio 2004).

The League of Women Voters challenged the Secretary of State's directive that provisional ballots should be issued to all first-time voters who registered by mail without providing identification who cannot show proper identification at the polls. 340 F. Supp. 2d at 828. The Directive also stated that the provisional ballots would only be counted if the voter orally recited his driver's license number or the last four digits of his social security number or returned to the polling place before it closed with some acceptable identification, including reciting those identification numbers. Id. The Court stated that HAVA only requires verification of eligibility of first time voters registering by mail; it does not say how that should be done. Id. at 831. The Court found the burden on the right to vote to be slight. Id. The Directive was found valid under HAVA and the Supremacy Clause because the number of uncounted votes would be small, the requirement was reasonable, and there was adequate notice of the requirement on the registration forms. Id. at 829-30.

Colorado Common Cause v. Davidson*, No. 04CV7709, 2004 WL 2360485, at *1 (Colo. Dist. Ct. Oct. 18, 2004).

In this case, the validity of three Colorado statutory provisions was challenged. The laws (1) required all in-person voters to show identification (not just first-time registrants); (2) provided that votes cast in the wrong precinct would not be counted; and (3) provided that provisional ballots would not be counted if the voter applied for an absentee ballot. 2004 WL 2360485, at *1. The plaintiffs also challenged the provisions under HAVA. The identification provision allowed nearly all forms of acceptable identification under HAVA. Id. at *6.

013845

The challenge to the identification requirement failed under both challenges. The Court interpreted HAVA as not intended to preempt state laws and as permitting states to be more strict than, but not inconsistent with, HAVA. Id. at *10. The Court felt that the purpose of both laws was the same, to reduce voter fraud, and thus, both laws could coexist. As to the Constitutional claim, both equal protection and substantive due process, the Court felt that preventing voter fraud, which is impossible to remedy once a vote is cast, is a compelling interest, and the Court also felt that a voter identification requirement for all voters, with many types of acceptable identification, was only marginally more intrusive than HAVA. Id. at 12. The Court also found no improper discrimination between voters. Id. Thus, the provision was upheld.

McKay v. Thompson*, 226 F.3d 752 (6th Cir. 2000).

The Sixth Circuit ruled that the Privacy Act, the National Voter Registration Act, Substantive Due Process, the Privileges and Immunities Clauses (Fourteenth Amendment & Article IV), and the First Amendment right to free exercise do not prohibit requiring disclosure of social security numbers as a precondition to voter registration.

The Privacy Act, Section 7, mandates that it is unlawful for a government to deny a right or privilege because of a citizen's refusal to disclose his social security number, unless the disclosure was required for a system established prior to 1975. 226 F.3d at 755 (citing Privacy Act of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-579 (1974)). Since Tennessee required social security numbers for voter registration since 1972, his challenge was rejected. 226 F.3d at 755. Second, the NVRA only permits requiring the minimum amount of information necessary to prevent duplicate voter registration and to determine eligibility. Id. at 755-56 (citing 42 U.S.C. §1973gg-3(c)(2)(B)). The Court rejected this challenge because the NVRA does not specifically forbid the use of social security numbers, and the Privacy Act, a more specific statute, grandfathered their use if prior to 1975. 226 F.3d at 756.

Finally, the plaintiff's constitutional claims were all rejected. His substantive due process claim was rejected because internal receipt and use of social security numbers does not burden the fundamental right to vote. Id. The free exercise challenge, based on the Bible's supposed prohibition of universal identifiers, was rejected because the law was generally applicable and not directed at particular religious practices. Id. The Privileges and Immunities Clause claim was rejected because the Clause does not apply to citizens of the state. Id. The Fourteenth Amendment Privileges and Immunities claim, based on the right to vote as unique to U.S. citizenship, was rejected because the Clause provides no protection where Congress has authorized the infringement. Id.

Kemp v. Tucker*, 396 F. Supp. 737 (M.D. Pa. 1975), aff'd, 423 U.S. 803.

A statute was upheld, which required name, occupation, address, sex, race, height, hair color, eye color, and date of birth to be recorded on the voter registration card and allowed registration officials to reject an incomplete application. 396 F. Supp. at 738. Claims were alleged under the Fourteenth Amendment's Equal Protection Clause, the Fifteenth Amendment, and the Voting Rights Act.

As to the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendment claims, the Court reasoned that preventing voter fraud is a compelling goal, and identification provisions are "an essential means of achieving the goal." Id. at 739. The Court also rejected the equal protection claim because the statutes did not create a distinction at all. Id. at 740 n.3. Since race is just one of several characteristics required, the Court found that it was intended for preventing voter fraud, not some other motive. Id. at 740. As to the VRA, the Court rejected the claim that it added race as a qualification for voting as frivolous. Id. As to a Fifteenth Amendment claim that it abridged the right to vote on account of race, the Court also made a distinction between rejecting a voter application because of race and rejecting an application because of failure to answer all relevant questions to assist in preventing voter fraud. Id. The statute was upheld.

Perez v. Rhiddlehoover*, 186 So. 2d 686 (La. Ct. App. 1966).

A voter registration requirement was challenged and upheld. The statute stated that date of birth, place of birth, mother's first or maiden name, color of eyes, sex, race, occupation, and whether owner, tenant or boarder must appear on the registration. 186 So.2d at 690. This information was required for identification of voters, especially when voters had the same name, to prevent duplicate voting. It was challenged under the Voting Rights Act of 1965 Section 4(a) which prohibits denying the right to vote for failure to comply with a "test or device." The Court felt that this requirement was not a test or device for discrimination because it applied equally. Id. at 691. The Court also determined that it was not in conflict with the Fifteenth Amendment either. Id.

Friendly House, et al. v. Janet Napolitano et al.*, CV 04-649 TUC DCB

On November 30, 2004, the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund (MALDEF) filed suit seeking to halt the implementation of Proposition 200. . Proposition 200 created a number of legal requirements to ensure that public benefits are not available to illegal immigrants. In particular, Proposition 200 requires that a person attempting to register to vote provide one of six specific forms of proof of United States citizenship. Compl. 12-13. Also, any person attempting to vote must present either one form of photo identification or two forms of non-photo identification. Id. at 13.

The lawsuit alleges two violations that directly relate to the voting identification restrictions. First, the lawsuit alleges a violation of the Twenty-Fourth and Fourteenth amendments in that a voter must pay a poll tax by spending money to purchase the required identification. Id. at 20. Second, the lawsuit alleges violation of the Voting Rights Act. Id. at 21. The lawsuit was recently dismissed by the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals for a lack of standing. The Circuit Court found that there was no injury-in-fact, meaning that once an injury occurs the suit will likely be refiled. Additionally, it should be noted that the voter identification issue is only a part of the lawsuit, and much of the focus has been on other aspects of Proposition 200.

Current Litigation Concerning Voter ID Issues²⁷

Litigation is filled with uncertainty. Litigation stemming from newly passed voter identification requirements will continue into the foreseeable future. Lawsuits are currently pending over voter identification requirements in Georgia and Indiana. Other states, such as Ohio, are considering new identification requirements that could lead to further litigation. The Georgia lawsuit has already succeeded in getting a preliminary injunction against the law in question, which will likely galvanize interested parties in other states to pursue similar litigation. Of course, if the injunction is eventually overturned at the appellate level it could have a similar chilling affect on future litigation.

This summary major litigation pending in Georgia and Indiana includes a brief assessment of the likelihood of success:

Georgia (Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups):

On September 19, 2005, Common Cause of Georgia, in conjunction with several other non-profit organizations, filed suit in Federal District Court against the Georgia Secretary of State and other election officials, challenging the constitutionality of Georgia's new voter identification requirements. The new law requires all voters attempting to cast a ballot in person to present a valid form of photographic identification. O.C.G.A. § 21-2-417. A voter that is unable to provide proper identification is given a provisional ballot. However, that provisional ballot will be counted only if the voter is able to subsequently present valid identification within two days of the election. Id.

The lawsuit alleges five separate violations of state and federal law. First, the complaint alleges that the identification requirements infringe on the right to vote guaranteed in the Georgia constitution (Compl. 32)²⁸. In addition, the Plaintiffs claim violations of the Federal Civil Rights Act and Voting Rights Act. (Compl. 36,38). Finally, the lawsuit alleges violations of the Fourteenth and Twenty-Fourth amendments to the U.S. Constitution. The complaint claims that the ID requirements constitute an "undue burden" on the right to vote, in violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment (Compl. 34). The ID requirement does not apply to most absentee voters, and thus the requirement is also over-broad and not narrowly tailored to address the stated purpose of preventing voter fraud (Compl. 34). The complaint further alleges that the cost of obtaining a photo ID constitutes a poll tax, in violation of the Twenty-Fourth Amendment, and that the cost is also a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment because it applies to voters who choose to vote in person, and not to those who vote absentee (Compl. 34,35).

On October 18, 2005, the District Court granted the Plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction, enjoining the application of the new identification requirements. In granting the injunction, the court held that both federal constitutional claims had a substantial likelihood of succeeding on the merits at trial (Prelim. Inj. 96, 104). The court also held that, while the two federal statutory claims were plausible, they both lacked sufficient evidence at the time to have a substantial likelihood of success. (Prelim. Inj. 109,111,116). Finally, the court held that the Georgia constitutional claim would be barred by the Eleventh Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. (Prelim. Inj. 77).

The Defendants appealed the motion for preliminary injunction to the Eleventh Circuit, and oral argument is scheduled for March 1, 2006. In addition, some news reports have claimed that the Georgia legislature is considering re-visiting the ID requirements in light of the on-going litigation.²⁹ As for the merits, in granting the preliminary injunction the District Court has already signaled its belief that the federal constitutional claims are likely meritorious. The Eleventh Circuit may have a different view, but for now the case looks to have a reasonable chance of success.

Indiana (Indiana Democratic Party v. Rokita and Crawford v. Marion County Election Board):

The Indiana lawsuit is similar to its Georgia counterpart in content, though not in status. In Indiana separate lawsuits, now joined, were filed by the state Democratic Party and the Indiana Civil Liberties Union (ICLU). The Democratic Party's lawsuit is directed against the Indiana Secretary of State, while the ICLU's lawsuit involves the Marion County Board of Elections and the State of Indiana. Like Georgia, Indiana law also requires citizens voting in person to present some form of official photo identification. IC § 3-11-8-25.1. Voters unable to present identification are given a provisional ballot, which is counted if they are able to provide the required identification by Noon on the second Monday following the election. IC § 3-11.7-5-1. Unlike Georgia, Indiana provides state issued identification at no charge. However, there are costs involved in the process, including transportation to the Bureau of Motor Vehicles, and payment for documents such as birth certificates, which are needed to obtain the ID. (Second Am. Compl. 6).

The Democratic Party's complaint raises Fourteenth Amendment claims similar to those in the Georgia lawsuit, including concerns about substantially burdening the right to vote, the enactment of a de-facto poll tax from the costs indirectly associated with obtaining ID, and the lack of applicability to voters who cast an absentee ballot. (Second Am. Compl. 6-9). In addition, the complaint alleges that the substantial burden placed on the right to vote violates the First Amendment protection of expressive or symbolic speech, as well as the freedom of association as applied to Democratic primary elections. (Second Am. Compl. 9-10). Finally, the complaint alleges violations of the Voting Rights Act, National Voter Registration Act, and the Help America Vote Act (Second Am. Compl. 10-11). The ICLU's complaint alleges many of the same violations, but also includes claims of a violation of Indiana's constitutional guarantee of a free and equal election system. (Compl. 15)

The case is currently in the pre-trial phase, with both sides awaiting decisions on their respective motions for summary judgment.³⁰ The likelihood of success is bolstered by the fact that the Fourteenth amendment constitutional claims have already been found persuasive by at least one other Federal District Court. However, the Indiana law is notably different than its Georgia counterpart in that it provides free identification. While the plaintiffs make a solid argument that related costs still amount to a poll-tax, it is possible that the court could distinguish on this matter.

Unlike the Georgia case, the Indiana lawsuit also claims a violation of the Help America Vote Act. Although the claim is not completely clear, it seems as though the Plaintiffs are arguing that the Indiana statute requires more stringent identification than what is required by HAVA. 42 U.S.C. § 15483(b)(1)-(2). While this is true, it is unclear how this violates the statute. HAVA merely states that certain voters unable to produce HAVA required identification be given a provisional ballot. Id. Indiana law meets this requirement. IC § 3-11-8-25.1. Although Indiana law requires more stringent identification for counting the provisional ballot, HAVA leaves these decisions to state law. 42 U.S.C. § 15482(a).

³⁰ According to an AP article, the Plaintiffs filed some type of brief on December 21—however it is not yet up on the Moritz website and I am unsure how to access it otherwise.

Analysis of Effects of Voter Identification Requirements on Turnout

Introduction

A key area of disagreement in the policy debate over voter identification requirements concerns whether such requirements dampen voter turnout. Opponents of voter identification laws argue that they constitute an institutional barrier to voting, particularly among the poor, African-Americans, Hispanics, the elderly and people with disabilities (Baxter and Galloway 2005, Electionline.org 2002, Jacobs 2005, Young 2006). This argument holds that voter identification requirements create an extra demand on voters, and thus may discourage some of them from participating in elections. Further, critics of voter identification requirements contend that the effect is greater for some specific types of requirements. For example, critics argue that requiring voters to produce government-issued photo identification on Election Day is more demanding than, say, requiring that they state their names at the polling place. Supporters of voter identification requirements, on the other hand, argue that the requirements are necessary to combat voter fraud, safeguard the integrity of the electoral process, and engender faith in the electoral process among citizens (Young 2006).

This report examines the potential variation in turnout rates based on the type of voter identification requirement in place in each state on Election Day 2004. It draws on two sets of data – aggregate turnout data at the county level for each state, as compiled by the Eagleton Institute of Politics, and individual-level survey data included in the November 2004 Current Population Survey conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau. Classification of voter identification requirements comes from a review of state statutes conducted by the Moritz College of Law at the Ohio State University.

Types of voter identification requirements

Based on research performed for this study by the Moritz College of Law, states had one of five types of requirements in place on Election Day 2004. Upon arrival at polling places, voters had to: state their names (nine states); sign their names (13 states and the District of Columbia); match their signature to a signature on file with the local election board (eight states); provide a form of identification that did not necessarily include a photo (15 states); or provide a photo identification (five states).¹ It was then possible to code the states according to these requirements, and test the assumption that voter identification requirements would pose an increasingly demanding requirement in this order: stating one's name, signing one's name, matching one's signature to a signature on file, providing a form of identification, and providing a form of photo identification.

But election laws in numerous states offer exceptions to these requirements if individuals lack the necessary form of identification, and laws in those states set a minimum standard that a voter must meet in order to vote using a regular ballot (as opposed to a provisional ballot). Thus it is also possible to categorize states based on the minimum requirement for voting with a regular ballot. In 2004 the categories were somewhat different compared to the maximum requirement, in that none of the states required photo identification as a minimum standard for voting with a regular ballot. Four states, however, required voters to swear an affidavit as to their identity (Florida, Indiana, Louisiana, and North Dakota). The five categories for minimum requirements were: state name (12 states), sign name (14 states and the District of Columbia), match one's signature to a signature on file (six states), provide a non-photo identification (14 states), or swear an affidavit (four states). For the purposes of this analysis I treated the array of minimum identification requirements also in terms of increasing demand on the voter: state name, sign name, match signature, provide non-photo identification, and, given the potential legal consequences for providing false information, swearing an affidavit.

This report examines turnout among U.S. citizens of voting age in both the aggregate- and the individual-level data. Determining citizenship status in the individual-level data simply involved restricting the analyses to individuals who identified themselves as citizens in the November 2004 Current Population Survey. (Those who said they were not citizens did not have the opportunity to answer the supplemental voting questions contained in the Current Population Survey.)

In the aggregate data, determining the percentage of the voting-age population that has U.S. citizenship posed a methodological challenge. The Census Bureau gathers information on the citizenship status of adults ages 18 and older only during the decennial census. While the Census Bureau provides annual estimates of the population to account for changes between decennial censuses, the bureau does not offer estimates for the proportion of the adult population who are citizens as part of the annual estimates. To address this issue I estimated the 2004 citizen voting-age population for each county using a method reported in the analysis of the 2004 Election Day Survey conducted for the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (U.S. Election Assistance Commission, 2005). I calculated the percentage of the 2000 voting-age population who were citizens in 2000, and applied that percentage to the July 1, 2004 estimates for voting-age population in each county. In other words, I assumed that the percentage of the voting-age population that had U.S. citizenship in 2004 was similar to the percentage of the voting-age population who were citizens in 2000.²

² McDonald and Popkin (2001) recommend an even more stringent approach to voter turnout calculations. They point out that voting-age population estimates include adults who are ineligible to vote (such as convicted felons), and the estimates overlook eligible citizens living overseas. While estimates of the voting-eligible population are available at the state level, I was unable to find such estimates for individual counties, which provide the unit of analysis for the aggregate data analyzed here.

Analysis of aggregate data

If one treats maximum voter identification requirements as an ordinal variable, with photo identification as the most demanding requirement, one finds some statistical support for the premise that as the level of required proof increases, turnout declines. Averaging across counties in each state, statewide turnout is negatively correlated with maximum voter identification requirements ($r = -.30, p < .0001$). In considering the array of minimum requirements, with affidavit as the most demanding requirement, voter identification also is negatively correlated with turnout ($r = -.20, p < .0001$). Breaking down the turnout rates by type of requirement reveals in greater detail the relationship between voter identification requirements and voter turnout.

The aggregate data show that 60.9 percent of the estimated citizen voting age population voted in 2004. Differences in voter turnout at the state level in 2004 varied based on voter identification requirements. Taking into account the maximum requirements, an average of 64.6 percent of the voting age population turned out in states that required voters to state their names, compared to 58.1 percent in states that required photo identification. A similar trend emerged when considering minimum requirements. Sixty-three percent of the voting age population turned out in states requiring voters to state their names, compared to 60.1 percent in states that required an affidavit from voters.

Voter identification requirements alone, however, do not determine voter turnout. Multivariate models that take into account other predictors of turnout can paint a more complete picture of the relationship between voter identification requirements and turnout. I estimated the effects of voter identification requirements in multivariate models that also took into account the electoral context in 2004 and demographic characteristics of the population in each county. I coded the voter identification requirements on a scale of one to five, with one representing the least demanding form of identification and five representing the most demanding form of identification. To capture electoral context I included whether the county was in a presidential battleground state (any state in which the margin of victory for the winning candidate was five percent or less), and whether the county was in a state with a competitive race for governor and/or the U.S. Senate (also using the threshold of a margin of victory of five percent or less). Drawing from U.S. Census projections for 2003, I included the percentage of the voting-age population in each county that was Hispanic or African-American to control for ethnicity and race. I controlled for age using the 2003 Census projection for the percentage of county residents age 65 and older, and I controlled for socioeconomic status by including the percentage of individuals who fell below the poverty line in each county in the 2000 Census.

I estimated a series of random intercept models to account for the likelihood that data from counties were correlated within each state (for further explanation of random intercept and other multilevel models, see Bryk and Raudenbush 1992, Luke 2004, Singer 1998).³ The dependent variable in each model was voter turnout at the county level, with turnout calculated as the percentage of the estimated citizen voting-age population that voted in the 2004 election.

Turning first to an analysis using the maximum identification requirements, those requirements had a small and negative effect on turnout in 2004 controlling for electoral context and demographic factors. Both contextual factors (whether the county was in a state that was a battleground state and whether that state had a competitive race for governor and/or U.S. Senate) increased voter turnout. As the percentage of senior citizens in the county increased, so did turnout. The percentage of African-Americans in the county exerted a positive effect on voter turnout, and the percentage of individuals living below the poverty line had a negative effect. The effect of the percentage of Hispanic adults in the county on turnout fell just short of statistical significance ($p = .05$).

I then sought to test the hypothesis that voter identification requirements dampen turnout among minorities and the poor, a claim voiced by some critics of the requirements. To test this idea I incorporated a series of interactions between the maximum voter identification requirements and the percentage of African-Americans, Hispanics, and poor individuals in the counties. The interaction involving African-Americans was not significant, but those involving Hispanics and poor individuals were significant.⁴ In addition, adding the interactions to the model resulted in the percentage of Hispanics in the population having a direct and negative effect on turnout. The interactions suggest that voter identification requirements have a greater effect for Hispanics and those living below the poverty line. A chi-square test of the difference in the deviance for each model (represented by $-2 \log$ likelihood in Table 2), shows that the model with interactions provides a better fit to the data ($p < 0.005$).

I also estimated the effects of the minimum voter identification requirements holding constant the effects of electoral context and the demographic variables.

The effects of the minimum requirements fell short of statistical significance ($p = 0.08$). The battleground state variable continued to exert a positive influence on turnout, while the presence of a competitive race for governor and/or U.S. Senate had no statistically significant effect. As in the maximum identification requirement model, as the percentage of the population that is poor increased, turnout declined. As the percentage of elderly increased, so did turnout. The proportion of African-Americans in the population had a positive effect on turnout, while the percentage of Hispanics did not affect turnout.

⁴ The interactions are labeled in Tables 2 and 3 as VID*African-American, VID*Hispanic, and VID*Poverty. To calculate the effects of voter identification requirements for a specific group, one must add the estimates for voter identification, the group, and the interaction. Doing so for Hispanic adults results in an estimate of $-0.13 [-0.03$ (voter id) $- 0.13$ (Hispanic) $+ 0.03$ (voter id X Hispanic)].

Adding interactive effects to the model resulted in a statistically significant and negative effect of minimum voter identification requirements on turnout. The percentage of Hispanic adults in the county had a significant and negative effect on turnout, and the percentage of individuals below the poverty line continued to have a negative effect. Interactions between the percentages of Hispanics and those below the poverty line and minimum voter identification requirements also were significant. The percentage of African-Americans in the county and the interaction between African-Americans and voter identification requirements were not significant. A chi-square test for the difference in fit between the two models showed that the model with interactions provides a better fit to the data ($p < .025$).

Analysis of the aggregate data at the county level generates some support for the hypothesis that as the demands of voter identification requirements increase, turnout declines. This is particularly so for counties with concentrations of Hispanic residents or individuals who live below the poverty line. But aggregate data cannot fully capture the individual demographic factors that may figure into the decision to turn out to vote. For example, previous research has found that education is a powerful determinant of turnout (Wolfinger and Rosenstone 1980, but see also Nagler 1991).⁵ Married individuals also are more likely to vote than those who are not married (Alvarez and Ansolabehere 2002; Alvarez, Nagler and Wilson 2004; Fisher, Kenny, and Morton 1993). To fully explore the effects of voter identification requirements on turnout, it is important to examine individual-level data as well.

Individual-level turnout data exists in the November 2004 Current Population Survey conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau. The Census Bureau conducts the CPS monthly to measure unemployment and other workforce data, but the bureau adds a battery of voter participation questions to the November survey in even-numbered years to coincide with either a presidential or midterm Congressional election.

One of the advantages of the CPS is the sheer size of the sample. The survey's Voting and Registration Supplement consisted of interviews, either by telephone or in person, with 96,452 respondents.⁶ The large sample size permits analyses of smaller groups, such as Black or Hispanic voters or voters with less than a high school education. The analyses reported here are based on reports from self-described registered voters. I omitted those who said they were not registered to vote. I also excluded those who said they cast absentee ballots because the identification requirements for absentee ballots may differ from those required when one votes in person. In addition, I eliminated from the sample respondents who said they were not U.S.

⁵ A reviewer for an earlier version of this paper recommended adding an education variable to the aggregate model. One version of the aggregate model not reported here included the percentage of adults in the county who had at least a college degree. The measure was highly collinear with the percentage of residents living below the poverty line, necessitating removal of the college degree variable from the model.

⁶ It is important to note that the Census Bureau allows respondents to answer on behalf of themselves and others in the household during the interview. While proxy reporting of voter turnout raises the possibility of inaccurate reports concerning whether another member of the household voted, follow-up interviews with those for whom a proxy report had been given in the November 1984 CPS showed 99 percent agreement between the proxy report and the information given by the follow-up respondent (U.S. Census Bureau 1990).

The dependent variable in these analyses is whether a respondent said he or she voted in the November 2004 election.⁷ As in the analysis of aggregate data, I coded voter identification requirements for each respondent's state of residence on a scale of one to five, with one representing the least demanding requirement (stating one's name) and five representing the most demanding requirement (photo identification or affidavit).

In addition to the voter identification requirements, the models include two other state-level factors that might have influenced turnout in 2004: whether the state was considered a battleground state in the presidential election, and whether there was a gubernatorial and/or U.S. Senate race in the state (see Alvarez and Ansolabehere 2002, Alvarez et al. 2004, and Kenny et al. 1993 for similar approaches). As in the aggregate data analysis, the threshold that determined whether the state was a battleground state or had a competitive statewide race was a margin of victory of five percent or less. At the individual level, I controlled for gender, age in years, education, household income, and dummy variables representing whether a voter was Black/non-Hispanic, Hispanic, or another non-white race (with white/non-Hispanic voters as the omitted category for reference purposes).⁸ Drawing on previous research on voting behavior, I also controlled for whether an individual was employed, or at least a member of the workforce (as opposed to being a full-time student, a homemaker, or retired). Both employment and workforce membership have been shown to be positive predictors of turnout (see Mitchell and Wlezien 1995). Marital status, whether one is a native-born citizen and residential mobility also have emerged as significant predictors of turnout (Alvarez and Ansolabehere 2002, Alvarez et al. 2004, Kenney et al. 1993, Wolfinger and Rosenstone 1980). I included in the model variables for whether a respondent was married (coded 1 if yes, 0 otherwise), and whether one was a native-born citizen (coded 1 if yes, 0 otherwise). I measured residential mobility by coding for whether the respondent had moved to a new address in the six months prior to the interview (coded 1 if yes, 0 otherwise).

Results

The dependent variable is whether a respondent said he or she voted in the November 2004 election (coded 1 for yes, 0 for no). I estimated models using probit analysis, which

⁷ The U.S. Census Bureau reported, based on the November 2004 CPS, that 89 percent of those who identified themselves as registered voters said they voted in 2004 (U.S. Census Bureau 2005). Previous research has shown that, generally speaking, some survey respondents overstate their incidence of voting. Researchers speculate that over-reports may be due to the social desirability that accompanies saying one has done his or her civic duty, or a reluctance to appear outside the mainstream of American political culture (U.S. Census Bureau 1990). It is also possible that voting is an indication of civic engagement that predisposes voters to agree to complete surveys at a higher rate than non-voters (Flanigan and Zingale 2002). Hence the voter turnout rates reported in the CPS tend to be up to 10 percentage points higher than the actual turnout rate for the nation (Flanigan and Zingale 2002). Even with this caveat, however, the CPS serves as a widely accepted source of data on voting behavior.

⁸ Asian-Americans are included in the "other non-white races" category. In response to a request from officials at the U.S. Election Assistance Commission who had read an earlier version of this paper and were curious about the experiences of Asian-Americans, I ran models using Asian-Americans as a separate category in addition to the models presented here. Voter identification requirements did not have a statistically significant effect on whether Asian-American voters said they turned out in the 2004 election.

calculates the effects of independent variables on the probability that an event occurred – in this case whether a respondent said he or she voted. I estimated the models using robust standard errors to control for correlated error terms for observations from within the same state.

The two models in Table 4 use either the maximum or minimum voter identification requirements in each state. The two models generate virtually identical results. Voter identification requirements exert a statistically significant, negative effect on whether survey respondents said they had voted in 2004. Of the other state factors, only the competitiveness of the presidential race had a significant effect on turnout. In terms of demographic influences, African-American voters were more likely than white voters to say they had cast a ballot, while those of other non-white races were less likely than white voters to say they had turned out. Hispanic voters were not statistically different from white voters in terms of reported turnout. Consistent with previous research, age, education, income, and marital status all were positive predictors of voting. Women also were more likely to say they voted than men. Those who had moved within six months before the interview were less likely to say they had voted.

While the probit models provide statistical support for the influence of voter identification requirements and other variables on turnout, probit coefficients do not lend themselves to intuitive interpretation. Another common approach in studies of election requirements is to examine how the predicted probability of voter turnout would vary as election requirements vary. I used the probit coefficients to calculate the predicted probability of voting at each level of voter identification requirements while holding all other independent variables in the models at their means.⁹ I calculated the probabilities taking into account both maximum and minimum requirements, with photo identification serving as the most demanding of the maximum requirements and affidavits as the most-demanding minimum requirement.

Allowing the voter identification requirement to vary while holding constant all other variables in the model showed that the predicted probability of turnout ranged from 0.912 for stating one's name to 0.887 for photo identification under the maximum requirements. In other words, the probability of voting dropped with each level of voter identification requirement, with a total drop of .025, or 2.5 percent, across the five types of identification.¹⁰ When taking into account the minimum requirement for identification, the probability showed a similar decline, with a slightly larger total drop of 3.3 percent.

Among the key variables of interest in the debate over voter identification requirements are race, age, income, and education. Given the large sample size (54,973 registered voters), it was possible to break the sample into sub-samples along those demographic lines to explore variation in predicted probability by group. I disaggregated the sample by the variable of interest, omitting that variable while I re-ran the probit model with the remaining predictors of voter turnout, including the voter identification requirements.¹¹ If the analysis showed that the voter identification requirements had a statistically significant effect on turnout, I used the probit coefficients from the model to calculate the predicted probability of voting for each group across the five requirements while holding the other variables in the model constant.

¹⁰ The voter turnout percentages may seem disproportionately high compared to the turnout rates reported in the aggregate data analysis. It is important to consider that the turnout rates in the aggregate data were a proportion of all citizens of voting-age population, while the turnout rates for the individual-level data are the proportion of only registered voters who said they voted.

Both the maximum and minimum identification requirements had negative and statistically significant effects for White/Non-Hispanic voters. Allowing the requirements to vary from stating one's name to providing photo identification or an affidavit showed drops of 2.5 percent and 3.2 percent respectively in the predicted probability of voting. The identification requirements had no effect on the probability of Black/Non-Hispanics voting, but the minimum identification requirements had a comparatively sizable effect on voter turnout among Hispanics. The predicted probability of Hispanics voting ranged from 87 percent if stating one's name was the required form of identification to 77.3 percent if a voter would have to provide an affidavit in order to vote, a difference of 9.7 percent.

The effects of voter identification requirements also varied by age, with the greatest variation occurring among voters ages 18 to 24.

Voters in that age group had a predicted probability of 83.9 percent when the maximum requirement was stating one's name, and the probability dropped 8.9 percentage points if voters would have to provide photo identification. The range was from 83.1 percent to 75.4 percent under the minimum requirements. The gap in probability narrowed in older age groups (4.8 percent for the maximum requirements and 5.8 percent for the minimum requirements for those ages 25 to 44; 1.8 percent for the minimum requirements for those ages 45 to 64, and 2.4 percent for the minimum requirements for those ages 65 and older).

Breaking down the 18- to 24-year-old age group by race shed additional light on the effects of voter identification requirements on specific groups.

The gap in predicted probability that White/Non-Hispanic voters in the 18- to 24-year-old category would turn out was 9.2 percent when the identification requirements varied from stating one's name to providing photo identification. The gap was 7.8 percent when taking into account the minimum requirements. The effects of maximum voter identification requirements also were statistically significant for African-Americans in the 18- to 24-year-old age group, with a gap in the predicted probability of voting of 10.6 percent. Maximum and minimum voter identification requirements were not a significant predictor of voting among Hispanics ages 18 to 24.

Variation also emerged along the lines of income, with the effects of voter identification requirements varying to a greater extent for voters in households below the poverty line compared to those living above the poverty line.¹²

While the maximum set of requirements did not have a statistically significant effect for voters living below the poverty line, the minimum set of requirements had a significant and negative effect. The probability of voting was .784 for poor voters if they would have to identify themselves by giving their name, and the probability declined to .731 if they would have to provide an affidavit attesting to their identity. Both the maximum and minimum sets of requirements had a significant and negative effect on voters living above the poverty line, but the difference in probability across the effects was narrower (2.3 percent for the maximum requirements and 3.1 percent for the minimum requirements). Given that political discourse about voter identification requirements includes concerns about the effects of the requirements on poor and minority voters, I also ran probit analyses for sub-samples of white and minority voters who fell below the poverty line. The voter identification requirements did not exert statistically significant effects on turnout among poor White/Non-Hispanic and Hispanic voters, but did have a significant effect on Black/Non-Hispanic voters who were below the poverty line.¹³ Allowing the maximum voting requirement to vary from the least to the most demanding, the probability that African-American voters below the poverty line said they had voted dropped by 7.5 percent.

The effects of voter identification requirements varied across education levels as well, with those lowest in education demonstrating the widest variation in probabilities as identification requirements ranged from least to most demanding.

Registered voters who had less than a high school education had a 77.5 percent probability of voting if the maximum requirement would be stating one's name, and a 70.8 percent probability if they would have to provide photo identification under the maximum requirement, a difference of 6.7 percent. The difference from the lowest to the highest requirement among the minimum requirements was 7.4 percent. The difference in probabilities ranged from 3.3 percent for the maximum requirements to 4.5 percent for the minimum requirements for voters with a high school diploma. The range of effects of voter identification requirements was smaller among those with higher levels of education (and non-existent for one category – voters with some college education).

¹³ The lack of significant effects for poor Hispanic voters is in contrast to the results from the aggregate data analysis. The sub-sample of poor Hispanic voters was small (n = 491), which may have contributed to the lack of statistical significance.

Discussion and conclusion

The results presented here provide evidence that as the level of demand associated with voter identification requirements increases, voter turnout declines. This point emerged from both the aggregate data and the individual-level data, although not always for both the maximum and minimum sets of requirements. The overall effect for all registered voters was fairly small, but still statistically significant.

The effects of voter identification requirements were more pronounced for specific subgroups. Hispanic voters and the poor appeared to be less likely to vote as the level of required identification became more demanding, according to both the aggregate and the individual-level data. In the individual-level data, for Hispanic voters, the probability of voting dropped by 9.7 percent across the various levels of minimum identification requirements. Survey respondents living in poor households were 5.3 percent less likely to vote as the requirements varied from stating one's name to attesting to one's identity in an affidavit. African-American voters from households below the poverty line were 7.5 percent less likely to vote as the maximum requirements varied from stating one's name to providing photo identification.

Effects of voter requirements also varied with education. Registered voters who had not graduated from high school were 6.7 percent less likely to say they voted as the maximum requirements ranged from stating one's name to providing photo identification. When considering the minimum requirements, those with less than a high school education were 7.4 percent less likely to say they voted if the requirement was an affidavit as opposed to stating one's name. Age was also a key factor, with voters ages 18 to 24 being 7.7 percent to 8.9 percent less likely to vote as the requirements ranged from stating one's name to providing a photo identification or affidavit. Breaking down the age group by race, the effects were significant for young White/Non-Hispanic and Black/Non-Hispanic voters.

The results shed additional light on the effects of voter identification requirements on two groups often projected as being particularly sensitive to such requirements: African-American voters and elderly voters. The effects on African-American voters were pronounced for two specific sub-samples: African-American voters living below the poverty line and those in the 18- to 24-year-old age group. Also, the elderly, while they would be slightly less likely to vote as requirements ranged from least to most demanding, would not necessarily be affected in the dramatic manner predicted by some opposed to photo identification requirements in particular.

In examining the effects of voter identification requirements on turnout, there is still much to learn. The data examined in this project could not capture the dynamics of how identification requirements might lower turnout. If these requirements dampen turnout, is it because individuals are aware of the requirements and stay away from the polls because they cannot or do not want to meet the requirements?¹⁴ Or, do the requirements result in some voters

¹⁴ The individual-level data offer some insight here. If advance knowledge of the voter identification requirements were to dampen turnout, it is reasonable to expect that advance knowledge of those requirements also could discourage some individuals from registering to vote. I ran the same probit models using voter registration as the dependent variable (coded 1 if the respondent said he or she was registered, and 0 if the respondent was not being turned away when they cannot meet the requirements on Election Day? The CPS data do not include measures that can answer this question. Knowing more about the “on the ground” experiences of voters concerning identification requirements could guide policy-makers at the state and local level in determining whether and at what point in the electoral cycle a concerted public information campaign might be most effective in helping voters to meet identification requirements. Such knowledge also could help in designing training for election judges to handle questions about, and potential disputes over, voter identification requirements.

registered). Neither the maximum nor minimum array of voter identification requirements had a statistically significant effect on the probability that a survey respondent was registered to vote.

A few items on timelines and materials for May 23-24 meetings:

The Commissioners will review the final Eagleton Voter ID and Provisional Voting reports at their Tuesday, May 16 meeting. At this meeting they will decide how they wish to present these reports to the EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Boards.

Your materials that will be distributed to the EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Boards must be finalized and ready for our Xeroxing process by Thursday, May 18. I will be in touch along the way to provide input/guidance on what these materials should be, based on the Commissioner's review and decisions

It is my understanding that Adam Ambrogi has been in touch with Ned Foley and, in turn, Dan Tokaji to indicate that you and Dan will present the information on the Voter ID project, while you and Ned will present the information on the Provisional Voting project.

Adam Ambrogi can also clarify your presentations. As I understand it, you will present your Voter ID and Provisional Voting projects to the Standards Board. You will then present your Voter ID and Provisional Voting Projects to the Board of Advisors.

I believe Adventure Travel handles hotel and travel arrangements.

I do not believe accommodations have been made for other members of the project team to attend. I will ask Adam Ambrogi, who is the principal point of contact on these meetings, to clarify this.

Karen,

As we discussed last week, the Eagleton-Moritz team making the presentations at the advisory board meetings will include others in addition to Ned and me. While Ned and I will handle the briefing on the provisional voting report, the team for the briefing on the Voter ID report will include Dan Tokaji and Tim Vercellotti.

Karen,

hi. My own take on this is that we would get a much better idea of the impact of reforms if we had a database of how those reforms changed over time. Looking across states is always going to be problematic.

Notification to bidders

You are hereby advised that the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) has competitively awarded a contract to the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey for research assistance to support the development of guidance on the two topics of provisional voting and voter identification procedures. Eagleton is partnering with the Moritz College of Law of Ohio State University for this work effort. The amount of this award is $560,002.

EAC appreciates the interest you have expressed in supporting our research agenda by submitting a proposal for this work. Should you wish to receive a de-brief on this procurement, please contact Carol A. Paquette, Interim Executive Director, by email at cpaquette@eac.gov.

The EAC has identified three academics who are going to serve as peer reviewers of the Eagleton Voter ID paper and research.

They are Jonathan Nagler of New York University, Jan Leighley, University of Arizona, and Adam Berinsky of MIT.

They are ready to review the documents as soon as they are available.

I would like to them one week to review the material and then have a joint conference call on Thursday, May 11, in which we would all have an opportunity to discuss the research methodology and statistical analysis, along with general comments and suggestions.

If you are able to get to me the paper and the supporting data analysis, I will distribute to the documents ASAP.

Also let me know, if you would, your availability on May 11 to do this conference all.

Subject No-Cost Extension Request

Karen - We are requesting a no-cost extension on the EAC contract to the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University to have the contract's concluding date move from March 31, 2006 to June 30, 2006. As I indicated earlier, it would be very helpful if we could receive approval of this request no later than April 28th.

This extension is necessary to enable the following activities:

1. The EAC has informed us that it will assemble a panel of researchers the week of May 8th to review the Eagleton/Moritz draft background report on Voter Identification. The EAC wishes to supplement the review of this draft already conducted by the Peer Review Group called for in the contract. The Eagleton/Moritz research team, as well as at least some of the Peer Review Group will participate in the conference call or meeting of the EAC's reviewers;
2. Eagleton/Moritz will revise the draft Voter Identification report based upon comments made by the two sets of reviewers, and distribute the revised report to the EAC and its Advisory Board in mid-May.
3. Eagleton/Moritz will present its draft reports on Provisional Voting and Voter Identification to the EAC Advisory Board at its May 25th meeting in Washington, D.C.;
4. Eagleton/Moritz will revise both draft reports to take into account comments made by the EAC Advisory Board, and submit printed final reports to the EAC before June 23rd. Eagleton/Moritz will also prepare a PowerPoint presentation for both reports.
5. Eagleton/Moritz will present both reports at the EAC public meeting in Washington, D.C. on June 23rd, thus concluding its work under this contract.

Please let me know if you need any additional information.

Thanks,

John

I saw this before. It's helpful for me to know the proposed end-date, but what we need to get Tom's signature--for this project and Cleveland State--is a memorandum to the file explaining why we are granting the extension and modification, respectively.

From what I understand, in addition to other things, we need the memo in the file to explain our thought process if anything is ever challenged. I think that Eagleton wrote the memo for you last time, but if not, I know you gave it to me...

Subject No Cost Extensions (with extensions)

Attachment 1-EAC Eagleton Institute budget for no-cost extension-1.xls Attachment 2-EAC Eagleton Institute Budget 3-22-05-1.xls
Karen - I am attaching a spreadsheet providing the information you have requested (Attachment 1), but I want to highlight a few points which may not be immediately self-evident.

First, the original budget (Attachment 2) we submitted to the EAC, dated March 22nd, did not itemize personnel expenses by each person. In addition, when we actually began work two months after submitting that budget, we decided to reallocate more time to people within Eagleton and hire fewer outside hourlies.

Second, in the figures I sent you in late December we tried to account for all the expenses and projections but overlooked a few things including neglecting to include the honoraria for our peer review team. Hence, the figures we're now sending are different than what I sent in December.

Lastly, we originally discussed a no-cost extension through February, but since we don't yet have the EAC comments on our draft Provisional Voting material nor an estimate of when they are likely to be ready, I think it is prudent to extend the no-cost extension through March 31st. We would still like to conclude by the end of February, but if you can approve the extension for another month we could avoid going through this process again if everything is not complete six weeks from now.

It is my understanding that Rutgers will soon be sending our December invoice. At this time, I would also like to request that we combine January and February an invoice the EAC once for that time period.

As you can see, we are currently projecting an ending balance of approximately $10,000. If additional expenses are incurred beyond what is currently projected, we're confident they will not exceed the original budget of $560,002.

Thanks and I look forward to hearing from you.

Subject Re: No Cost Extension Request

Karen - Our request for a no-cost, reallocation of resources is based on (a) the fact that our personnel costs have already been higher than we anticipated and (b) the reality that keeping the project operating for at least nine months, instead of seven as planned, will require the participants to devote more time than anticipated. While we are not producing more product than originally promised, the time involved in our work continues to increase. Both Provisional Voting and Voter ID have proved to be very dynamic topics requiring us to continually monitor developments and update our data, analysis and evolving work products as we learn of new or revised information. As a result, despite the extension of the schedule, the staff and consultants on this project have had no "down" time. We anticipate this research, monitoring and revising to continue for the months added to the project, necessitating significantly more hours by all members of the project team than anticipated.

Our request asks for changes to three line items which I will address below on the assumption that the EAC response to our already-submitted Provisional Voting draft and to-be-submitted Voter ID draft will be sufficiently timely to enable us to complete our work on both topics by the end of February.

1. Eagleton Institute of Politics personnel: We originally budgeted $110,695 ($15,813 average per month) for Eagleton faculty, staff and graduate student assistants for the seven-month project from May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005. Our actual costs have been approximately $14,500 more than that. In addition, we are anticipating needing another $21,000 for personnel costs in January and February, calculated on the basis of 2/3 of the original monthly estimate. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $110,695 to approximately $146,000.

2. Consultant Services: We originally budgeted $79,50 ($11,357 average per month) for consultant services which we have used to engage Tom O'Neill as the project manager. We anticipate no additional cost for the original contract period of May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005, but do anticipate needing his services during January and February at a slightly reduced rate of $10,125 per month or $20,250 total additional. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $79,500 to $99,750.

3. Moritz School of Law: We originally budgeted $84,744 ($12,106 average per month) for staff and overhead for the May 24, 2005-December 31, 2005 period. We anticipate needing an additional $23,171 ($11,585 average per month) to support their time on this project in January and February. Therefore, we are asking to raise this line item from $84,744 to $107,915.

With these revisions, approximately $22,000 of the EAC contract award to Eagleton would remain not yet allocated, primarily because the cost for the public hearings would have incurred Rutgers University overhead whereas the additional expenditures for consultants and the subcontract with Moritz do not.

I hope this provides you the information you need. While Rutgers is shutting down until January 3rd, I will be checking email at least every day or two.

Karen - At this time, we anticipate reallocating funds primarily from the public hearings line item and spending approximately $35,500 more than originally budgeted on personnel, $23,250 more on the subcontract with Ohio State and $20,250 more on consultants. There are other additional variances but they are not significant (e.g. less on honoraria, less on travel, and more on general operations such as phone expenses). Subject Meeting with EAC and Ballot Design

Karen, This email addresses two topics.

1. Meeting with EAC

At the end of August, we will have a draft of the Analysis and Alternatives paper for provisional voting, and we will have developed an outline of the alternatives to be described in the Preliminary Guidance Document (PGD). Before beginning to draft the PGD, we would benefit from a discussion with EAC staff and, perhaps, the commissioners. We would like to explore, through you, the scheduling of a meeting for that purpose, and suggest the date of August 26 at your offices in Washington. Several of us would attend and others might participate by teleconference.

2. Design of Provisional Ballots

In our teleconference a week ago, Tom Wilkey asked if we were collecting actual provisional ballots from around the country to assess their design. A collection of provisional ballots is not a deliverable under our contract, but at your request we have estimated what such an effort might require.

013913

The goal would be to collect ballots, examine them to determine how well they conform to any ballot design criteria established in state legislation or regulations and possibly evaluate them against objective design standards of clarity and ease of use.

If state regulations or legislation specify the detailed design of provisional ballots, collecting a sample ballot and envelope from each state would be feasible. If states have delegated the details of design to county or other levels of government, the collection process would probably not be worth the substantial time and expense involved in contacting more than 3,000 jurisdictions.

Step One -- Feasibility

A prudent approach to this work would begin with a feasibility study. It would determine how many states use a uniform provisional ballot throughout the state and how many allow significant variation in design among counties or other jurisdictions. Working with the statutes and regulations now being collected by Moritz, we would also determine if state statutes or regulations specify the details of the design of provisional ballots. This work would provide the information needed to decide if the project is doable at reasonable cost. The feasibility study would probably require 5 to 10 days of research time. On a time-and-materials basis, including overhead charges, the cost of the feasibility analysis would be in the range of $2,500 -- $5,000.

Step Two -- Collection and Analysis

If EAC determines on the basis of our feasibility report that the project is feasible, collecting the provisional ballots and envelopes would require 3 – 4 weeks of research, collection and analysis at a cost of $6,000 -- $9,000 (with overhead). The research process would include:

- Determining the appropriate official in each state to contact,
- Sending each official a letter requesting a provisional ballot and envelope as used in federal elections,
- Making up to 3 follow-up calls.
- Compiling and categorizing the ballots
- Comparing the actual ballots to any specifications contained in state statutes or regulations.

The deliverables would be:

- The collection of ballots,
- A compendium of statutory or regulatory specifications of ballot design,
- Classification of ballots according to the major design principles reflected in their layout and appearance.

Possible Step 3 – Evaluation of Provisional Ballot Design

The EAC might also wish to consider a logical, third step. Once the ballots are collected, Eagleton could arrange to evaluate provisional ballots for clarity and user-friendliness. The review could be done by one or more focus groups that Eagleton would empanel, or it could be conducted by a design firm that would review the ballots and make recommendations for principles of good design that could be issued as guidance to the states. We have not identified an individual designer or firm with credentials in this field, but could do so as part of the feasibility study. Eagleton could do the focus group in-house at relatively modest cost.

Please let me know if you would like us to go further with this assignment.

Subject Peer Review Group

Carol,

After our discussion in New York, you asked me to put in writing our response to the EAC's suggestions for expanding the number and kinds of groups that would review and comment on our work. I hope after your review of this response, we will be able to quickly recruit a balanced Peer Review Group (PRG) and move ahead as the schedule in our work plan indicates. Attached is a revised list of the members we propose for appointment to the PRG. We will probably not be able to persuade all of them to serve, but the number and range of views included on the proposed list should ensure that the resulting group is well-balanced.

RESPONSE TO EAC RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ADDITIONAL REVIEW GROUPS

EAC's Recommendations for the PRG

Karen Lynn-Dyson reported this response from the EAC commissioners to our proposal for the composition of the PRG.

1. Not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG
2. Create a "tiered process" of review in which:
 - A. The PRG will prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions.
 - B. PRG's analysis would be vetted by a defined/select group of local election officials.
 - C. A defined/select group of advocacy organizations would review the comments of the local election officials
 - D. Empanel a final focus group of local election officials, advocates and academics for an overall, interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Project Team Response

Creating three new committees to the review process to supplement the work of the Peer Review Group (PRG) is possible, but would add at least 8 weeks --and possibly 12 weeks-- to our completion of the guidance document on provisional voting. We believe this delay would risk limiting the value of this project for the 2006 election. In addition, the change would add at least $30,000 to the cost of our work. (See the attached table showing the possible effect on our work plan, and note the optimistic assumptions such as the ability to hold a hearing the week after Christmas.). If the same groups were to be engaged in reviewing our work on Voter ID, the time for that work would also have to be stretched at a similar increased cost.

This additional cost and the added time might be worthwhile. . . if the new layers of review were to produce a consensus on how to strengthen the research, sharpen the analysis, and increase the relevance of the Guidance Document. Our team concluded, however, that additional review groups were unlikely to achieve these results.

PRG focuses on quality of research

We believe that our research would be strengthened by a balanced Peer Review Group that will focus on the design of the research and our conduct of it. Based on the EAC's recommendation, we have revised the composition of the PRG to include additional, well-recognized authorities in the field whose perspective is generally agreed to be conservative.

The PRG will focus on the strength of the research design and the quality of our analysis, not on the politics of our recommendations for the guidance document. The PRG will critique the research design and suggest how to strengthen it. Members of the group will review the quality of our analysis so that we can fill holes and correct errors before we make policy recommendations to the EAC. The PRG may or may not meet as a group. The likelihood is that most comments will come in writing from individual members, most of whose schedules would not permit attendance at meetings. In any case, the PRG members will not gather around a table to come to consensus on the study's recommendations.

While using the PRG as a forum to reach consensus on the knotty issues involved does not appear practical, the EAC can benefit from the work of other groups in this regard. It is not necessary for this project to duplicate the deliberative processes of the Carter-Baker Commission, the Century Foundation and the Election Center. The EAC itself as well as the project team can get the benefit of these reports without duplicating this "policy evaluation board" structure as part of this contract.

Project Team focuses on analysis and recommendations

Karen reported that the Commissioners believed that the PRG would "prepare a dispassionate analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions." As we see it, the PRG will neither analyze data nor draw conclusions, tentative or otherwise. Its members will review and comment on how the Project Team has designed and carried out the research. Analysis, conclusions and recommendations are the responsibility of the Project Team. We have all seen in the preface to books or articles a sentence or two that read something like this, "The author thanks Mr. X, Ms. Y, and Dr. Z for their review and comment on the manuscript. Their analysis has strengthened the work, but they are in no way responsible for errors or for my conclusions." That is the way we think about the Peer Review Group.

In short, the PRG will help ensure that EAC's Guidance Document is founded on a solid base of data and analysis. The review and comment on the Preliminary Guidance Document by the EAC's Board of Advisors and Standards Board will provide participation by important stakeholder groups without the need for the other review committees. This Board is broad-based and represents a key stakeholder group. It also enjoys a significant advantage over a "defined/select" group we might empanel. Any group we define will be open to criticism or charges of bias by representatives of interest groups not represented.

The criticism and charges of bias might be tolerable, but only if we could expect consensus from the "defined/select" group we would appoint. We believe that consensus would be elusive. In empanelling a "defined/select" group, we would naturally look for balance and would appoint members to represent a point of view or an institutional interest. As representatives they would likely feel that they had little choice but to be strong advocates. They would have little incentive to compromise. Our research, as opposed to our policy recommendations, would be better served by the analysis of scholars than by the advocacy of interests.

Policy judgments

We regard the EAC itself as responsible for the policy judgments involved in shaping the Guidance Document. We plan, of course, to respond to the EAC's comments on our preliminary draft, so that the EAC's comments will shape the Preliminary Guidance Document before it is released for public comment. And further revision will follow the public hearing and comments. The EAC and individual Commissioners can always seek comment informally on our analysis or recommendations. That course appears to us preferable to the creation of a new, more elaborate review process.

Voting rights and wrongs

By Donna Brazile

THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Published April 16, 2007

Just when civil rights advocates were celebrating recent advances in restoring the voting rights of 5.3 million Americans prohibited from voting in several states because of their felony convictions, along comes the news that the Bush administration has been playing politics with meaningful electoral reform.

Geez, can't they focus on governing without engaging in partisan warfare?

The New York Times has reported that the Election Assistance Commission, a federal agency charged with administering federal elections, "played down the findings of experts who concluded last year that there was little voter fraud around the nation." According to the New York Times' review, the "original report on fraud cites 'evidence of some continued outright intimidation and suppression' of voters by local officials, especially in some American Indian communities, while the final report says only that voter 'intimidation is also a topic of some debate because there is little agreement concerning what constitutes actionable voter intimidation.' "

Just why would the EAC suppress or alter a report that could have helped restore citizens' confidence in our electoral system? Did someone pressure them to disown reports they commissioned? If so, we need to find the guilty parties and bring yet another shameful episode of partisanship to public attention.

As the Times notes, this issue played a "significant role" in the Bush administration's "firing of eight United States attorneys, several of whom, documents now indicate, were dismissed for being insufficiently aggressive in pursuing voter fraud cases." Perhaps disgraced Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez will have the decency to respond to these allegations next week when he testifies on Capitol Hill.

The Election Assistance Commission, according to its own mission statement, is supposed to be a clearinghouse for all "matters that affect the administration of federal elections," providing "information and guidance with respect to laws, procedures and technologies affecting the administration of federal elections." Fair enough, but why did they shove aside a report that could have provided timely guidance to members of Congress trying to address so-called voter fraud by imposing restrictive voter-ID requirements?

The EAC not only refused to accept the reasoned conclusion of its bipartisan consultants, they also refused to release those findings at a time when doing so would have discounted claims of rampant voter fraud that were the justification for the restrictive voter ID law passed last year by the Republican-controlled House of Representatives. Thank God the Senate had no appetite to take up a similar measure being pushed to address the phantom of voter fraud.

Here we approach another major electoral season and the agency in charge of helping states reform their electoral practices has lost its credibility. Loyola Law professor and election expert Richard Hansen have written that the "EAC needs to remain a credible broker and cannot be timid by what it finds." Mr. Hansen believes that if the evidence supports one side of the debate, that is "not a reason to disown a report and start over." Hmmmm, unless it's about politics and helping one side gain an electoral advantage.

Since the 2000 presidential election, states have moved to enact stringent voter ID requirements. According to election experts, as of the November 2006 election, 24 states had enacted some form of voter identification law, up from 11 in 2000.

While state and federal courts have thrown out some restrictive and punitive photo ID laws on the grounds they may lead to disenfranchising poor, elderly or minority citizens otherwise eligible to vote, the drumbeat still rages to put in place more punitive laws. The motives are simple: Suppress the turnout of eligible citizens who may not embrace the political priorities of one of the major political parties. Shameful.

No citizen should vote twice, and felons and others seeking to have their voting rights restored must remain patient while the wheels of justice turn in their favor. But, under the guise of people "stuffing ballot boxes," allowing the dead to vote or undocumented workers attempting to claim citizenship, Republican lawmakers have begun to erect new laws that could severely curtail the right of all eligible citizens to vote and have those votes counted accurately.

Perhaps it's time we all put aside partisan consideration and agree that no eligible citizen should have to pay to vote. As many civil rights advocates will tell you, proof of citizenship requirements can place an undue financial burden on voters. I know because many of my family members who had all their possessions washed away during Hurricane Katrina are still scurrying to replace passports, birth certificates and other proof of citizenship, and the expense is shocking.

We should also agree that no eligible citizen should face intimidation by partisan poll workers or be asked to produce ID at the polling place when state law only requires first-time voters and those who did not list an ID number on their registration forms to do so. It's wrong, and it's illegal.

The Justice Department and the Election Assistance Commission, you are now on notice that civil rights groups are watching your every step, your partisan reports and, yes, your role in destroying one of the most important ingredients of our democracy: the right of all citizens regardless of race, gender, disability, age or class to participate in the electoral process.

Carnahan urges time , resources to deal with election laws

By SAM HANANEL, The Associated Press

Apr 18, 2007 8:07 PM (13 hrs ago)

WASHINGTON - States will need time and resources to comply with any changes that Congress might order to electronic voting systems, Missouri Secretary of State Robin Carnahan told a congressional panel on Wednesday.

"Obviously elections are run locally," Carnahan told the House Subcommittee on Information Policy, the Census, and the National Archives. "If you all take over the election process, that's a big change in our country and it will take money to do that."

The hearing examined the reliability and security of electronic voting systems that have been put into place across the country since the failure of paper ballots was exposed in the 2000 election.

Subcommittee chairman William Lacy Clay, D-Mo., said he wants Congress to require a paper trail to back up electronic voting machines and make the process of testing election software and verifying its security coding more transparent.

Clay cited results from the 2006 election that show some electronic voting systems still produced unreliable results, causing distrust among voters.

"It is absolutely vital that we utilize technology that provides an independent, auditable voting record that can be verified by election officials," Clay said.

Carnahan, a Democrat, said lawmakers need to give states a reasonable time frame to comply if Congress implements any changes, and guarantee full funding for any mandates that come down. She also urged lawmakers to gather input from state and local officials before taking action.

Carnahan described Missouri's elections as "fair, accurate and secure," and said the state's use of new optical scan and touch-screen voting systems was generally a success.

But there were some problems, such as long lines that formed when some polling places ran out of ballots. She said there is a need for more training for poll workers unfamiliar with the new technology.

Missouri is one of 27 states that already require paper records for electronic machines.

Gracia Hillman, a member of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission, told Clay that only Congress has the authority to order nationwide use of paper voting verification.

Depending on what Congress does, Hillman said, at least 180,000 machines around the country would need to be replaced or upgraded. That could be a "recipe for colossal confusion" if lawmakers try to enact such legislation with only a year-and-a-half before the 2008 election, she said.

Clay also grilled Hillman about reports that EAC officials rewrote the findings of a government-funded report on voter fraud to downplay the pervasiveness of problems with electronic systems. Clay said he has concerns the EAC is improperly politicizing its work.

Hillman said changes in the report drafted by researchers at Rutgers University were made because some conclusions were not supported by the data.

"I do not believe that the EAC could have reached agreement on the conclusions offered by those researchers without being allowed to validate those conclusions," Hillman said.

Avi Rubin, a computer science professor at Johns Hopkins University, testified that an electronic voting system without a backup paper receipt cannot be properly audited.

Lawmakers call for e-voting paper trails
By Grant Gross, IDG News Service

April 18, 2007

U.S. lawmakers on Wednesday called for electronic voting machines to include paper trail backups, while a government auditor said better security measures for the machines are needed.

A still-contested 2006 election for the U.S. House of Representatives in Florida's 13th district is a "prominent example of how, in some instances, electronic voting systems have produced unreliable results, raising concerns among voting-system experts and causing distrust among voters," said Representative William Lacy Clay, chairman of the House Information Policy, Census, and National Archives Subcommittee.

In the Florida House election, more than 18,000 voters failed to cast ballots on e-voting machines, and the Republican candidate won by fewer than 400 votes.

Clay, from Missouri, and other Democrats called for paper trail printouts to be required as a way to audit results from touchscreen DRE (Direct Recording Electronic) machines. But Gracia Hillman, a member of the U.S. EAC (Election Assistance Commission), warned Congress not to rush into paper-trail requirements.

Hillman avoided taking a position on paper trail ballots during a subcommittee hearing. But at least 180,000 DREs across the U.S. would have to be upgraded or replaced if Congress required paper trails, she said.

"When you combine the introduction of new equipment, earlier primaries, and the enormous tasks of recruiting and training poll workers to meet a presidential election year deadline -- which is only a year and a half from now -- you have all of the ingredients of a recipe for colossal confusion," Hillman said.

Robin Carnahan, secretary of state for Missouri, also called on Congress to allow reasonable time frames for changes in e-voting requirements. "Don't do things that create expectations but can't be met by local election officials," she said.

Carnahan said the 2006 election in Missouri was "fair, accurate and secure." Voters there used optical scan and DRE machines with paper trails.

Other lawmakers seemed skēptical of the need for paper trails. Representative Bill Sali, an Idaho Republican, asked Hillman and Randolph Hite, director of information technology architecture and systems for the U.S. GAO (Government Accountability Office), if they knew of any e-voting machines that had been hacked during an election. Both said they were not aware of any.

But Hite called on state and local elections officials to pay more attention to e-voting security and machine life cycle.

Several groups have "raised significant concerns about the security and reliability of electronic voting systems," Hite said. "Many of these security and reliability concerns are legitimate and thus merit the combined and focused attention of federal, state, and local authorities."

In an extensive GAO review, the agency found that many jurisdictions did not use the most current voting system standards, and many do not consistently monitor election performance. Voting-machine best practices were implemented to "varying degrees," he said.

Security measures for e-voting machines "ranged from rigorous to ad hoc," Hite added. He called on the EAC to work with local and state election authorities to strengthen security measures.

Commission urges caution on election reform

National Journal's Congress Daily AM

An official with the commission charged with overseeing the administration of federal elections urged House lawmakers Wednesday to proceed with caution as they consider sweeping electoral reform legislation.

Election Assistance Commission member Gracia Hillman told the House Oversight and Government Reform Information Policy Subcommittee that earlier primary elections, new equipment and increased poll-worker training demands already stand to complicate the administration of federal elections next year, National Journal's Technology Daily reported.

During a hearing on electronic voting machines, she said lawmakers are right to question the use of certain e-voting machines. A measure sponsored by Rep. Rush Holt, D-N.J., would require all e-voting machines to be backed up by paper trails.

But Hillman said Congress needs to be aware of the confusion that extensive e-voting upgrades might cause. She also urged the panel to consider other electoral issues such as voter registration, participation and disenfranchisement.

Rodriguez elected EAC vice -chair

VoteTrust USA

Former Denver City Council President Rosemary E. Rodriguez today was elected vice chair of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) during a public meeting.

As vice chair, she will work with EAC Chair Donetta Davidson as part of the bipartisan leadership team at the commission to set priorities and communicate EAC initiatives.

"My foremost conviction is that all eligible voters should be empowered with simple, unfettered and uncomplicated access to registration and to the voting booth" said Rodriguez. "I look forward to working with my colleagues as we seek practical means to improve elections in this country in ways that most benefit the voters."

Vice Chair Rodriguez joined the EAC in March. She was nominated to EAC by President Bush in 2006 and confirmed by the U.S. Senate in February. She will serve until December 12, 2007, filling the remaining term of Ray Martinez, who resigned in August 2006.

She served on the Denver, Colorado City Council for three years, and was its president from 2005 to 2006. She was director of Boards and Commissions for the mayor's office from 2002 to 2003 and a clerk and recorder for the City and County of Denver from 1997 to 2002. In 1997 she was acting director of the Denver Election Commission where she supervised city elections. She has been active in numerous grass roots civic and voter advocacy organizations, including the Colorado Voter Initiative where she co-chaired a statewide initiative to allow Election Day voter registration. She was also a co-founder and chair of Latinos Vote, a voter registration project to register Latino voters and provide non-partisan election information to the Latino community.

EAC is an independent bipartisan commission created by HAVA. It is charged with administering payments to states and developing guidance to meet HAVA requirements, implementing election administration improvements, adopting voluntary voting system guidelines, accrediting voting system test laboratories and certifying voting equipment and serving as a national clearinghouse and resource of information regarding election administration. The four EAC commissioners are Donetta Davidson, chair; Rosemary Rodriguez, Caroline Hunter and Gracia Hillman.

Rosemary Rodriguez elected EAC vice-chair
NALEO Press Release

013924

Los Angeles, CA - The National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials (NALEO), the nation's preeminent Latino leadership organization, congratulates Commissioner Rosemary Rodriguez on her election today to serve as Vice-Chair of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC). Commissioner Rodriguez, who is a former NALEO Educational Fund Board member, joined the EAC in March 2007, and was elected Vice-Chair by her fellow Commissioners at a meeting held in Kansas City, Missouri. The EAC is an independent bipartisan commission created to provide guidelines and resources to states for federal election reform.

Commissioner Rodriguez comes to her position with over a decade of experience in public service where she gained extensive expertise with many different aspects of election administration. In the 1990's, she was actively involved in educating community members about the need for representative districts during redistricting, and in 2001, she was appointed to the Colorado Reapportionment Commission and served as its Chair. For several years, she served as the City of Denver's Clerk and Recorder, where she was responsible for supervising candidate filings, voter registration and the dissemination of official election information. As Clerk and Recorder, she was a member of Denver's Election Commission, which directs city-wide elections.

Commissioner Rodriguez also served as a member of the Denver City Council since 2003, and in 2005, she was elected by her peers to serve a one-year term as Council President. Through her experiences in public service, Commissioner Rodriguez developed a thorough understanding of the challenges that voters face in gaining access to the electoral process. As a board member of the NALEO Educational Fund, she was involved in efforts to further Latino political participation through the organization's U.S. citizenship promotion work and non-partisan voter engagement project Voces del Pueblo.

"Rosemary Rodriguez brings a wealth of knowledge on election issues to the Election Assistance Commission," said John Bueno, NALEO President and former President Pro-Tem for the City of Pontiac, Michigan. "Throughout her career, she has demonstrated a strong commitment to ensuring that all voters have a voice on Election Day, and she will provide the Commission with invaluable perspectives and expertise. NALEO congratulates Commissioner Rodriguez on her election," concluded Mr. Bueno.

The EAC is an independent bipartisan commission created by the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA).

It is charged with administering payments to states and developing guidance to meet HAVA requirements, implementing election administration improvements, adopting voluntary voting system guidelines, accrediting voting system test laboratories and certifying voting equipment and serving as a national clearinghouse and resource information regarding election administration. In addition to Commissioner Rodriguez, the members of the EAC are Chair Donnetta Davidson, Gracia Hillman, and Caroline Hunter. Commissioner Rodriguez succeeds former Commissioner Raymundo Martinez III, who resigned in August 2006.

The fraudulence of fraud

By Joel Bleifuss
In Our Times

On April 6, 2006, in Washington, D.C., Karl Rove gave a speech to the Republican National Lawyers Association and issued this dire warning:

We are, in some parts of the country, I'm afraid to say, beginning to look like we have elections like those run in countries where the guys in charge are, you know, colonels in mirrored sunglasses. I mean, it's a real problem, and I appreciate all that you're doing in those hot spots around the country to ensure that the ballot--the integrity of the ballot--is protected, because it's important to our democracy.

When Rove talks about protecting "ballot integrity," that is shorthand for disenfranchising Democratic Party voters. Over the last several years, the Justice Department, with the help of White House operatives, has sought to boost GOP electoral fortunes by orchestrating a national campaign against voter fraud. But the administration overreached on Dec. 7, when President George W. Bush fired eight U.S. attorneys, a political scandal that some say could become this president's Watergate.

When Republicans talk about voter fraud they are referring to illegal voting by individuals, as opposed to vote fraud--systematic attempts to steal an election by an organized group of partisans. This emphasis on voter fraud has convinced eight states to pass laws requiring voters to present official photo identification in order to cast a ballot--laws that studies have shown suppress Democratic turnout among voters who are poor, black, Latino, Asian-American or disabled.

Understanding that one way to win closely contested elections is to keep Democratic voters away from the polls, the Republican Party has tried to stoke public fears of voter fraud. On Feb. 15, 2005, the U.S. Senate Republican Policy Committee issued a report, "Putting an End to Voter Fraud," which said, "Voter fraud continues to plague our nation's federal elections, diluting and canceling out the lawful votes of the vast majority of Americans." To remedy the situation, the Senate Republicans advised Congress to "require that voters at the polls show photo identification."

But voting experts maintain that voter fraud is not a national problem. In March, Lorraine C. Minnite, a professor of political science at Columbia University, released "The Politics of Voter Fraud," a report she prepared for Project Vote, an advocacy group based in Arkansas. She writes:

The claim that voter fraud threatens the integrity of American elections is itself a fraud. It is being used to persuade the public that deceitful and criminal voters are manipulating the electoral system. ... The exaggerated fear of voter fraud has a long history of scuttling efforts to make voting easier and more inclusive, especially for marginalized groups in American society. With renewed partisan vigor, fantasies of fraud are being spun again to undo some of the progress America has made lowering barriers to vote.

This is borne out by a study from the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University, which found that in the 2004 election, voters in states that required documentation of identity were 2.7 percent less likely to vote than voters in states where documentation was not required. Specifically, the study, commissioned by the U.S. Election Assistance Commission, found that Latinos were 10 percent less likely to vote, Asian-Americans 8.5 percent less likely to vote and blacks 5.7 percent less likely to vote.

What's more, despite GOP claims to the contrary, voter fraud is a very rare occurrence. In 2002 the Justice Department established the Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative to ferret out fraudulent voters. On Oct. 4, 2005, Attorney General Alberto Gonzales, with great fanfare, proclaimed, "We've made enforcement of election fraud and corrupting offenses a top priority." Yet according to an April 12 New York Times article, only 120 people have been charged with the crime over the past five years, leading to 86 convictions. Furthermore, the Times noted, federal attorneys say that most of the transgressions have been mistakes by immigrants and felons who simply misunderstood eligibility requirements.

The extent of voter fraud is further complicated by the fact that earlier this year the Election Assistance Commission changed the conclusions of a report it had commissioned. The original report by outside election experts concluded, "There is widespread but not unanimous agreement that there is little polling place fraud." The commission deleted that sentence and replaced it with, "There is a great deal of debate on the pervasiveness of fraud."

Rep. José Serrano (D.-N.Y.), who chairs the House Appropriations subcommittee that oversees the commission, is disturbed by this apparently politically motivated substitution. He told In These Times:

This possibly could be another Watergate. We have to ask the questions, "Why was this report doctored, and how does this play into the larger picture of voter suppression and intimidation?" By directing public attention to voter fraud you divert attention from the fact that Americans in certain communities are not able to cast their votes properly and that their votes are not being counted. Is this something that this small new agency thought of by themselves or did they get marching orders from somewhere else, perhaps as far up as the White House?

Firing prosecutors

It appears that, under Rove's direction the White House has been planning to use U.S. attorneys to fan national fears of voter fraud. In his speech to the GOP lawyers, Rove listed 11 states that would play a pivotal role in the 2008 elections. Since 2005, Bush has appointed new U.S. attorneys in nine of those states: Florida, Colorado, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Michigan, Nevada, Arkansas and New Mexico.

What's more, the firings of U.S. attorneys in New Mexico, Arkansas and Washington appear directly related to this Republican plan to exploit the issue of voter fraud and suppress Democratic turnout.

In Arkansas, Bush fired a sitting U.S. attorney in order to appoint Rove protégé Tim Griffin. (See "The Talented Mr. Griffin" by Greg Palast on page 31.)

In Washington, fired U.S. Attorney John McKay had refused to prosecute alleged voter fraud in the 2004 Washington governor's race, in which Democrat Chris Gregoire beat Republican Dino Rossi by 129 votes.

On March 6, McKay testified before the Senate that after the election Republicans pressured him to open an investigation. He said his office had examined the allegations of voter fraud and decided there was not enough evidence to pursue a case.

"Had anyone at the Justice Department or the White House ordered me to pursue any matter criminally in the 2004 governor's election, I would have resigned," McKay told the Seattle Times. "There was no evidence, and I am not going to drag innocent people in front of a grand jury."

In New Mexico, David C. Iglesias was equally suspect in the eyes of the GOP. Recall that in 2000, Gore beat Bush by 377 votes in New Mexico. Consequently, in 2004, Democrat-affiliated groups initiated voter registration campaigns in New Mexico. As a result, two boys, age 13 and 15, received voter cards in the mail. Iglesias responded by setting up a bipartisan task force to investigate. This didn't satisfy attorney Mickey D. Barnett, who represented the 2004 Bush-Cheney campaign in New Mexico. He told Iglesias he should bring federal charges against a canvasser who forged their signatures, which he refused to do.

In a New York Times op-ed, Iglesias wrote:

What the critics, who don't have any experience as prosecutors, have asserted is reprehensible--namely that I should have proceeded without having proof beyond a reasonable doubt. The public has a right to believe that prosecution decisions are made on legal, not political grounds.

Manufacturing voter fraud

The issue of fraudulent voters undermining American democracy did not spontaneously erupt. To promote national concern about voter fraud, in March 2005 GOP operatives with ties to the White House established a 501(c)4 organization called the American Center for Voting Rights Legislative Fund (ACVR). The group went public by establishing a Web site, ac4vr.com. (The site has since been taken down for unknown reasons.)

According to its 990 tax forms, ACVR is based in Midlothian, Va., and its executive director is Robin DeJarnette, who is also the founder and executive director of the Virginia Conservative Action PAC. However, according to the registration form for its Internet domain name, the group's address is a mailbox at a UPS Store in Dallas. The chairman of ACVR is Brian Lunde, a former Democratic National Committee official from Texas, who in 2004 was head of Democrats for Bush.

ACVR specializes in issuing studies that purport to document a host of voter fraud cases, like the report titled: "Democrat operatives far more involved in voter intimidation and suppression in 2004 than Republicans."

On March 21, 2005, four days after ACVR went public, Rep. Bob Ney (R-Ohio), then chair of the Committee on House Administration, opened hearings on 2004 election irregularities. One person who testified was ACVR National Counsel Mark "Thor" Hearne II, who described himself as "a longtime advocate of voter rights and an attorney experienced in election law." In the aftermath of the 2000 presidential campaign, Hearne was dispatched to Florida as a Republican observer in Broward County's manual recount, and in 2004 he worked as the national general counsel for Bush/Cheney '04 Inc.

In his testimony, Hearne described ACVR as "committed to defending the rights of voters and working to increase public confidence in the fairness of the outcome of elections." And he submitted to the committee a copy of the ACVR's "Ohio Election Report," of which he was the lead author. That report read in part:

This [Democratic] voter registration effort was not limited to registration of legal voters but, criminal investigations and news reports suggest, that this voter registration effort also involved the registration of thousands of fictional voters such as the now infamous Jive F. Turkey, Sr., Dick Tracy and Mary Poppins. Those individuals registering these fictional voters were reportedly paid not just money to do but were, in at least one instance, paid in crack cocaine.

And in testimony on Dec. 7, 2006, the same day the prosecutors were fired, Hearne told the Election Assistance Commission: "Recent press reports suggest that voter registration fraud remains a significant issue in the recent mid-term elections."

The press contact for ACVR is Jim Dyke, who was the communications director of the Republican National Committee during the 2004 election. In the fall of 2005 he was working in the White House trying to get Harriet Miers on the Supreme Court, before moving on to work in Vice President Dick Cheney's office. Brad Friedman of BradBlog.com reported that according to internet records, Dyke registered the ACVR internet domain name, ac4vr.com, in December 2004. Those records have since disappeared from public view. (The source of ACVR's funding is also mysterious. According to the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review, "When asked to name any contributors to his nonprofit, Hearne claimed he did not know but said Lunde did. When Lunde was asked, he claimed he did not know but said Hearne did.")

Dyke is a good friend of his fellow Arkansan Tim Griffin, the new U.S. attorney in Arkansas. In 2004, both worked at the Republican National Committee helping Bush get re-elected. Dyke has been a vocal defender of Griffin's appointment as U.S. Attorney. "He has a real passion for the law," Dyke told the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette.

Rounding out the GOP operatives is Pat Rogers, who sits on the board of ACVR. An attorney for the Republican Party in New Mexico, he has been a vocal critic of fired U.S. Attorney Iglesias. According to the Albuquerque Tribune, Rogers is on the short list to replace Iglesias.

Rove's role

Minnite, who did the study on voter fraud, has read through the reports prepared by ACVR and presented by Hearne at various official hearings. She noticed that the claims follow a predictable script. "It all starts to look the same," she says. "There is a pattern in the way the documents that claim to show voter fraud are put together. It is usually a compilation of news reports on allegations. There is no follow up, no research done, no analysis."

"As I delved into it, I was faced with the question: 'Why do people think there is a lot of fraud when there isn't any real evidence?' I think people are being manipulated by politics, which takes the form of these reports that are dumped on the public. It is as if you get a big enough pile maybe you will convince people that the volume of fraud is quite large and that we have a serious problem."

Wisconsin provides a case in point. At a March 13 press conference, White House Counsel Dan Bartlett identified Wisconsin as one of the states from which the White House had "received complaints about U.S. attorneys."

In 2005, U.S. Attorney Steve Biskup, who was appointed by Bush, investigated these allegations of voter fraud and reported that he found no evidence on which to press charges.

It turns out that early in 2005, Republican officials in Wisconsin prepared a report titled "Fraud in Wisconsin 2004: A Timeline/Summary." The document, which was found in White House and Justice Department records released by the House Judiciary Committee, was written by Chris Lato, the former communications director for the state Republican Party, on orders from Rick Wiley, the party's executive director. The 30-page report, which covers Aug. 31, 2004 to April 1, 2005, contains 65 entries detailing voter fraud. The final example is titled: "RPW [Republican Party of Wisconsin] News Release: Evidence of Election Fraud Piles Up."

The information contained in this Wisconsin compilation, made its way into a 78-page report released on July 21, 2005, by ACVR: "Vote Fraud, Intimidation & Suppression in the 2004 Presidential Election." In the introduction, the ACVR's Hearne and Lunde wrote that the report "documents hundreds of incidents and allegations from around the country. ... [T]housands of Americans were disenfranchised by illegal votes cast on Election Day 2004 ... [P]aid Democrat operatives were far more involved in voter intimidation and suppression activities than were their Republican counterparts. ... [R]equiring government-issued photo ID at the polls ... will help assure ... that no American is disenfranchised by illegal votes."

And who was behind this trail of misinformation? On April 7, Daniel Bice, a columnist for the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel, reported that a source familiar with the document told him, "The report was prepared for Karl Rove. Rick [Wiley] wanted it so he could give it to Karl Rove."

On April 6, 2006, in Washington, at the aforementioned speech to Republican Party attorneys, Rove began with a joke: "I ran into [AVCR's] Thor Hearne as I was coming in. He was leaving; he was smart, and he was leaving to go out and enjoy the day." Rove then told the assembled party lawyers, "We have, as you know, an enormous and growing problem with elections in certain parts of America today."

Rove should know. He helped grow the problem.

A Selective View of Fraud

By: Joe Conason
New York Observer

Even as Alberto Gonzales rehearses his excuses for the strange dismissal of eight United States Attorneys, which he will perform in public at a Senate hearing this week, he is looking like a marginal player in this scandal. The Attorney General fumbled his role, but in keeping with his Presidential nickname (Fredo), he probably never understood the broader scheme originating in the Bush White House.

Developed by deputy chief of staff Karl Rove, the President's top political aide, that scheme was evidently designed to advance his objective of discouraging minority voters and others with the bad habit of supporting Democratic candidates. In Republican parlance, such attempts to hamper registration, intimidate citizens and reduce turnout in targeted communities are lauded as "combating voter fraud." Several of the fired U.S. Attorneys had angered party operatives, including Mr. Rove, because they had shown so little enthusiasm for trumping up fraud cases against Democrats.

Following the 2004 election, David Iglesias, then serving as the U.S. Attorney in New Mexico, set up a task force to investigate Republican allegations of fraud. Those accusations boiled down to a single case where a woman had created a handful of phony registrations. (She did so for financial reasons, rather than out of any desire to manipulate the election.) When Mr. Iglesias declined prosecution for lack of airtight evidence, local Republicans began to demand his replacement with a more pliable and less professional prosecutor—a demand eventually fulfilled by Mr. Rove and President Bush.

In Wisconsin, by contrast, U.S. Attorney Steven Biskupic prosecuted voter-fraud allegations regardless of merit, winning big headlines when he indicted 14 black Milwaukee residents for casting ballots illegally. Nine of those cases were either tossed out or lost in court—an awful result compared with the normal conviction rate of over 90 percent. But at least the mediocre Mr. Biskupic—whose conviction of a Democratic state official was just overturned on appeal—managed to remain in the good graces of the White House and keep his job.

The Republican cry of "voter fraud" is a specious complaint, amplified by right-wing hacks to conceal the fact that in recent years, the most sustained efforts to interfere with orderly elections and voting rights can be traced to the Republican National Committee.

Harassing minority voters with bogus claims of fraud is a venerable tradition in the G.O.P., as anyone familiar with the career of the late Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist would know. Back in the early 60's, when Rehnquist was just another ambitious young lawyer in Arizona, he ran a partisan campaign to confront black and Hispanic voters over their "qualifications." Along with many of today's generation of Republican leaders, he was a stalwart of the Goldwater campaign in 1964, which garnered its handful of electoral votes in the South by opposing the Voting Rights Act.

Then came Richard Nixon's Southern strategy of nurturing racist grievances to build Republican majorities—around the time that a young operative named Karl Rove was rising in the party. Under his leadership, the G.O.P. has repeatedly been disgraced by conspiracies to diminish voter participation.

In 2002, Republican operatives used a telemarketing firm to illegally jam Democratic phone banks in New Hampshire to win the U.S. Senate seat now held by John Sununu. In 2004, Florida state officials sent armed officers into certain Orlando neighborhoods to scare elderly black registrants, while Republicans sought to challenge minority voters en masse in communities in Kentucky, Nevada, South Carolina, Pennsylvania and Ohio; and paid for the destruction of Democratic voter registrations in Nevada and Oregon.

Actual voter fraud of the kind decried in Republican propaganda is rare, according to nonpartisan experts. Although the White House recently rewrote a careful federal study by the Election Assistance Commission to hide that basic fact, it remains true that very few individuals intentionally seek to fabricate a registration or cast an illegal ballot. There are exceptions, of course—most notably illustrated by Republican celebrity Ann Coulter.

When the far-right columnist and television personality registered to vote in Palm Beach, Fla., in 2005, she wrote down the address of her realtor's office rather than her own home address. She then signed the form, despite its plain warning that falsifying any information on it would make her liable to felony prosecution—and which she, as a lawyer, surely understood. According to Palm Beach County election officials, she also voted in the wrong precinct the following year, disregarding a poll worker who explained her error. (Coulter fans can view her dubious voter-registration form online at www.bradblog.com.)

If proved, those acts would be crimes punishable by prison terms of up to five years, but Ms. Coulter has stonewalled the ongoing investigation. (She says the Palm Beach officials are syphilitic and mentally defective.) No charges have been filed so far, perhaps because her lawyer is a prominent Republican who worked on Bush v. Gore in 2000—and whom the President then appointed as U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Florida. He must know a lot about voter fraud.

Voter ID laws need measured implementation

Timothy J. Ryan, AEI-Brookings, 4/17/2007

The controversy over laws that require citizens to present identification in order to vote returned to national attention last week with a prominent report cataloging steps that the Election Assistance Commission took to lessen the splash of a study examining voter fraud in the United States. Where the original study concluded that there is "widespread but not unanimous agreement that there is little polling place fraud," the version revised by the EAC finds that "there is a great deal of debate" about the prevalence of voter fraud and made other adjustments to temper the findings.

Voter ID laws tend to invite rancor because partisans on both sides of the aisle believe any changes could affect the outcome of various elections. Republicans generally express concern that lax requirements open the door for elections to be stolen by duplicate voters and the like, while Democrats point to a lack of evidence about the extent of fraud and fear that identification requirements dissuade a large number of poor and minority voters—traditionally Democratic constituencies—from voting. Many people in these demographics, the argument goes, do not have drivers' licenses or comparable identification and can experience difficulty in acquiring them. Further, even the identifications that some states provide for free require documentation—birth certificates or the like—that themselves can require high fees. In this way, ID requirements are compared to modern poll taxes.

A balanced take on the situation is made more difficult by a terrible paucity of convincing evidence regarding both the extent of fraud and the degree to which ID requirements depress turnout. Timothy Vercellotti and David Anderson have released one study suggesting a small negative influence on turnout, but they will be the first to admit that good evidence is hard to come by and that their conclusions are hardly definitive. Similarly, Tova Wang, Spencer Overton, and others point to the fact that relatively few examples of voter fraud have been reported, but skeptics can always respond with the valid concern that fraud, being a criminal activity, is undetectable whenever it is successful. We only know about fraud when it is caught; who knows how much fraud escapes our attention? And even if fraud is uncommon today, could it not become a problem tomorrow?

Aside from the difficulty of balancing integrity and accessibility, proponents of voter ID laws argue that identification requirements will help to restore the flagging confidence in election administration (see Indiana Secretary of State Todd Rokita's Q&A here) and that the standards are needed to bring U.S. practices on par with the rest of the world; most advanced democracies require identification of some kind (though the onus of providing the ID oftentimes lies on the government).

Perhaps there are a few items within the debate upon which both sides of the aisle can agree. First, voter ID laws would not prevent all kinds of fraud or even the most consequential. Requiring an ID might prevent impersonation of other individuals at the polling places, but it would not, for example, prevent the stuffing of ballot boxes, either in the old, literal sense or the modern electronic equivalent: the subversion of machine software through hacking.

Second, it is difficult to perpetrate fraud—at least the kind of fraud that IDs are designed to prevent—in the volume that would be necessary to swing an election. Impersonating a voter would require either falsifying registration forms to place fictional voters on the rolls or stealing the persona of someone who had already registered. In the first case, an election thief would typically have to contrive fake addresses, a kind of fraud that could well be discovered if perpetrated on a large scale. Similarly, stealing the identity of a real person would require an assurance that the victim had not already voted. Otherwise, a fraudulent voter could be caught red-handed.

Furthermore, in-person fraud would require the perpetrators to travel to enough polling stations on Election Day so as to cast a significant number of fraudulent votes. How many polling places could a single person visit in one day? Fifteen? Perhaps twenty? Such a small number of fraudulent votes is unlikely to change the outcome of an election, and so it seems that any successful scheme would have to employ a group of individuals. Of course, as the number of perpetrators increases, so does the probability of being caught. How many of even the most avid partisans would undertake the formidable risk of jail time in order to marginally increase the likelihood of their favored candidate winning? In many ways, the kind of fraud that an ID requirement would prevent is akin to the counterfeiting of nickels and dimes: high risk for low reward.

Finally, any effort to neutralize voter fraud without a sober consideration of absentee voting would be sorely incomplete. Absentee voting, which routinely constitutes 30 percent or more of the votes cast in some states (such as California), requires no proof of ID and is very much the Achilles heel of election security. Because a single individual could theoretically acquire hundreds of absentee ballots and complete them in private, it is the method most likely to facilitate wholesale voter fraud. If fraud through impersonation is analogous to counterfeiting nickels and dimes, absentee voting could be the equivalent of counterfeiting $100 bills. It is for this reason that efforts to encourage absentee voting, such as allowing absentee voting without an excuse, should be considered with great caution.

Nevertheless, if the states do want to employ some kind of ID requirement, they should take steps to minimize the possibility that ID laws will prevent legitimate votes from being cast. For instance, Virginia allows ID-less voters to cast a ballot as long as they are registered and sign an affidavit affirming their identity. It is a practice not altogether satisfactory to hard-liners on either side, but a reasonable middle ground between security and accessibility. Administrators might even consider strengthening this practice by allowing ID-less voters to check a box indicating that they do not own an acceptable identification. If checked, that individual would receive an ID application in the mail. He or she could then submit the application along with a utility bill or other proof of identity in order to receive a free voter identification card. To reinforce the affidavit's status as a short-term fix, voters who habitually show up to Election Day without an ID might eventually lose the privilege of identifying by affidavit.

There remains room for spirited debate about the merits of voter ID laws. One could plausibly favor them for reasons of confidence and facility of recordkeeping while still denying that large-scale fraud exists at all. Still, hastily implemented ID laws could disenfranchise legitimate voters to a far greater degree than they would prevent illegitimate voting. For this reason, lawmakers who genuinely seek to administer elections with an eye towards inclusiveness as well as integrity should consider the imposition of greater requirements with the utmost care.

What the Senators Should Ask Gonzalas

By Mark A.R. Kleiman

There are really only two questions the Senate Judiciary Committee needs to ask Alberto Gonzales today:

1. Why are you such a lying turkey?
2. When are you going to resign?

But that would make for an unduly short hearing, so here are a few more questions, just to fill in the time:

1. In your prepared testimony released over the weekend, you assert that you had no advance role in planning for the Pearl Harbor Day massacre. An email sent last year by your assistant, Kyle Sampson, says otherwise. Can you explain the discrepancy?
2. If you were concerned about the performance of the U.S. Attorneys who were fired, why didn't you or anyone from DoJ HQ write them to document those concerns and ask for plans of improvement? Isn't that normal management practice?
3. If you were concerned about the performance of the U.S. Attorneys who were fired, why did the Director of the Executive Office of U.S. Attorneys not know anything about those concerns until the firings happened?
4. Did anyone in the White House, directly or indirectly, ever express concern about Carol Lam's corruption investigations? Who? When? What was said?
5. Do you agree with the theory offered by U.S. Attorney Biskupic than anytime political considerations enter into the award of a public contract, that constitutes misappropriation of funds? Has the Public Integrity Section considered or brought such cases against any Bush Administration officials? Why not? And if you don't think that theory is legally sound, why does Mr. Biscupic still have a job?

6. Is it true that Karl Rove and/or Pete Domenici asked you to fire David Iglesias? If so, what were their stated reasons? Is it true that you refused to fire him without a direct order from the president? Did you ever discuss Mr. Iglesias's tenure with the president? Did he instruct you to fire Mr. Iglesias?

7. No doubt you've seen the letter sent by an anonymous group of DoJ career staff, charging that the Honors Program hiring process has been politicized, and that summa cum laude graduates of Harvard and Yale Law Schools chosen by the operating divisions as potential new hires were denied interviews on the orders of the Deputy Attorney General's office because their resumes indicated liberal political leanings or experience working for Democratic legislators. What inquiries have you made into the truth of those allegations? When can you have us a full report, with the names of the candidates redacted?

8. When was it decided that the Civil Rights Division would give preference in hiring to attorneys with no experience in civil rights law? Why? Is it helpful for fewer than half of the new hires to have relevant experience, compared to the historical average of more than three-quarters?

Or is it simply that less experienced attorneys generally aren't as likely as career professionals to resist political interference?

9. During your tenure, the Department has moved away from prosecuting cases of voter intimidation and suppression and toward prosecuting cases of "voter fraud." But you have yet to develop a case where there was any concerted effort to steal a federal election by having ineligible people vote, and in fact a high proportion of the "vote fraud" indictments brought have ended in acquittals. A consultant's report to the Election Assistance Commission found no evidence of any widespread vote fraud, but did find systematic voter suppression and intimidation. Why, in the face of this evidence, do the Department and the White House and the RNC continue to insist that "voter fraud" is a serious problem. If it is, why can't you seem to find any?

10. In your view, does the theory of the unitary executive bar the Justice Department from prosecuting White House officials for contempt of Congress if they refuse to comply with Congressional subpoenas?

11. After Deputy Attorney General Paul McNulty testified before this committee that the U.S. Attorney for Arkansas, Bud Cummins, had been let go for purely political reasons, Brian Roehrkasse of your public affairs staff, who was traveling with you in Argentina, sent an email to your chief of staff, Kyle Sampson, saying that you were unhappy with that testimony. Were you unhappy about it because it was false, or because it was true? If you thought it was false -- if you thought, that is, that the Deputy Attorney General of the United States had testified falsely before this committee -- why did you not notify the committee, or insist that Mr. McNulty notify the committee, about the error? If you didn't think it was false, what was the basis of your concern? Did you think it inappropriate for the Deputy Attorney General to tell the truth under oath?

12. There are conflicting stories about the role of the junior senator from Minnesota, Mr. Coleman, in the appointment of Rachel Paulose as U.S. Attorney. It would have been normal for the only senator of the President's party from the affected state to be consulted. Did you, or to your knowledge anyone in DoJ or the White House, ever discuss Ms. Paulose's appointment with Senator Coleman? If so, what was his advice?

13. What was your role in inserting the provision allowing the president to appoint replacement U.S. Attorneys without Senate confirmation into the USA PATRIOT Act reauthorization? To your knowledge, who first came up with that proposal? At what point did you first consider using that provision in connection with the Pearl Harbor Day massacre? How did it happen that Mr. Tolman, formerly the Chief Counsel to this committee who (according to the senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Specter, then the Chairman) oversaw the somewhat surreptitious insertion of that provision into the law, then became United States Attorney for Utah? Why did the Department oppose the repeal of that provision after the Pearl Harbor Day massacre? What communications have you had with the senator from Arizona, Mr. Kyl, about his placing of a hold on that repeal proposal even after DoJ reversed its stated position?

14. Why wasn't Monica Goodling dismissed immediately after she asserted her right against self-incrimination in connection with the Pearl Harbor Day massacre? Would that not be consistent with the Department's pressure on corporations to fire employees who refuse to cooperate in investigations?

A really important homework assignment

Op-Ed News*

A Really Important Homework Assignment
By Joan Brunwasser, Voting Integrity Editor, OpEdNews April 18, 2007

I am better at writing than doing, talking than doing, virtually anything than actually doing. I'm probably not the only one, but it sometimes makes a mockery of my so-called activism.

My heart is in the right place, but I was born in the wrong generation. High-tech is just not me. If I had been around in the early twentieth century, I would have been a hold-out for the horse and buggy, flustered by those whippersnappers flashing by in their horseless wonders. Paper and pencil are my preferred means of communication, which is why you'll never catch me with a PDA. My sore rear end is a result of my work at OpEdNews, not from surfing the web.

One of the perks of my role as voting integrity editor is that I've been able to connect and establish a rapport with many of the people who have been driving the election integrity movement over the last few years. I do my best to be fair, and I have no particular axe to grind, so people are pretty patient about my technological shortcomings. OpEdNews does its best to include as many of the activists and their work as possible, and we've done a pretty good job at it.

Brad Friedman is one of my cyber-buddies. I have gotten a great education on election integrity from BradBlog.com. His daily exposés are, for me, what I imagine a cup of coffee is for caffeine addicts. I need my fix to feel like I'm on top of things. We have corresponded for quite a while, and even once had a freewheeling phone conversation with the potential of turning into an interview (except for the fact that I don't know how to do interviews and my computer ate the file of the transcript that he sent me). I am grateful to him for teaching me how to insert links so that my articles would look more professional, even though I wasn't a particularly quick study.

I often feel like a cheerleader (finally, sort of fulfilling my aspirations as a junior high schooler). People do great work, and I commend them for it by posting their articles at OpEdNews to give them more exposure. But, in terms of being able to follow exactly what they're saying or actually follow through on their calls to action, there's the rub. And I don't think I'm the only one, either.

I've had an idea for a while about developing a prototype so that people could print it up and have it in front of them when they made calls to their secretaries of state to enlist their support for election reform. It's a project that is on my friend Nancy (of the Election Defense Alliance) Tobi's list, but the truth is that she is so busy with everything else she's doing, she hasn't been able to get to it yet. Nancy believes that our congressional representatives need to hear from their constituents, and that we all need to begin identifying which ones are on our side and which are not. We need to be strategic in order to win. (Stay tuned for your next assignment. Our template for contacting your congressional reps is in the works.)

In the meantime, there I am, full of good intentions. But, have I picked up the phone and called my own Secretary of State, Jesse White? No, I shamefacedly admit, I have not. And if I haven't, I venture to guess that most people haven't either.

Why haven't I? I'm uncomfortable doing it because I don't feel that I really get all the issues yet, which makes me tentative. That's why I thought of this how-to template that would lay out the issues in a very straightforward, easy-to-follow format. That way, I could just clutch it in front of me when I made my phone call.

I wrote Brad about his article on the latest electronic voting machine/EAC scandal - click here "Exclusive: ES&S Touch-Screen Voting Systems Found Vulnerable to 'Serious' Viral Vote-Flipping Attack; US Election Assistance Commission Refuses to Issue Warning" - which reads in part,

The vulnerability is said to allow for a single malicious user to introduce a virus into the system which "could potentially steal all the votes in that county, without being detected," according to a noted computer scientist and voting system expert who has reviewed the findings.

I commended Brad (and co-author Michael Richardson) on the post. This is what he wrote me when I asked what we can be doing.

[Make] noise, noise, noise. Any way possible. You're media! Call the EAC [Election Assistance Commission] and see if they have any explanation for that article!

When they give you the same old song and dance, report it again! Call a couple of the SoS offices at the affected states and ask them if they know their systems were found to have been vulnerable to viruses from a single person that could flip an entire county's election undetectedly, and ask them why they didn't know about it, since the EAC did, and if they think the EAC should have let them know. Etc.

Advance the story, report it. We could use ya, teammate!

So, here's what I did. I went online and got the telephone number of the EAC, (toll-free 866-747-1471) and the name of the director (Jeannie Layson).

Then, I went online again and got the link for the complete roster of all 50 states (<http://www.nass.org/sos/soscontact.html>) with the Secretaries of States and their phone and fax numbers, snail mail and e-mail addresses. In short, more information than you or I will ever need.

Then, I printed up a copy of the original article from April 16th by Michael Richardson and Brad Friedman (<http://www.bradblog.com/?p=4396#more-4396>) as well as an update that lists the 16 states affected by this newly discovered "virus vulnerability" (<http://www.bradblog.com/?p=4416>). So now I'm all set with everything I need.

Unfortunately, it's too late today to call. But, tomorrow, I will take all of my pieces and:

1. Call the EAC and ask them about the article and why they take no responsibility for contacting and warning the states affected by this serious breach. (Keep in mind that this incompetent group is about to be made a permanent fixture on the political landscape if HR 811 is passed.) I will note any comment, or refusal to comment.

2. Then, I will call as many of the 16 secretaries of state as I can to ask what they think about this article, which I will offer to fax or email to them. (I'm assuming that after one or two calls, it will be pretty easy and the words will just roll off my tongue.)

3. Then, I will contact my own secretary of state (thankfully, Illinois is not on this list, but we have plenty of our own problems) and discuss how we can work together on spreading the word about the problems with the EAC, electronic voting and HR 811.

4. Then, I will write another OpEdNews piece and tell you how it went!

Hopefully, you will all take heart from this boiled-down, step-by-step template and be empowered to follow the steps yourselves. Let me know where you got and what they said. Trust me when I say that this kind of approach can make a difference. In the meantime, we will be creating dozens - hopefully even hundreds or thousands - of citizen journalists who are stepping forward to do the job so disastrously abandoned by the mainstream corporate press.

I almost forgot the last step:

5. I will take my shoes off, put my feet up, and heave a big sigh of relief. Thanks, Brad, for making me do this. I feel a lot better now. And it wasn't even as hard as I thought it would be.

Millender-McDonald reveals few details

After feeling ill earlier this month, House Administration Chairwoman Juanita Millender-McDonald (D) visited at least one doctor in Washington, D.C., and returned home to California prior to the April recess for several more sessions with physicians before informing House Democratic leaders Friday that she is suffering from cancer.

According to Millender-McDonald's chief of staff, Bandele McQueen, the Congresswoman, who has closely guarded information regarding her health over the years, has not even told her Capitol Hill staff what type of cancer she is suffering from or how aggressive it might be.

"We appreciate the concerns folks have for the Congresswoman, but at this point we don't have any more information on the type of cancer or the type of treatment," McQueen said.

Millender-McDonald's official leave of absence, granted by Majority Leader Steny Hoyer (D-Md.), extends through May 25.

"She's not going into the office this week or anything, but by being in the district she will have the ability, whether it's working from home or going into the office, to continue to conduct the business of the 37th," said McQueen. "But right now the main focus is making sure that she's well. Hence she's asked for this leave of absence. ... She is hoping to return as soon as possible."

However, McQueen added, "I would be lying to you if my concern is her return to Congress. My concern is her return to good health."

He added that Millender-McDonald has medical staff attending to her at home on an hourly basis, but he dismissed rumors that it was any kind of hospice situation.

On Wednesday, Millender-McDonald was elected, in absentia, to serve as vice chairwoman of the Joint Committee on the Library at the panel's organizational hearing.

During that session, several Members on both sides of the aisle expressed their sympathy and wishes for a speedy recovery, including Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.), the newly elected chairwoman of the Library of Congress panel.

Immediately afterward, the Joint Committee on Printing held its organizational hearing, in which House Administration Vice Chairman Robert Brady (D-Calif.) was elected chairman of the joint panel (Feinstein will serve as his vice chairwoman). While the Printing gavel has in the past fallen to the chairman of the House Administration Committee, the decision that Brady would run the committee in the 110th Congress was made with input from the Democratic leadership well before Millender-McDonald announced her illness, according to Brady's chief of staff.

Meanwhile Brady will be leading the House Administration Committee during Millender-McDonald's absence, although he stressed on Wednesday that "I'm just keeping things warm until the lady comes back."

But while giving his remarks at the joint committee's meeting, House Administration ranking member Vernon Ehlers (R-Mich.) – who also is serving on both joint panels and led the Library committee in the 109th Congress – jokingly referred to Brady as "Mr. Mayor" in reference to his ongoing campaign for mayor of Philadelphia.

The primary for that election will be held more than a week before Millender-McDonald is due to return from her leave of absence.

When asked about the joke after the hearing, Ehlers simply noted that Brady will have "a very busy life" chairing the committee while seeking another office.

"But," he added, "it's Speaker [Nancy] Pelosi's (D-Calif.) appointment and he's going to have to decide if he wants to do it" while he's actively campaigning.

But even prior to this week's news about Millender-McDonald's illness, Republican committee staff have raised concerns about the panel's inaction in certain areas of jurisdiction including the Capitol Visitor Center project and Smithsonian Institution. Meanwhile, other House and Senate committees have been holding hearings on those subjects.

Earlier this month, Ehlers wrote a letter to Millender-McDonald criticizing Democratic leaders for not yet appointing Members to serve on the Franking Commission, which oversees House lawmakers' official mail. Ehlers pointed to a rise in unsolicited e-mail as "evidence of the toll that a lack of oversight has taken."

Subject EAC and the Vote Fraud and Voter Intimidation Project

Ms. Bertelson and Mr. Horrigan,

Thank you so much for speaking with me. Here's information about the vote fraud/voter intimidation project:

The vote fraud and voter intimidation project began in Sept. 2004. As I said, the statement that this project had been five years in the making is incorrect -- that predates the creation of the EAC. Commissioners were appointed in Dec. 2003, and the agency's first year of operations was 2004 with a $1.2 million operating budget.

Also, any assertion that the administration edited the final report, Election Crimes: An Initial Review and Recommendations for Further Study, is absolutely false. And just to be clear, at no point in this process did the administration play any role at any time during the life of this project. As we discussed, EAC contracted with two consultants to do two things: define "vote fraud" and "voter intimidation" and provide recommendations for future study based on their review of court cases, literature and interviews with 24 people who have experience in these areas. On page 24 of the final report, there are links to appendices which contain the consultants' bios, as well as interview summaries, and all of the court cases and literature they reviewed. EAC advisory boards were briefed on this project at a public meeting in May 2006.

EAC staff reviewed every article, every court case and every interview for accuracy, as we have a responsibility to do. This review process was conducted within the agency by EAC staff. After the staff reviewed the document and edited it for accuracy, added information reflecting which recommendations the commission should adopt, it presented its recommended report to the commission. The commission adopted the final report at a public meeting in December 2006. This meeting was also webcast.

Since the adoption of the final report, the Commission's actions have been questioned by Members of Congress, the media and others. Yesterday, EAC Chair Donetta Davidson requested that the inspector general conduct a review surrounding the circumstances of this project and the voter ID research project. Go here to read the Commission's statement, the memo to the IG and the letters we've received from Congress.

Criticism is fair and healthy. However, I request that criticism be based on facts. It is not factual to state that it took five years to complete this project. And it is not factual to state that the administration played any role -- editing or otherwise -- in this project.

I request a correction that clarifies both of the above points. Also, I think it would be fair to point out that the chair has asked the IG to look into the process. You could link to the IG memo and let readers see our point of view, and the point of view of those who are critical of EAC decisions.

I thank both of you for your consideration in this matter. And again, let me reiterate the fair and professional treatment EAC has received from the reporters in the DC bureau. We look forward to answering any questions the editorial board or the news side of your organization has about EAC or its decisions or actions. Please don't hesitate to call me if I can be of assistance in the future.

Thanks, Jeannie— I appreciate the 'head's up.' I had heard that from Bryan's list serve a couple of minutes before your email. I will make sure that Howard has seen the release and memo. I will forward it to Senator Durbin's Appropriations staff as well. When you have an estimated timeline for the Commission's projected response to Sens. Durbin and Feinstein, please let me know.

Also- I've been asked to let you all know that Chairman Feinstein has set a tentative date of June 13th for a hearing on the Election Assistance Commission. Beyond the tentative date—there are no other details.

I hope that you're doing ok— drop me a line or call if there's anything else that's new.

EAC Requests Review of Voter ID, Vote Fraud and Voter Intimidation Research Projects

WASHINGTON – U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) Chair Donetta Davidson today issued a formal request to the commission's inspector general to conduct a review of the commission's contracting procedures, including a review of two recent projects focusing on voter identification and vote fraud and voter intimidation. The chair's memo to the inspector general is attached.

"The actions taken by the commission regarding these research projects have been challenged, and the commissioners and I agree that it is appropriate and necessary to ask the inspector general to review this matter," said EAC Chair Davidson.

Chair Davidson has requested that the inspector general specifically review the circumstances surrounding the issuance and management of the voter identification research project and the vote fraud and voter intimidation research project.

Last month, the commission voted unanimously to launch a comprehensive study focused on voter identification laws after concluding that initial research it received in a report was not sufficient to draw any conclusions. The commission declined to adopt the report, but released all of the data to the public. The report and the research, conducted by Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, through its Eagleton Institute of Politics, are available at www.eac.gov.

At a public meeting in December 2006, the commission adopted Election Crimes: An Initial Review and Recommendations for Further Study, available at www.eac.gov. This report was the culmination of research conducted by Tova Wang and Job Serebrov, who were tasked with defining the terms vote fraud and voter intimidation and providing recommendations how to conduct extensive research in the future on these topics. The contract stated that the consultants were responsible for "creating a report summarizing the findings of this preliminary research effort and working group deliberations. This report should include any recommendations for future EAC research resulting from this effort." EAC staff reviewed the consultants' material, and found inconsistencies in their conclusions and the data they submitted. The material in the final report was motivated by a responsibility, especially as a federal agency, to issue findings only when they are supported by data that can enable EAC to firmly defend its conclusions.

WASHINGTON – U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) Chair Donetta Davidson today issued a formal request to the commission's inspector general to conduct a review of the commission's contracting procedures, including a review of two recent projects focusing on voter identification and vote fraud and voter intimidation. The chair's memo to the inspector general is attached.

"The actions taken by the commission regarding these research projects have been challenged, and the commissioners and I agree that it is appropriate and necessary to ask the inspector general to review this matter," said EAC Chair Davidson.

Chair Davidson has requested that the inspector general specifically review the circumstances surrounding the issuance and management of the voter identification research project and the vote fraud and voter intimidation research project.

Last month, the commission voted unanimously to launch a comprehensive study focused on voter identification laws after concluding that initial research it received in a report was not sufficient to draw any conclusions. The commission declined to adopt the report, but released all of the data to the public. The report and the research, conducted by Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, through its Eagleton Institute of Politics, are available at www.eac.gov.

At a public meeting in December 2006, the commission adopted Election Crimes: An Initial Review and Recommendations for Further Study, available at www.eac.gov. This report was the culmination of research conducted by Tova Wang and Job Serebrov, who were tasked with defining the terms vote fraud and voter intimidation and providing recommendations how to conduct extensive research in the future on these topics. The contract stated that the consultants were responsible for "creating a report summarizing the findings of this preliminary research effort and working group deliberations. This report should include any recommendations for future EAC research resulting from this effort."

EAC is an independent bipartisan commission created by HAVA. It is charged with administering payments to states and developing guidance to meet HAVA requirements, implementing election administration improvements, adopting voluntary voting system guidelines, accrediting voting system test laboratories and certifying voting equipment and serving as a national clearinghouse and resource of information regarding election administration. The four EAC commissioners are Donetta Davidson, chair; Rosemary Rodriguez, Caroline Hunter and Gracia Hillman.

Subject Chair Requests Internal Review

Commissioners,

The chair has asked me to provide you with the memo she just submitted to Curtis Crider, requesting a review of our contracting procedures surrounding the voter identification and vote fraud and voter intimidation research projects. She has asked me to write a press release about this decision, which I will send to you shortly. She requests that we incorporate the commission's request into the letter to the advisory boards and to Congresswoman Lofgren. She also requests that we respond to Sen. Feinstein's letter, letting her know that we are working to comply with her request, but we wanted to alert her to the action we've taken.

I am going to circulate this to the staff so everyone will be aware of this action. Please let me know if you have any questions, and I will have a press release for your review shortly. Attached to the press release will be this memo, letters from Members of Congress regarding this issue, and the recent statements from Congressmen Hinchey and Serrano.

MEMORANDUM

To: EAC Inspector General Curtis Crider
Fr: EAC Chair Donetta Davidson
Cc: Commissioners Rodriguez, Hillman and Hunter, Tom Wilkey, and Julie Hodgkins
RE: EAC requests review of contracting procedures

On Friday, April 13, each of my three colleagues – Rosemary Rodriguez, Gracia Hillman, and Caroline Hunter -- agreed with my recommendation that we issue the following formal request to the Commission’s Office of Inspector General to review the circumstances surrounding two recent EAC research projects – vote fraud and voter intimidation and voter identification.

Background

The U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) is an independent, bipartisan Commission created by the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) of 2002.

EAC develops guidance to meet HAVA requirements, adopts voluntary voting system guidelines, accredits voting system test laboratories, certifies voting systems and audits the use of HAVA funds. HAVA also directs EAC to maintain the national mail voter registration form developed in accordance with the National Voter Registration Act (NVRA) of 1993.

The Commission serves as a national clearinghouse and resource of information regarding election administration. It is under the Commission’s clearinghouse role that research projects are conducted with the goal of providing information that will lead to improvements in election administration, as well as inform the public about how, where and when we vote.

The voter identification research was conducted by Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, through its Eagleton Institute of Politics (“Contractor”). The contract, awarded in May 2005, required the Contractor to perform a review and legal analysis of state legislation, administrative procedures and court cases, and to perform a literature review on other research and data available on the topic of voter identification requirements. Further, the Contractor was asked to analyze the problems and challenges of voter identification, to hypothesize alternative approaches and to recommend various policies that could be applied to these approaches. Last month, the commission voted unanimously not to adopt the report, citing concerns with its methodology, but voted to release all of the data provided by the Contractor.

The vote fraud and voter intimidation research was conducted by Tova Wang and Job Serebrov ("Consultants"). The contracts, awarded in September 2005, issued to these Consultants tasked them with defining the terms vote fraud and voter intimidation and providing recommendations how to conduct extensive research in the future on these topics. The contract stated that the Consultants were responsible for "creating a report summarizing the findings of this preliminary research effort and Working Group deliberations. This report should include any recommendations for future EAC research resulting from this effort."

Review Request

The actions taken by the Commission regarding both the voter identification and the vote fraud and voter intimidation research projects have been challenged. Specifically, Members of Congress, the media, and the public have suggested that political motivations may have been part of the Commission's decision making process regarding these two projects. Also, the Commission has been criticized for the amount of taxpayer dollars that were spent on these two projects, as well as how efficiently these projects were managed.

The Commission takes these allegations very seriously, and we request that you fully review the following issues and provide the Commission and the Congress with a report of your findings as soon as possible. The Commission stands ready to assist you in these efforts and will provide whatever information, including memos, emails and other documents you will need. Cooperating with your review will be the staff's top priority.

1. Current Commission policy regarding awarding and managing research contracts.
2. Issuance and management of the vote fraud and voter intimidation contract.
3. Circumstances surrounding the receipt of information from Consultants regarding the vote fraud and voter intimidation project.
4. Circumstances surrounding staff efforts to write a final report for Commission consideration.
5. Identification of staff members who assisted in the editing and collaboration of the final vote fraud and voter intimidation report for Commission consideration.
6. Staff and/or Commissioner collaboration with political entities or other federal agencies regarding the vote fraud and voter intimidation project.
7. Circumstances surrounding Commission discussion and deliberation of final adoption of Election Crimes: An Initial Review and Recommendation for Further Study.
8. Issuance and management of the voter identification contract.
9. Circumstances surrounding the receipt of information from Contractor regarding the voter identification report.
10. Identification of staff members who assisted in the editing, collaboration, and recommendation to the Commission regarding final adoption of the voter identification report.

11. Staff and/or Commissioner collaboration with political entities or other federal agencies regarding the voter identification project.
12. Circumstances surrounding Commission deliberation whether to adopt a final voter identification report.

For your information, I have attached statements and related correspondence from Members of Congress, and a statement issued by the Commission regarding the criticism.

It is our hope that your findings will instruct us how to move forward in a more efficient, effective and transparent manner. The Commission takes its mandates under HAVA very seriously, and this small Commission has an enormous amount of work to conduct, including testing and certifying voting equipment, providing guidance and assistance to election officials, and auditing the proper use of the $3.1 billion that was distributed under HAVA.

We look forward to your findings so that we may take the actions necessary to improve the way we conceive research projects, manage research contracts, and make decisions regarding the final release of data provided to the Commission from a third party.

Subject EAC Statement

Hello everyone,

I'm sure you have read the article in today's NYT about the voter fraud report this agency issued. Today, Congressmen Hinchey and Serrano have issued the following statement. Very shortly, EAC will post and distribute the attached statement to articulate our role and approach to conducting research and the steps we will take to improve our process. Please let me know if you have any questions about this, as I am sure we will all receive phone calls today about this issue. You may also direct people with questions to the statement that will be on the website. I will keep everyone informed as this situation evolves.

Hinchey, Serrano Urge Non-Partisanship, Greater Transparency at Election Assistance Commissic

Washington, DC - Today, Congressmen Maurice Hinchey (NY-22) and José E. Serrano (NY-16) urged the Election Assistance Commission (EAC) to act with greater transparency and without partisanship. The comments from the congressmen came as the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Financial Services and General Government released a draft version of an EAC report on voter fraud and intimidation that shows significant changes were made to the findings of outside experts before the final report was released.

"The EAC has an obligation to be forthright with the American people and oper transparently and in a non-partisan manner," said Congressman Hinchey, who requested the draft report from EAC Commissioner Donetta L Davidson during subcommittee hearing last month. "The draft report was commissioned with taxpayer dollars upon a mandate from Congress so that we could learn more about voter fraud and intimidation. The need for this report is even more clear when we see the way in which the Bush administration is carrying out the electoral process and how this system is sliding towards corruption In hiding a draft report from the public that is significantly different from the final version the EAC has created a lot more questions than it is has answered while stuntin debate on the issue. In order for our democracy to function properly it is essential that our elections are free of any corruption and that includes ensurin that the EAC does not work to benefit one political party over the other. To achieve that goal we must have all the facts and opinions on the table not just some of them. The EAC must never limit discussion and debate."

"The EAC is charged with helping to ensure our elections are trustworthy and administered fairly," said Congressman Serrano, who is Chair of the Appropriations Subcommittee that oversees the EAC budget. "I'm concerned if changes were made to the report on voter fraud because of partisan bias rather than impartial analysis. When you read the draft report side-by-side with the final version, it is clear that important conclusions of the experts who wrote the draft report were excluded from the final product. Among the excluded information is an analysis that undermines the notion that voter fraud is rampant

"I am concerned that the EAC did not publicly release the taxpayer-funded draft report, and I worry that political considerations may have played a role. We cannot have a politicized EAC, or one that yields to outside pressure. Our democracy, and the American people's faith in it, is far more important than any short-term political advantage."

The draft report was written by outside experts under contract with the EAC. The final report was entitled "Election Crimes: An Initial Review and Recommendations for Future Study" and was issued on December 7, 2006.

The EAC is an independent bipartisan commission created by the 2002 Help America Vote Act in order to disburse funds to the states for the purchase of new voting systems, certify voting technologies, develop guidelines and serve as an information resource for election administration.

WASHINGTON – The Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) directs the Election Assistance Commission (EAC) to serve as a national clearinghouse and resource by, among other things, conducting studies with the goal of improving the administration of federal elections. To fulfill this mandate, the EAC has entered into contracts with a variety of persons and entities. Reports adopted by the EAC, a bipartisan federal entity, are likely to be cited as authoritative in public discourse. Prior to the EAC's adopting a report submitted by a contractor, the EAC has the responsibility to ensure its accuracy and to verify that conclusions are supported by the underlying research.

The Commission takes input and constructive criticism from Congress and the public very seriously. We will take a hard look at the way we do business. Specifically, we will examine both the manner in which we have awarded contracts and our decision-making process regarding the release of research and reports. The EAC takes its mandates very seriously, and we will continue to move forward in a bipartisan way to improve the way America votes.

EAC is an independent bipartisan commission created by HAVA. It is charged with administering payments to states and developing guidance to meet HAVA requirements, implementing election administration improvements, adopting voluntary voting system guidelines, accrediting voting system test laboratories and certifying voting equipment and serving as a national clearinghouse and resource of information regarding election administration. Laura,

The fraud and intimidation research contract was for $147,106, and the voter ID and provisional voting research contract was $560,002. Voter ID was only part of the contract. It also tasked Eagleton to provide information about provisional voting practices. In Oct. 2006, the Commission issued provisional voting best practices.

PFAW Presses Election Assistance Commission to Release Report Debunking Myth of Voter "Fraud"

Despite requests, the Election Assistance Commission is refusing to release a report written months ago that reportedly pokes holes in the widespread myth that voter fraud is rampant in America. EAC Chairman Paul S. DeGregorio Thursday denied a request by People For the American Way Foundation (PFAWF) to make the taxpayer-funded findings available to the public in time for the November elections, now less than three weeks away. PFAWF President Ralph G. Neas said the information should be released immediately and questions whether the report is being suppressed for political reasons.

The existence of the report was revealed days ago by USA Today, which reported that instances in which non-eligible persons attempt to pass themselves off as voters and somehow cast fraudulent votes are exceedingly rare. PFAWF's sister advocacy organization, People For the American Way, has launched a petition drive asking the commissioners to release the report, since it will refute rampant allegations of voter fraud which have led to restrictive voting requirements.

"As we approach the elections, the last thing election officials need is to labor under the false impression that ineligible people are trying to pass themselves off as qualified voters at the polls. They should be focusing on ways to keep the path to the ballot box clear for as many eligible voters as possible, instead of looking for nonexistent fraud that will slow down the process and possibly even discourage eligible voters," said PFAW President Ralph G. Neas. "We need to raise confidence in our elections process, not allow harmful myths to stand – especially when the government has findings available to refute them."

Neas sent a letter on behalf of PFAW Foundation to the EAC earlier this week asking that the report be made available to the public, but on Thursday the EAC denied the request. The report was written by Tova Wang, an elections scholar at the Century Foundation think tank, and Job Serebrov, an Arkansas attorney, and has been in the hands of the EAC commissioners for more

Neas said the report has critical implications for election legislation around the country. During the past few years, a number of states have passed legislation to combat supposed “voter fraud” through overly restrictive identification requirements and other impediments to the ballot box. According to USA Today, the report found such voter fraud to be exceedingly rare.

“We have plenty of problems to deal with. We’ve all seen long lines, unreliable voting equipment, purges that wrongly remove eligible voters from the roll. It turns out the problem is not that bad people are trying to vote, but that too many qualified voters are discouraged from voting. This report apparently confirms what common sense has told us for years – we need to make it easier for eligible voters to cast a vote that counts, not harder,” said Neas. “Instead of fighting nonexistent fraud, these restrictive new laws will discourage voters – people like senior citizens, students and disabled voters who may not have drivers’ licenses or other forms of ID required by these new laws. That’s just wrong, and is clearly not supported by the evidence.”

Neas said the new laws are often politically motivated. The misleadingly-named right-wing group the American Center for Voting Rights has supported extremely restrictive laws by pointing to supposed voting fraud.

“Any law that disadvantages certain groups of voters – like senior citizens and students – should be suspect. If the voters are disadvantaged, which political parties and candidates stand to gain? The same question should be asked about the reason the release of this report has been delayed. Is there a political motivation?” he asked. “Has this study been buried because anti-voter activists like the American Center for Voting Rights find its conclusions inconvenient? That’s unacceptable. The Commissioners of the EAC have had this report for months, even as they have testified before Congress on critical legislation that could have been informed by the report’s findings. It’s unconscionable.”

Laws passed in several states this year raise barriers to the ballot box that would prevent poor, elderly, and minority voters from casting a ballot. PFAW’s sister organization, People For the American Way Foundation, has challenged laws in Ohio, Missouri, and Arizona; in all three, the laws were either struck down or stayed until after the November election. Yet restrictions still in effect in a number of states could harm voters. One such provision, stringent ID requirement, has been likened to a modern day poll tax.

Said Neas, "All American citizens have a vested interest in having fair and open elections. This report contains valuable information that can help us do that. The EAC should release the report immediately, no matter what the political implications may be and hold public hearings to discuss the findings."

PFAW's petition can be found at www.ReleaseTheReport.com.

Neas sent a letter on behalf of PFAW Foundation to the EAC earlier this week asking that the report be made available to the public, but on Thursday the EAC denied the request. The report was written by Tova Wang, an elections scholar at the Century Foundation think tank, and Job Serebrov, an Arkansas attorney, and has been in the hands of the EAC commissioners for more than four months.

Neas said the report has critical implications for election legislation around the country. During the past few years, a number of states have passed legislation to combat supposed “voter fraud” through overly restrictive identification requirements and other impediments to the ballot box. According to USA Today, the report found such voter fraud to be exceedingly rare.

“We have plenty of problems to deal with. We’ve all seen long lines, unreliable voting equipment, purges that wrongly remove eligible voters from the roll. It turns out the problem is not that bad people are trying to vote, but that too many qualified voters are discouraged from voting. This report apparently confirms what common sense has told us for years – we need to make it easier for eligible voters to cast a vote that counts, not harder,” said Neas. “Instead of fighting nonexistent fraud, these restrictive new laws will discourage voters – people like senior citizens, students and disabled voters who may not have drivers’ licenses or other forms of ID required by these new laws. That’s just wrong, and is clearly not supported by the evidence.”

Neas said the new laws are often politically motivated. The misleadingly-named right-wing group the American Center for Voting Rights has supported extremely restrictive laws by pointing to supposed voting fraud.

“Any law that disadvantages certain groups of voters – like senior citizens and students – should be suspect. If the voters are disadvantaged, which political parties and candidates stand to gain? The same question should be asked about the reason the release of this report has been delayed. Is there a political motivation?” he asked. “Has this study been buried because anti-voter activists like the American Center for Voting Rights find its conclusions inconvenient? That's unacceptable. The Commissioners of the EAC have had this report for months, even as they have testified before Congress on critical legislation that could have been informed by the report's findings. It's unconscionable."

Laws passed in several states this year raise barriers to the ballot box that would prevent poor, elderly, and minority voters from casting a ballot. PFAW's sister organization, People For the American Way Foundation, has challenged laws in Ohio, Missouri, and Arizona; in all three, the laws were either struck down or stayed until after the November election. Yet restrictions still in effect in a number of states could harm voters. One such provision, stringent ID requirement, has been likened to a modern day poll tax.

Said Neas, "All American citizens have a vested interest in having fair and open elections. This report contains valuable information that can help us do that. The EAC should release the report immediately, no matter what the political implications may be and hold public hearings to discuss the findings."

PFAW's petition can be found at www.ReleaseTheReport.com.

Bryan,

This article slamming the EAC ran in a major Washington newspaper on Tuesday (the link is <http://www.spokesmanreview.com/opinion/story.asp?ID=156039>, and the text is included below). All I've heard about the report is what USA Today mentioned, plus Tom Wilkey told me that the report is currently being worked on for a near-future release.

I'm planning to respond to this article on the issue of whether voter fraud is widespread, and wanted to also defend the EAC's actions, which I think were wise. It sounds like the news editors just conjectured what happened, as they indicated no attempt to find out for sure why the report was withheld.

In responding to them, it would be nice to have your side of the story to help me accurately explain what happened. Can you give me any comments on why the report was held? Was it because the EAC was trying to help those who are "peddling suspicions of voter fraud"?

Any thoughts you have would be helpful.

Cordially,

Jonathan

Our view: Fraudulent fears

Shame on hiding report finding low voter fraud

October 24, 2006

Proponents of stringent election laws designed to stop fraud surely don't want to hear that there's little evidence of chicanery. That's probably why the results of a federal study on the matter, which was delivered in May, were kept quiet.

Many states have adopted restrictions on voter registration and polling place practices, and the U.S. House of Representatives passed a photo-identification bill aimed at poll-site voting. The Senate is expected to take up the issue next year.

The premise behind all of this legislation is that fraud is widespread. But the U.S. Election Assistance Commission, which was established by Congress to ensure voting integrity, commissioned a study that questions that assumption. USA Today obtained the study four months after its completion and recently reported on the findings:

"There is widespread but not unanimous agreement that there is little polling-place fraud, or at least much less than is claimed, including voter impersonation, 'dead' voters, non-citizen voting and felon voters."

That's an awfully inconvenient summation for those who back stricter voting laws and consistently assert that there's rampant fraud while providing scant proof.

Voter fraud is a highly politicized issue. The congressional bill on photo IDs drew the support of 98 percent of Republicans and the opposition of 98 percent of Democrats. And voters in Washington state lived through the partisan wrangling after the razor-thin victory by Chris Gregoire in the 2004 gubernatorial election, when mistakes were quickly relabeled "fraud."

When a favorite candidate loses a close race, partisans attack the system of voting. It happened in Florida in 2000 and in Washington state in 2004. What's interesting about the federal commission's study is that it points to the system that most reforms would not touch as having the highest potential for fraud.

Absentee balloting is more susceptible to manipulation, the report states, via coercion and forgery. But it's polling places that have been placed under heavy scrutiny by reformers.

013977

The lack of focus on mail-in balloting is probably a political calculation, because it's popular. Most counties in Washington state have moved to that system.

Politicians can get more mileage hyping the possibility of votes by illegal immigrants and felons, but their solutions can serve to discourage voting by honest citizens.

Unfortunately, the federal commission has played into the hands of those peddling suspicions by choosing not to release its report to the public.

The public deserves to know what is happening with its election systems as it weighs the merit of various reform proposals. But a commission that was formed to zero in on real problems has undermined its credibility by sitting on a report that highlights them.

Subject EAC Commissioned Report on Voter Fraud

Honorable EAC Commissioners,

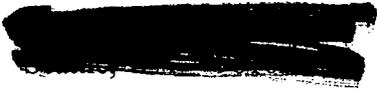

I ask you to release the EAC commissioned report on voting fraud. Regardless of political persuasion, voting is the bedrock upon which our representative democracy is built. Because of this your responsibilities are great. Currently there has been a rush of litigation intended to protect against voter fraud. There are real concerns that these protections will decrease voter turnout, and likely decrease turnout disproportionately in minority groups. This will obviously affect the parties differently, thereby creating a tense environment and adding to the strife in our society today. It is important, you can not disagree, that any laws regulating voting practices are only created and passed with honorable intentions, since if the voting process itself is compromised the whole of our representative democracy is as well.

I respect you are in difficult circumstances, but it is better for the country to know the results of an objective report than to be litigated under subjective pretenses and in a disenfranchising manner. All people in this country who are citizens deserve to vote, and this report can help ensure that they continue to have that right free of trappings whose intentions are not true. Thank you for your work and time.

Sincerely,
Dr. Michael D. Marsolek

TO: MEMBERS OF EAC STANDARDS BOARD
FROM: PEGGY NIGHSWONGER, CHAIR, EXECUTIVE BOARD
RAY MARTINEZ, EAC COMMISSIONER
DATE: APRIL 28, 2006
SUBJECT: UPCOMING MEETING OF STANDARDS BOARD, MAY 23-24, 2006

The next meeting of the EAC Standards Board (to be held jointly with the EAC Board of Advisors) will be held in Washington, D.C. on Tuesday, May 23 and Wednesday, May 24, 2006 at the Hamilton Crown Plaza hotel. We hope you will be able to attend this important meeting, which will focus on consideration and discussion of a number of ongoing election administration research projects currently underway by the EAC. Additionally, there will also be an update and discussion regarding recent work conducted by the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) on the voluntary voting system guidelines. (Please see the draft agenda attached for additional information.)

As was the case with our previous meetings of the EAC Standards Board, the EAC will pay the cost of travel, hotel and a Federal per diem for any member of the Standards Board wishing to attend the May 2006 meeting. Upon receipt of this memorandum, please contact the EAC's travel agent, Adventure Travel, at (877) 472-6718 to make your travel arrangements. Additionally, if you have any questions or need assistance in making your travel plans, please call _____ (email address is _____).

Thank you in advance for your willingness to join us in Washington, D.C. We look forward to seeing you soon.

History: This message has been replied to.

I have taken a look at the agendas. My questions start with assignment as resource person. Is Peggy going to be present for the Vote Fraud and Intimidation presentation? I have not been the person refereeing between Job and Tova, nor am I up to date on what their findings and work are. If I am just there to support the meeting, that's great, but Peggy should be there to make any substantive comments. I suffer from a similar problem with regard to the Eagleton presentation (other than what I gathered from their presentation a few weeks ago).

Perhaps what I need to know is what is the "resource person" supposed to do?

As a second question, do we know whether this lunch on Tuesday is "set". The hotel contract will have to be amended to include this lunch. I don't want to move forward on setting that up if it is not approved by the two Boards or it is otherwise not going to occur.

Third issue is that last time the Standards Board wanted a parliamentarian -- not volunteering, but that should be considered in terms of how our staff is assigned.

Subject Re: BoA and Standards Board agendas

Julie, in response to your questions:

The first response is that we've placed you as a resource person for only the ID, Provisional ballot, and then your presentation on legal clearinghouse website. So that's changed. The EAC reference person is not supposed to really interact, but be able to respond to the Board if they have questions regarding EAC processes in conducting the research. The panelists should start and lead the discussion. (i.e. for the breakout sessions on VVSG, I only answered procedural questions from the crowd). The ID and PV issues are inherently legal, so we wanted you to be on hand to explain those items.

As to the second issue, I'm copying Ray, because I believe that the lunch has the Executive Board's approval to alter the contract to provide for a lunch. They had requested an earlier start that day, and this is an effort to accommodate that request. If he disagrees, then I can do what is necessary to get approval for that lunch officially.

Third issue, we may need a parliamentarian for the SB, however, that role might be filled by Bill Campbell as the new role of secretary, or as one of the other SB members appointed. Do you believe we need a line in the first plenary session to appoint the parliamentarian? Maybe Gavin's interested? Ray, any thoughts?

Thanks,
Adam

Subject Research materials for Boards

Team:

To help guide our thoughts for those of us working on the 1 PM meeting on what materials will be available for the SB/BOA meeting, I have drawn up a "comment" version of the SB agenda, which indicates, for each agenda item present, what materials will be available, and when. This is a preliminary agenda, and I realize we'll discuss these issues at the meeting today, but I thought it would be better to see this in written form, so we can identify potential problem areas. I'd like to work from this, modify this document, as we make our determinations as when, and in what form we will be providing materials to the Boards.

Again-- you all are the experts as to what stage these projects are at-- so I apologize if there's missing or incomplete information here.

Thanks,
Adam

Commissioners:

Peggy, Edgardo, Karen, Laiza, Adam and Amie met this afternoon to discuss what materials will be ready to present to the Standards Board and Board of Advisors members during the meetings later this month. Listed below is what we have determined to be available for their review and feedback. Please review this list and offer your feedback.

Also, attached is an updated SB agenda with "comments" on work product for each project to be discussed.

Design for Democracy - exhibits to be on display for board member review and feedback; Ric Grefe will be present with KLD to discuss the processes used to get to these specific examples; Preliminary Design Report (dated April 10, 2006) to be delivered electronically to the members for their review prior to the meeting

Legal Information Clearinghouse - demo version of the website will be available to show

Public Access Portals - there is a conference scheduled for June 16-18; a tentative agenda and, if desired, a list of participants will be made available to the members for their review and feedback; also future steps can also be outlined for their feedback

Katrina Voting Assistance Relief - due to the limited amount of information that we can offer, we propose eliminating this topic and substituting discussions on our Language Working Group meetings

Language Working Groups - the members will be updated on our two working group meetings and the information received at both, as well as our next steps

Provisional Voting - a draft of the final report is to be delivered to the 4 C's by 5/11 for their review and feedback; product following 4C review will be available 5/17 for electronic distribution to board members

Poll Worker R T & R (including College Pollworker) - reports as they stand now are not ready to be presented, according the KLD; Peggy and Karen to communicate to project managers the need for a report by 5/11 for review by the 4 C's

Proposed Management Guidelines - Connie, Brit, and Brian to determine on 5/10 what materials are ready for presentation to board members; currently a 3 page overview briefing of guideline principles and a 20 page chapter on security principles have been prepared

Vote Count/Recount - materials to be delivered to board members include the public testimony given by Thad Hall and Doug Chapin at our Seattle public meeting and several case studies outlining examples

EAC Election Day Survey - draft report with changes/updates highlighted and website application clips to be presented (Ready).

013995

Voting Fraud/Voter Intimidation - a summary of the preliminary research and a recap of the discussions of the May 18 working group meeting offering brainstorming ideas, not advice

NIST/TGDC activities - Allan Eustis states that NIST is working to provide their summary of materials to be provided, and that they will get that to us ASAP.

Voter Identification - a PowerPoint presentation outlining the process and a summary of findings. Peer review group to occur May 11th, with final Draft due the 15th. At this time, Commissioners can determine whether Draft Report is ready to submit to the SB and BOA.

Subject Re: Working Group-Perez

As you may recall, the Commissioners directed me to find a nonpartisan local election official to serve on the Working Group. The three of us discussed the desirability of having a Hispanic. I proposed that I find someone from Texas because of that State's colorful history of voting fraud and their innovative approaches to combat it. In those Texas counties that hire Election Administrators to run elections, rather than having elected officials do so (Tax Assessor for voter registration; County Clerk for balloting), the Election Administrator is hired by the County Election Commission and is supposed to perform his or her duties in a nonpartisan manner. (See attached excerpts from Texas Election Code regarding election administrator hiring and restrictions on partisan activity.)

Any experienced Texas election official will be familiar with voting fraud and voter intimidation schemes used in that State. Mr. Perez has over 13 years experience as a county Election Administrator in Texas. You won't find many news articles mentioning him because he has kept his nose clean. (The Texas press, as in many other parts of the country, prefers to report bad news.) Mr. Perez is plugged into the association of Texas election officials and the two largest organizations of election officials in this country: the International Association of Clerks, Recorders, Election Officials and Treasurers (IACREOT); and The Election Center. He is a past President and past Chairman of the Legislative Committee for the Texas Association of Election Administrators. He currently serves on IACREOT's Election Officials Committee, which plans the educational sessions for election officials that are conducted at that organization's conferences. His peers in IACREOT and The Election Center have selected his submissions on web presentations (IACREOT) and his professional practices papers (Election Center) for awards. Mr. Perez also has access to information from other States through his membership in IACREOT and The Election Center. He also has a sense of humor, which you will note if you access the staff web page on the Guadalupe County Elections web site and hear the Mission Impossible theme .. something that might be useful in the upcoming meeting.

Guadalupe County is small but growing. In 2004, the county had over 65 thousand registered voters (a number more than doubled the number of registered voters in 1988). A third of the county's population claims Hispanic or Latino origin, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. The county is in south central Texas and is bordered by Comal, Hays, Cladwell, Gonzales, Wilson, and Bexar counties. In the 1980s, the county was predominately a farming community; but in recent years, many people have moved from

Subject Board Meeting Materials

Commissioners:

Peggy, Edgardo, Karen, Laiza, Adam and Amie met yesterday afternoon to discuss what materials will be ready to present to the Standards Board and Board of Advisors members during the meetings later this month. Listed below is what the Research Team has determined to be available for their review and feedback. It looks like the much of the information needed will be able to be sent to Adventure travel for their preparation in binders on May 17th.

Please review this list and offer your feedback.

Also, attached is an updated SB agenda with "comments" on work product for each project to be discussed.

Design for Democracy - exhibits to be on display for board member review and feedback; Ric Grefe will be present with KLD to discuss the processes used to get to these specific examples; Preliminary Design Report (dated April 10, 2006) to be delivered electronically to the members for their review prior to the meeting

Legal Information Clearinghouse - Information about contract, potentially a demo website to show members functionality (tentative).

Public Access Portals - there is a conference in June; a tentative agenda will be made available to the members for their review and feedback; also future steps can also be outlined for their feedback; we will include a timeline for when draft documents will be submitted so we can send them out via email for feedback before finalizing the project.

Katrina Voting Assistance Relief - due to the limited amount of information that we can offer, EC strongly proposes eliminating this topic and substituting discussions on our Language Working Group meetings
Language Working Groups - the members will be updated on our two working group meetings and the information received at both, as well as our next steps for development of programs

Provisional Voting - a draft of the final report is to be delivered to the 4 C's by 5/11 for their review and feedback; product following 4C review will be available 5/17 for electronic distribution to board members

Poll Worker R T & R (including College Pollworker) - reports as they stand now are not ready to be presented, according the KLD; Peggy and Karen to communicate to project managers the need for a report by 5/11 for review by the 4 C's

It is my understanding that Adam Ambrogi has been in touch with Ned Foley and, in turn, Dan Tokaji to indicate that you and Dan will present the information on the Voter ID project, while you and Ned will present the information on the Provisional Voting project.

Adam Ambrogi can also clarify your presentations. As I understand it, you will present your Voter ID and Provisional Voting projects to the Standards Board. You will then present your Voter ID and Provisional Voting Projects to the Board of Advisors.

I believe Adventure Travel handles hotel and travel arrangements.

I do not believe accommodations have been made for other members of the project team to attend. I will ask Adam Ambrogi, who is the principal point of contact on these meetings, to clarify this.

Voting Fraud-Voter Intimidation Research Project

INTRODUCTION

Section 241 of the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) requires EAC to conduct research on election administration issues. Among the tasks listed in the statute is the development of:

- nationwide statistics and methods of identifying, deterring, and investigating voting fraud in elections for Federal office [section 241(b)(6)]; and
- ways of identifying, deterring, and investigating methods of voter intimidation [section 241(b)(7)].

EAC's Board of Advisors recommended that the agency make research on these matters a high priority.

FOCUS OF CURRENT RESEARCH

In September 2005, the Commission hired two consultants with expertise in this subject matter, Job Serebrov and Tova Wang, to:

- develop a comprehensive description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation in the context of Federal elections;
- perform background research (including Federal and State administrative and case law review), identify current activities of key government agencies, civic and advocacy organizations regarding these topics, and deliver a summary of this research and all source documentation;
- establish a project working group, in consultation with EAC, composed of key individuals and representatives of organizations knowledgeable about the topics of voting fraud and voter intimidation;
- provide the description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation and the results of the preliminary research to the working group, and convene the working group to discuss potential avenues for future EAC research on this topic; and
- produce a report to EAC summarizing the findings of the preliminary research effort and working group deliberations that includes recommendations for future research, if any;

As of the date of this report, the consultants have drafted a definition of election fraud, reviewed relevant literature and reports, interviewed persons from government and private sectors with subject matter expertise, analyzed news reports of alleged election fraud, reviewed case law, and established a project working group.

DEFINITION OF ELECTION FRAUD

The consultants drafted a definition of election fraud that includes numerous aspects of voting fraud (including voter intimidation, which is considered a subset of voting fraud) and voter registration fraud, but excludes campaign finance violations and election administration mistakes. This draft will be discussed and probably refined by the project working group, which is scheduled to convene on May 18, 2006.

LITERATURE REVIEW

The consultants found many reports and books that describe anecdotes and draw broad conclusions from a large array of incidents. They found little research that is truly systematic or scientific. The most systematic look at fraud appears to be the report written by Lori Minnite, entitled "Securing the Vote: An Analysis of Election Fraud". The most systematic look at voter intimidation appears to be the report by Laughlin McDonald, entitled "The New Poll Tax". The consultants found that books written about this subject all seem to have a political bias and a pre-existing agenda that makes them somewhat less valuable.

Moreover, the consultants found that reports and books make allegations but, perhaps by their nature, have little follow up. As a result, it is difficult to know when something has remained in the stage of being an allegation and gone no further, or progressed to the point of being investigated or prosecuted or in any other way proven to be valid by an independent, neutral entity. This is true, for example, with respect to allegations of voter intimidation by civil rights organizations, and, with respect to fraud, John Fund's frequently cited book, "Stealing Elections".

Consultants found that researchers agree that measuring something like the incidence of fraud and intimidation in a scientifically legitimate way is extremely difficult from a methodological perspective and would require resources beyond the means of most social and political scientists. As a result, there is much more written on this topic by advocacy groups than social scientists.

Other items of note:

- There is as much evidence, and as much concern, about structural forms of disenfranchisement as about intentional abuse of the system. These include felon disenfranchisement, poor maintenance of databases and identification requirements.
- There is tremendous disagreement about the extent to which polling place fraud, e.g. double voting, intentional felon voting, noncitizen voting, is a serious problem. On balance, more researchers find it to be less of a problem than is commonly described in the political debate; but some reports say it is a major problem, albeit hard to identify.

- There is substantial concern across the board about absentee balloting and the opportunity it presents for fraud.
- Federal law governing election fraud and intimidation is varied and complex and yet may nonetheless be insufficient or subject to too many limitations to be as effective as it might be.
- Deceptive practices, e.g. targeted flyers and phone calls providing misinformation, were a major problem in 2004.
- Voter intimidation continues to be focused on minority communities, although the American Center for Voting Rights uniquely alleges it is focused on Republicans.

Recommendations

The consultants recommend that subsequent EAC research include a follow up study of allegations made in reports, books and newspaper articles. They also suggest that the research should focus on filling the gap between the lack of reports based on methodical studies by social or political scientists and the numerous, but less scientific, reports published by advocacy groups.

INTERVIEWS

The consultants jointly selected experts from the public and private sector for interviews. The consultants' analysis of their discussions with these members of the legal, election official, advocacy, and academic communities follows.

Common Themes

- There is virtually universal agreement that absentee ballot fraud is the biggest problem, with vote buying and registration fraud coming in after that. The vote buying often comes in the form of payment for absentee ballots, although not always. Some absentee ballot fraud is part of an organized effort; some is by individuals, who sometimes are not even aware that what they are doing is illegal. Voter registration fraud seems to take the form of people signing up with false names. Registration fraud seems to be most common where people doing the registration were paid by the signature.
- There is widespread but not unanimous agreement that there is little polling place fraud, or at least much less than is claimed, including voter impersonation, "dead" voters, noncitizen voting and felon voters. Those few who believe it occurs often enough to be a concern say that it is impossible to show the extent to which it happens, but do point to instances in the press of such incidents. Most people believe that false registration forms have not resulted in polling place fraud, although it may create the perception that vote fraud is possible. Those who believe there is more polling place fraud than reported/investigated/prosecuted believe that registration fraud does lead to fraudulent votes. Jason Torchinsky from the American Center for Voting Rights is the only interviewee who believes that polling place fraud is widespread and among the most significant problems in the system.

- Abuse of challenger laws and abusive challengers seem to be the biggest intimidation/suppression concerns, and many of those interviewed assert that the new identification requirements are the modern version of voter intimidation and suppression. However there is evidence of some continued outright intimidation and suppression, especially in some Native American communities. A number of people also raise the problem of poll workers engaging in harassment of minority voters. Other activities commonly raised were the issue of polling places being moved at the last moment, unequal distribution of voting machines, videotaping of voters at the polls, and targeted misinformation campaigns.
- Several people – including representatives from the Department of Justice (DOJ) - indicate that, for various reasons, DOJ is bringing fewer voter intimidation and suppression cases now, and has increased its focus on matters such as noncitizen voting, double voting, and felon voting. While DOJ's Voting Section, Civil Rights Division, focuses on systemic patterns of malfeasance, the Election Crimes Branch, Public Integrity Section, has increased prosecutions of individual instances of felon, alien, and double voting at the same time as it maintains an aggressive pursuit of systematic schemes to corrupt the electoral process.
- The problem of badly kept voter registration lists, with both ineligible voters remaining on the rolls and eligible voters being taken off, remains a common concern. A few people are also troubled by voters being on registration lists in two states. They said that there was no evidence that this had led to double voting, but it opens the door to the possibility. There is great hope that full implementation of the new requirements of HAVA – done well, a major caveat – will reduce this problem dramatically.

Common Recommendations:

- Many of those interviewed recommend better poll worker training as the best way to improve the process; a few also recommended longer voting times or voting on days other than election day (such as weekends) but fewer polling places so only the best poll workers would be employed.
- Many interviewed support stronger criminal laws and increased enforcement of existing laws with respect to both fraud and intimidation. Advocates from across the spectrum expressed frustration with the failure of the Department of Justice to pursue complaints.

- With respect to DOJ's Voting Section, Civil Rights Division, John Tanner indicated that fewer cases are being brought because fewer are warranted – it has become increasingly difficult to know when allegations of intimidation and suppression are credible since it depends on one's definition of intimidation, and because both parties are doing it. Moreover prior enforcement of the laws has now changed the entire landscape – race based problems are rare now. Although challenges based on race and unequal implementation of identification rules would be actionable, Mr. Tanner was unaware of such situations actually occurring and his office has not pursued any such cases.
- Craig Donsanto of DOJ's Election Crimes Branch, Public Integrity Section, says that while the number of election fraud related complaints have not gone up since 2002, nor has the proportion of legitimate to illegitimate claims of fraud, the number of cases DOJ is investigating and the number of indictments his office is pursuing are both up dramatically. Since 2002, DOJ has brought more cases against alien voters, felon voters and double voters than ever before. Mr. Donsanto would like more resources so that his agency can do more and would like to have laws that make it easier for the federal government to assume jurisdiction over voter fraud cases.
- A couple of interviewees recommend a new law that would make it easier to criminally prosecute people for intimidation even when there is not racial animus.
- Several advocate expanded monitoring of the polls, including some associated with the Department of Justice.
- Almost everyone hopes that administrators will maximize the potential of statewide voter registration databases to prevent fraud.
- Challenge laws, both with respect to pre-election day challenges and challengers at the polls, need to be revised by all states to ensure they are not used for purposes of wrongful disenfranchisement and harassment.
- Several people advocate passage of Senator Barak Obama's "deceptive practices" bill.
- There is a split on whether it would be helpful to have nonpartisan election officials – some indicated they thought even if elections officials are elected as non partisan officials, they will carry out their duties in biased ways nonetheless. However, most agree that elections officials pursuing partisan agendas are a problem that must be addressed in some fashion. Suggestions included moving election responsibilities out of the secretary of states' office; increasing transparency in the process; and enacting conflict of interest rules.
- A few recommend returning to allowing use of absentee ballots "for cause" only if it were politically feasible.

- A few recommend enacting a national identification card, including Pat Rogers, an attorney in New Mexico, and Jason Torchinsky from ACVR, who advocates the proposal in the Carter-Baker Commission Report.
- A couple of interviewees indicated the need for clear standards for the distribution of voting machines

NEWS ARTICLES

Consultants conducted a Nexis search of related news articles published between January 1, 2001 and January 1, 2006. A systematic, numerical analysis of the data collected during this review is currently being prepared. What follows is an overview of these articles provided by the consultants.

Absentee Ballots

According to press reports, absentee ballots are abused in a variety of ways:

- Campaign workers, candidates and others coerce the voting choices of vulnerable populations, usually elderly voters.
- Workers for groups and individuals have attempted to vote absentee in the names of the deceased.
- Workers for groups, campaign workers and individuals have attempted to forge the names of other voters on absentee ballot requests and absentee ballots and thus vote multiple times.

It is unclear how often actual convictions result from these activities (a handful of articles indicate convictions and guilty pleas), but this is an area in which there have been a substantial number of official investigations and actual charges filed, according to news reports where such information is available. A few of the allegations became part of civil court proceedings contesting the outcome of the election.

While absentee fraud allegations turn up throughout the country, a few states have had several such cases. Especially of note are Indiana, New Jersey, South Dakota, and most particularly, Texas. Interestingly, there were no articles regarding Oregon, where the entire system is vote by mail.

Voter Registration Fraud

According to press reports, the following types of allegations of voter registration fraud are most common:

- Registering in the name of dead people;
- Fake names and other information on voter registration forms;
- Illegitimate addresses used on voter registration forms;
- Voters being tricked into registering for a particular party under false pretenses; and
- Destruction of voter registration forms depending on the party the voter registered with.

There was only one self evident instance of a noncitizen registering to vote. Many of the instances reported included official investigations and charges filed, but few actual convictions, at least from the news reporting. There have been multiple reports of registration fraud in California, Colorado, Florida, Missouri, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Voter Intimidation and Suppression

This is the area which had the most articles, in part because there were so many allegations of intimidation and suppression during the 2004 election. Most of these remained allegations and no criminal investigation or prosecution ensued. Some of the cases did end up in civil litigation.

This is not to say that these alleged activities were confined to 2004 – there were several allegations made during every year studied. Most notable were the high number of allegations of voter intimidation and harassment reported during the 2003 Philadelphia mayoral race.

A very high number of the articles were about the issue of challenges to voters' registration status and challengers at the polling places. There were many allegations that planned challenge activities were targeted at minority communities. Some of the challenges were concentrated in immigrant communities.

However, the tactics alleged varied greatly. The types of activities discussed also include the following:

- Photographing or videotaping voters coming out of polling places;
- Improper demands for identification;

- Poll watchers harassing voters;
- Poll workers being hostile to or aggressively challenging voters;
- Disproportionate police presence;
- Poll watchers wearing clothes with messages that seemed intended to intimidate; and
- Insufficient voting machines and unmanageably long lines.

Although the incidents reported on occurred everywhere, not surprisingly, many came from “battleground” states. There were several such reports out of Florida, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

“Dead Voters and Multiple Voting”

There were a high number of articles about people voting in the names of the dead and voting more than once. Many of these articles were marked by allegations of big numbers of people committing these frauds, and relatively few of these allegations turning out to be accurate according to investigations by the newspapers themselves, elections officials, and criminal investigators. Often the problem turned out to be a result of administrative error, poll workers mis-marking voter lists, a flawed registration list and/or errors made in the attempt to match names of voters on the list with the names of the people who voted. In a good number of cases, there were allegations that charges of double voting by political leaders were an effort to scare people away from the voting process.

Nonetheless there were a few cases of people actually being charged and/or convicted for these kinds of activities. Most of the cases involved a person voting both by absentee ballot and in person. A few instances involved people voting both during early voting and on Election Day, which calls into question the proper marking and maintenance of the voting lists. In many instances, the person charged claimed not to have voted twice on purpose. A very small handful of cases involved a voter voting in more than one county and there was one substantiated case involving a person voting in more than one state. Other instances in which such efforts were alleged were disproved by officials.

In the case of voting in the name of a dead person, the problem lay in the voter registration list not being properly maintained, i.e. the person was still on the registration list as eligible to vote, and a person took criminal advantage of that. In total, the San Francisco Chronicle found five such cases in March 2004; the AP cited a newspaper analysis of five such persons in an Indiana primary in May 2004; and a senate committee found two people to have voted in the names of the dead in 2005.

As usual, there were a disproportionate number of such articles coming out of Florida. Notably, there were three articles out of Oregon, which has one hundred percent vote-by-mail.

Vote Buying

There were a surprising number of articles about vote buying cases. A few of these instances involved long-time investigations concentrated in three states (Illinois, Kentucky, and West Virginia). There were more official investigations, indictments and convictions/pleas in this area.

Deceptive Practices

In 2004 there were numerous reports of intentional disinformation about voting eligibility and the voting process meant to confuse voters about their rights and when and where to vote. Misinformation came in the form of flyers, phone calls, letters, and even people going door to door. Many of the efforts were reportedly targeted at minority communities. A disproportionate number of them came from key battleground states, particularly Florida, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. From the news reports found, only one of these instances was officially investigated, the case in Oregon involving the destruction of completed voter registration applications. There were no reports of prosecutions or any other legal proceeding.

Non-citizen Voting

There were surprisingly few articles regarding noncitizen registration and voting – just seven all together, in seven different states across the country. They were also evenly split between allegations of noncitizens registering and noncitizens voting. In one case, charges were filed against ten individuals. In another case, a judge in a civil suit found there was illegal noncitizen voting. Three instances prompted official investigations. Two cases, from this Nexis search, remained just allegations of noncitizen voting.

Felon Voting

Although there were only thirteen cases of felon voting, some of them involved large numbers of voters. Most notably, of course, are the cases that came to light in the Washington gubernatorial election contest (see Washington summary) and in Wisconsin (see Wisconsin summary). In several states, the main problem was the large number of ineligible felons that remained on the voting list.

Election Official Fraud

In most of the cases in which fraud by elections officials is suspected or alleged, it is difficult to determine whether it is incompetence or a crime. There are several cases of ballots gone missing, ballots unaccounted for and ballots ending up in a worker's possession. In two cases workers were said to have changed peoples' votes. The one instance in which widespread ballot box stuffing by elections workers was alleged was in Washington State. The judge in the civil trial of that election contest did not find that elections workers had committed fraud. Four of the cases are from Texas.

Recommendation

The consultants recommend that subsequent EAC research should include a Nexis search that specifically attempts to follow up on the cases for which no resolution is evident from this particular initial search.

CASE LAW RESEARCH

After reviewing over 40,000 cases from 2000 to the present, the majority of which came from appeals courts, the consultants found comparatively few applicable to this study. Of those that were applicable, the consultants found that no apparent thematic pattern emerges. However, it appears to them that the greatest areas of fraud and intimidation have shifted from past patterns of stealing votes to present problems with voter registration, voter identification, the proper delivery and counting of absentee and overseas ballots, provisional voting, vote buying, and challenges to felon eligibility.

Recommendation

Because so few cases provided a picture of these current problems, consultants suggest that subsequent EAC research include a review of state trial-level decisions.

PROJECT WORKING GROUP

Consultants and EAC worked together to select members for the Voting Fraud-Voter Intimidation Working Group that included election officials and representatives of advocacy groups and the legal community who have an interest and expertise in the subject matter. (See Attachment A for a list of members.) The working group is scheduled to convene at EAC offices on May 18, 2006 to consider the results of the preliminary research and to offer ideas for future EAC activities concerning this subject.

FINAL REPORT

After convening the project working group, the consultants will draft a final report summarizing the results of their research and the working group deliberations. This report will include recommendations for future EAC research related to this subject matter. The draft report will be reviewed by EAC and, after obtaining any clarifications or corrections deemed necessary, will be made available to the EAC Standards Board and EAC Board of Advisors for review and comment. Following this, a final report will be prepared.

Best Practices in Vote Counts, Recounts, and Challenges

Presentation to EAC Standards Board
May 24, 2006

Research Team

- Thad Hall, University of Utah
- R. Michael Alvarez, Caltech
- Kim Brace, Election Data Services
- Doug Chapin, electionline.org

Requirement for Study

- Section 241 of the HAVA requires the EAC to conduct a study examining vote counting and recounting.
- Identify methodology for studying best practices
- Examine election laws and regulations in all 50 states and the District

Study Overview

- Identified best practice methodologies
- Developed criteria for evaluating practices
- Presented the most common practices for vote counting and recounting.
- Identified “benchmark” practices that exceed the most common practices in states.
- Identified best practices for vote counts and recounts that have been implemented.

Criteria for Studying Vote Counting and Recounting

014033

GAO Best Practice Methodology

- Document existing process
- Research literature; talk to practitioners and experts
- Select comparative entities for review
- Collect data from selected entities
- Identify barriers to change
- Compare/contrast processes; develop implementation recommendations

Best Practice Study

- Researched existing literature on vote counting
- Developed baseline of existing activity
- Developed benchmarks for practices that exceed baseline
- Identified potential best practices for review by the EAC Commissioners
- States and localities have to do the hard work: Implementation

International Principles for Vote Counting

IFES, (IDEA), and the United Nations election project states:

to establish and maintain public confidence in the electoral process, vote counting systems and procedures should incorporate the [eight] fundamental principles of vote counting in a democratic election.

Eight Principles for Vote Counting

- Transparency
- Security
- Professionalism
- Accuracy
- Secrecy
- Timeliness
- Accountability
- Equality

Common International Practice

- All ballots should be reconciled against the number of voters who cast ballots.
- Ballots are initially counted at the precinct where the vote was cast.
- There are explicit legal requirements for securing ballots.
- Recounts are allowed by request; five countries conduct 100 percent audits.
- Convenience voting is everywhere.

Evaluating State Practices in Statute and Regulation

014039

Developing National Baseline

- Survey of state laws and regulations
 - Security
 - Pre-election procedures
 - Election ballot procedures
 - End of Election Procedures
 - Definition of "What Constitutes A Vote"
 - Counting and Accounting
 - Recounting
 - Challenges

Developing National Baseline

- Survey of state laws and regulations
 - Identified Specific Questions
 - Reviewed Survey with EAC, Election Officials, and Outside Experts
- Collected Data
 - Statutory or Regulatory Language
 - Legal Citation

Key Findings

- Three issues with great variation in coherence and completeness
 - Ballot Accounting
 - Ballot Security
 - What Constitutes a Vote

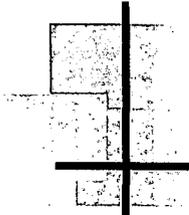

Survey Next Steps

- Each report is being carefully reviewed and edited
- Submit surveys to states for review
- States will have interactive online survey form to note problems

Benchmarking Election Law

014044

Benchmarking

- Common in public and private sectors
- How does your performance stack up to similar organizations? OR
- How does your performance stack up to a pre-selected target?

- GOAL: Think about your practices.

Benchmarking Practices

- Using the survey data, we have identified most common practices
- For many activities, we will propose “benchmark” practices
 - Clearer,
 - More detailed, or
 - More comprehensive

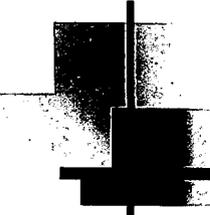

Benchmarking Example: Ballot Accounting

- Most Common Practice: No Standard
- Benchmark: The counting board shall count all ballots to ensure that the total number of ballots corresponds with the total number of names in the poll book. If [they] cannot reconcile... [they] shall submit... a written report stating how many ballots were missing or in excess and any reason ...for the discrepancy.

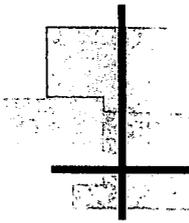

Benchmarking Limitations

- Not all activities can be benchmarked
- Some activities reflect political and cultural decisions by the state. For example:
 - Absentee voting
 - Handling of recounts and challenges

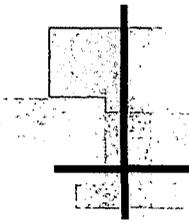

Best Practices in Election Law

014049

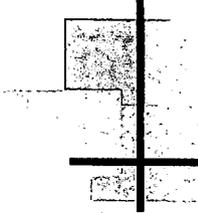

What are Best Practices

- Best practices refer to the processes, practices, and systems identified in... organizations that performed exceptionally well and are widely recognized as improving an organization's performance and efficiency in specific areas.

Effective Best Practices

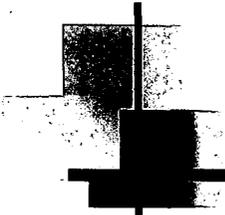

- Address a complete process
- Have been carefully charted
- Often come from organizations with similar characteristics

Best Practices Examined

I am told that a Wordperfect copy of the Provisional document will be fine.

EAC staff will convert it to a PDF file. Please sent the final drafts of the reports ASAP.

Also, you are correct to note the changes in the time allotments Please divide the time among your staff as you deem appropriate.

Subject RE: Presentations at the EAC Governing Boards

Karen, I don't have the capacity to produce a PDF copy of the report. (I thought we discussed this last week and you agreed that the word document would suffice.) Someone at Eagleton could surely covert the DOC file to PDF, but since I just read your email now (4:50), we could not provide a PDF copy today. Please let me know if you want me to pursue this tomorrow.

Thanks for the schedule below. But it raises a question. Earlier this week you told me that the Commissioners asked that we limit our presentation to 10 minutes and leave the rest of the time for questions and comments. As I noted in my response, condensing our reports to 10 minutes poses a challenge. Is the 10 minute limit no longer operative?

Karen,

Attached is the Final Draft of our report on Provisional Voting for review by the Advisory Board and the Standards Board. I understand from our conversation earlier today that it will be reviewed by the Commissioners at their meeting next week, and, if approved by them, distributed to the boards in advance of their meetings on May 23 and 24. This report will form the basis of our PowerPoint briefing for the boards at those meetings. I will not have hard copies of those PowerPoint presentations for distribution to the boards until the day of the meeting.

We intend to have the Final Draft Voter ID Report to you in time for review by the Commissioners at their second meeting next week.

Thanks for your guidance.

This research report on Provisional Voting in the 2004 election is part of a broader analysis that also includes a study of Voter Identification Requirements, a report on which is forthcoming. Conducting the work was a consortium of The Eagleton Institute of Politics of Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, and The Moritz College of Law of The Ohio State University.

The Eagleton Institute explores state and national politics through research, education, and public service, linking the study of politics with its day-to-day practice. It focuses attention on how contemporary political systems work, how they change, and how they might work better. Eagleton regularly undertakes projects to enhance political understanding and involvement, often in collaboration with government agencies, the media, non-profit groups, and other academic institutions.

The Moritz College of Law has served the citizens of Ohio and the nation since its establishment in 1891. It has played a leading role in the legal profession through countless contributions made by graduates and faculty. Its contributions to election law have become well known through its Election Law @ Moritz website. Election Law @ Moritz illuminates public understanding of election law and its role in our nation's democracy.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Background and Methodology

This report to the United States Election Assistance Commission (EAC) presents recommendations for best practices to improve the process of provisional voting. It is based on research conducted by the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, and the Moritz College of Law at Ohio State University under contract to the EAC, dated May 24, 2005.

The Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA, (Public Law 107-252) authorizes the EAC (SEC. 241, 42 USC 15381) to conduct periodic studies of election administration issues. The purpose of these studies is to promote methods for voting and administering elections, including provisional voting, that are convenient, accessible and easy to use; that yield accurate, secure and expeditious voting systems; that afford each registered and eligible voter an equal opportunity to vote and to have that vote counted; and that are efficient. Section 302(a) of HAVA required states to establish provisional balloting procedures by January 2004.¹ The process HAVA outlined left considerable room for variation among the states, arguably including such critical questions as who qualifies as a registered voter eligible to cast a provisional ballot that will be counted and in what jurisdiction (precinct or larger unit) the ballot must be cast in order to be counted.²

The general requirement for provisional voting is that, if a registered voter appears at a polling place to vote in an election for Federal office, but either the potential voter's name does not appear on the official list of eligible voters for the polling place, or an election official asserts that the individual is not eligible to vote, that potential voter must be permitted to cast a provisional ballot. In some states, those who should receive a provisional ballot include, in the words of the EAC's Election Day Survey, "first-time voters who registered by mail without identification and cannot provide identification, as required under HAVA. . ." ³ HAVA also provides that those who vote pursuant to a court order keeping the polls open after the established closing hour shall vote by provisional ballot. Election administrators are required by HAVA to notify individuals of their opportunity to cast a provisional ballot.

¹The Election Center's National Task Force Report on Election Reform in July 2001 had described provisional ballots as providing "voters whose registration status cannot be determined at the polls or verified at the election office the opportunity to vote. The validity of these ballots is determined later, thus ensuring that no eligible voter is turned away and those truly ineligible will not have their ballots counted." It recommended "in the absence of election day registration or other solutions to address registration questions, provisional ballots must be adopted by all jurisdictions." See www.electioncenter.org.

²The 2004 election saw at least a dozen suits filed on the issue of whether votes cast in the wrong precinct but the correct county should be counted. One federal circuit court decided the issue in Sandusky County Democratic Party v. Blackwell, 387 F.3d565 (6th Cir. 2004), which held that votes cast outside the correct precinct did not have to be counted. The court relied on the presumption that Congress must be clear in order to alter the state-federal balance; thus Congress, the court concluded would have been clearer had it intended to eliminate state control over polling location (387 F.3d at 578). An alternative argument, that HAVA's definition of "jurisdiction" incorporates the broader definition in the National Voting Rights Act, however, has not been settled by a higher court. But for now states do seem to have discretion in how they define "jurisdiction" for the purpose of counting a provisional ballot.

³The definition of who was entitled to a provisional ballot could differ significantly among the states. In California, for example, the Secretary of State directed counties to provide voters with the option of voting on a provisional paper ballot if they felt uncomfortable casting votes on the paperless e-voting machines. "I don't want a voter to not vote on Election Day because the only option before them is a touch-screen voting machine. I want that voter to have the confidence that he or she can vote on paper and have the confidence that their vote was cast as marked," Secretary Shelley said. See <http://wired.com/news/evote/0,2645,63298,00.html>. (Our analysis revealed no differences in the use of provisional ballots in the counties with these paperless e-voting machines.) In Ohio, long lines at some polling places resulted in legal action directing that voters waiting in line be given provisional ballots to enable them to vote before the polls closed. (Columbus Dispatch, November 3, 2004.)

FINAL DRAFT

For Review by the Standards Board and Board of Advisors

Our research began in late May 2005. It focused on six key questions raised by the EAC.

1. How did the states prepare for the onset of the HAVA provisional ballot requirement?
2. How did this vary between states that had previously had some form of provisional ballot and those that did not?
3. How did litigation affect implementation?
4. How effective was provisional voting in enfranchising qualified voters?
5. Did state and local processes provide for consistent counting of provisional ballots?
6. Did local election officials have a clear understanding of how to implement provisional voting?

To answer those questions, we:

1. Surveyed 400 local (mostly county) election officials to learn their views about the administration of provisional voting and to gain insights into their experience in the 2004 election.
2. Reviewed the EAC's Election Day Survey, news and other published reports in all 50 states to understand the local background of provisional voting and develop leads for detailed analysis.⁴
3. Analyzed statistically provisional voting data from the 2004 election to determine associations between the use of provisional voting and such variables as states' experience with provisional voting, use of statewide registration databases, counting out-of-precinct ballots, and use of different approaches to voter identification.
4. Collected and reviewed the provisional voting statutes and regulations in all 50 states.
5. Analyzed litigation affecting provisional voting or growing out of disputes over provisional voting in all states.

Our research is intended to provide EAC with a strategy to engage the states in a continuing effort to strengthen the provisional voting process and increase the consistency with which provisional voting is administered, particularly within a state. As EAC and the states move forward to assess and adopt the recommendations made here, provisional voting merits continuing observation and research. The situation is fluid. As states, particularly those states that did not offer a provisional ballot before 2004, gain greater experience with the process and as statewide voter databases are adopted, the provisional voting process will demand further, research-based refinement.

KEY FINDINGS

Variation among the states

In the 2004 election, nationwide about 1.9 million votes, or 1.6% of turnout, were cast as provisional ballots. More than 1.2 million, or just over 63%, were counted. Provisional ballots accounted for a little more than 1% of the final vote tally. These totals obscure the wide variation in provisional voting among the states.⁵

⁴ Attachment 1 provides detailed information on how this study classifies the states according to the characteristics of their provisional voting procedures. It also describes how the data used in the statistical analysis may differ from the data in the Election Day Survey, which became available as our research was concluding.

⁵ HAVA allows the states considerable latitude in how to implement provisional voting, including deciding who beyond the required categories of voters should receive provisional ballots and how to determine which provisional ballots should be counted.

FINAL DRAFT

For Review by the Standards Board and Board of Advisors

- Six states accounted for two-thirds of all the provisional ballots cast.⁶
- The percentage of provisional ballots in the total vote varied by a factor of 1,000 -- from a high of 7% in Alaska to Vermont's 0.006%.
- The portion of provisional ballots cast that were counted ranged from 96% in Alaska to 6% in Delaware.
- States with voter registration databases counted, on average, 20% of the provisional ballots cast.
- States without databases counted ballots at more than twice that rate: 44%.⁷
- States that provided more time to evaluate provisional ballots counted a greater proportion of those ballots. Those that provided less than one week counted an average of 35.4% of their ballots, while states that permitted more than 2 weeks, counted 60.8%.

An important source of variation among states was a state's previous experience with provisional voting. The share of provisional ballots in the total vote was six times greater in states that had used provisional ballots before than in states where the provisional ballot was new. In the 25 states that had some experience with provisional voting before HAVA, a higher portion of the total vote was cast as provisional ballots and a greater percentage of the provisional ballots cast were counted than in the 18 new to provisional balloting.⁸

Variation within states

Within states, too, there was little consistency among different jurisdictions. Of the 20 states for which we have county-level provisional ballot data, the rate of counting provisional ballots varied by as much as 90% to 100% among counties in the same state. This suggests that additional factors (including the training of election judges or poll workers) beyond statewide factors, such as experience or the existence of voter registration databases, also influence the use of provisional ballots.

- In Ohio some counties counted provisional ballots not cast in the assigned precinct even though the state's policy was to count only those ballots cast in the correct precinct.
- Some counties in Washington tracked down voters who would otherwise have had their provisional ballots rejected because they had failed to complete part of their registration form, gave them the chance to correct those omissions, and then counted the provisional ballot.

Resources available to administer provisional voting varied considerably among and within states. Differences in demographics and resources result in different experiences with provisional voting. For example, the Election Day Survey found that staffing problems appeared to be particularly acute for jurisdictions in the lowest income and education categories. Small, rural jurisdictions and large, urban jurisdictions tended to report higher rates of an inadequate number of poll workers within polling places or precincts.

- Jurisdictions with lower education and income tend to report more inactive voter registrations, lower turnout, and more provisional ballots cast.

⁶ California, New York, Ohio, Arizona, Washington, and North Carolina. The appearance of Arizona, Washington and North Carolina on this list shows that the number of provisional ballots cast depends on factors other than the size of the population.

⁸ See the appendix for our classification of "old" and "new" states and explanation of why the total is less than 50.

FINAL DRAFT

For Review by the Standards Board and Board of Advisors

- Jurisdictions with higher levels of income and education reported higher average numbers of poll workers per polling place or precinct and reported lower rates of staffing problems per precinct.

In precincts located in districts where many voters live in poverty and have low levels of income and education, the voting process, in general, may be managed poorly. Provisional ballots cannot be expected to work much better. In these areas, the focus should be on broader measures to improve the overall functionality of struggling voting districts, although improving the management of provisional balloting may help at the margin.

The lessons of litigation

Successful legal challenges highlight areas where provisional voting procedures were wanting. A flurry of litigation occurred around the country in October 2004 concerning the so-called “wrong precinct issue” – whether provisional ballots cast by voters in a precinct other than their designated one would be counted for statewide races. Most courts, including the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit (the only federal appeals court to rule on the issue), rejected the contention that HAVA requires the counting of these wrong-precinct provisional ballots. This litigation was significant nonetheless.

- First, the Sixth Circuit decision established the precedent that voters have the right to sue in federal court to remedy violations of HAVA.
- Second –and significantly– the litigation clarified the right of voters to receive provisional ballots, even though the election officials were certain they would not be counted. The decision also defined an ancillary right –the right to be directed to the correct precinct. There voters could cast a regular ballot that would be counted. If they insisted on casting a provisional ballot in the wrong precinct, they would be on notice that it would be a symbolic gesture only.
- Third, these lawsuits prompted election officials to take better care in instructing precinct officials on how to notify voters about the need to go to the correct precinct in order to cast a countable ballot.

States move to improve their processes

Shortly after the 2004 election, several states came to the conclusion that the administration of their provisional voting procedures needed to be improved, and they amended their statutes. The new legislation highlights areas of particular concern to states about their provisional voting process.

- Florida, Indiana, Virginia, and Washington have clarified or extended the timeline to evaluate the ballots.
- Colorado, New Mexico, North Carolina, and Washington have passed legislation focused on improving the efficacy and consistency of the voting and counting process.
- Colorado, Arkansas, and North Dakota took up the issue of counting provisional ballots cast in the wrong precinct.

The wide variation in the implementation of provisional voting among and within states suggests that EAC can help states strengthen their processes. Research-based recommendations for best, or at least better, practices that draw on the experience gained in the 2004 election can be useful in states’ efforts to achieve greater consistency in the administration of provisional voting. The important effect of experience on the administration of the provisional ballot process indicates that the states have much they can learn from each other.

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS FOR BEST PRACTICES

State efforts to improve the provisional voting process have been underway since the 2004 election. By recommending best practices, the EAC will offer informed advice while respecting diversity among the states.

Take a quality-improvement approach

Defining what constitutes a successful provisional voting system is difficult. Defining quality requires a broad perspective about how well the system works, how open it is to error recognition and correction, and how well provisional voting processes are connected to the registration and voter identification regimes. A first step is for states to recognize that improving quality begins with seeing the provisional voting process as a system and taking a systems approach to regular evaluation through standardized metrics with explicit goals for performance. EAC can facilitate action by the states by recommending as a best practice that:

- Each state collect data systematically on the provisional voting process to permit evaluation of its voting system and assess changes from one election to the next. The data collected should include: provisional votes cast and counted by county; reasons why provisional ballots were not counted, measures of variance among jurisdictions, and time required to evaluate ballots by jurisdiction

Above all else, the EAC should emphasize the importance of clarity in the rules by which each state governs provisional voting. As state legislators and election officials prepare for the 2006 election, answers to the questions listed in the recommendation section of this report could be helpful. Among those questions are:

- Does the provisional voting system distribute, collect, record, and tally provisional ballots with sufficient accuracy to be seen as procedurally legitimate by both supporters and opponents of the winning candidate?
- Do the procedural requirements of the system permit cost-efficient operation?
- How great is the variation in the use of provisional voting in counties or equivalent levels of voting jurisdiction within the state? Is the variation great enough to cause concern that the system may not be administered uniformly across the state?

Court decisions suggest areas for action

The court decisions following the 2004 election also suggest procedures for states to incorporate into their procedures for provisional voting. EAC should recommend to the states that they:

- Promulgate clear standards for evaluating provisional ballots, and provide training for the officials who will apply those standards.
- Provide effective materials to be used by local jurisdictions in training poll workers on such procedures as how to locate polling places for potential voters who show up at the wrong place.
- Make clear that the only permissible requirement to obtain a provisional ballot is an affirmation that the voter is registered in the jurisdiction and eligible to vote in an election for federal office. Poll workers need appropriate training to understand their duty to give such voters a provisional ballot.

Assess each stage of the provisional voting process

FINAL DRAFT

For Review by the Standards Board and Board of Advisors

Beyond the procedures suggested by court decisions, states should assess each stage of the provisional voting process. They can begin by assessing the utility and clarity of the information for voters on their websites and by considering what information might be added to sample ballots mailed to voters before elections. The better voters understand their rights and obligations, the easier the system will be to manage, and the more legitimate the appearance of the process.

Avoiding error at the polling place will allow more voters to cast a regular ballot and all others who request it to cast a provisional ballot. Our recommendations for best practices to avoid error at the polling place include:

- The layout and staffing of the multi-precinct polling place is important. States should ensure that training materials distributed to every jurisdiction make poll workers familiar with the options available to voters.
- The provisional ballot should be of a design or color sufficiently different from a regular ballot to avoid confusion over counting and include take-away information for the voter on the steps in the ballot evaluation process.
- Because provisional ballots offer a fail-safe, supplies of the ballots at each polling place should be sufficient for all the potential voters likely to need them. Best practice would be for states should provide guidelines (as do Connecticut and Delaware) to estimate the supply of provisional ballots needed at each polling place.

The clarity of criteria for evaluating voter eligibility is critical to a sound process for deciding which of the cast provisional ballots should be counted.

- State statutes or regulations should define a reasonable period for voters who lack the HAVA-specified ID or other information bearing on their eligibility to provide it in order to facilitate the state's ability to verify that the person casting the provisional ballot is the same one who registered. At least 11 states allow voters to provide ID or other information one to 13 days after voting. Kansas allows voters to proffer their ID by electronic means or by mail, as well as in person.
- More provisional voters have their ballots counted in those states that count ballots cast outside the correct precinct. While HAVA arguably leaves this decision up to the states, pointing out the effect of the narrower definition on the portion of ballots counted could be useful to the states in deciding this question. States should be aware, however, of the additional burden placed on the ballot-evaluation process when out-of-precinct ballots are considered. And tradeoffs are involved if out-of-precinct voters are unable to vote for the local offices that might appear on the ballot in their district of residence.
- If a state does require voters to appear at their assigned precinct, where the same polling site serves more than one precinct, a voter's provisional ballot should count so long as the voter cast that ballot at the correct polling site even if at the wrong precinct within that location. While the best practice might be for poll workers to direct the voter to correct precinct poll workers' advice is not always correct, and the voter should be protect against ministerial error.
- Officials should follow a written procedure, and perhaps a checklist, to identify the reason why a provisional ballot is rejected. Colorado's election rules offer particularly clear guidance to the official evaluating a provisional ballot.

In verifying provisional ballots, the time by which election officials must make their eligibility determinations is particularly important in presidential elections because of the need to certify electors to the Electoral College. Our research did not identify an optimum division of the five weeks available.

FINAL DRAFT

For Review by the Standards Board and Board of Advisors

- The best practice here is for states to consider the issue and make a careful decision about how to complete all steps in the evaluation of ballots and challenges to those determinations within the five weeks available.

After the election, timely information to voters about the disposition of their provisional ballot can enable voters to determine if they are registered for future elections and, if not, what they need to do to become registered.

- Best practice for the states is to establish mechanisms to ensure that voters casting provisional ballots are informed whether they are now registered for future elections and, if not, what they need to do to become registered.

Final observation

The detailed examination of each stage in the provisional voting process can lay the foundation each state needs to improve its system. Efforts to improve provisional voting may be most effective as part of a broader effort by state and local election officials to strengthen their systems. Collecting and analyzing data about those systems will enable states to identify which aspects of the registration and electoral system are most important in shunting voters into the provisional ballot process. Responsible officials can then look to their registration system, identification requirements or poll worker training as ways to reduce the need for voters to cast their ballots provisionally.

Provisional Voting in 2004

In the 2004 election, nationwide about 1.9 million votes, or 1.6% of turnout, were cast as provisional ballots. More than 1.2 million or just over 63% were counted. Provisional ballots accounted for a little more than 1% of the final vote tally.

These totals obscure the wide variation in provisional voting among the states.⁹ Six states accounted for two-thirds of all the provisional ballots cast.¹⁰ State by state, the percentage of provisional ballots in the total vote varied by a factor of 1,000 -- from a high of 7% in Alaska to Vermont's 0.006%. The portion of provisional ballots cast that were actually counted also displayed wide variation, ranging from 96% in Alaska to 6% in Delaware. States with voter registration databases counted, on average, 20% of the provisional ballots cast. Those without databases counted provisional ballots at more than twice that rate, 44%.

An important source of variation was a state's previous experience with provisional voting. The share of provisional ballots in the total vote was six times greater in states that had used provisional ballots before than in states where the provisional ballot was new. In the 25 states that had some experience with provisional voting before HAVA, a higher portion of the total vote was cast as provisional ballots and a greater percentage of the provisional ballots cast were counted than in the 18 new to provisional balloting.¹¹

- The percentage of the total vote cast as provisional ballots averaged more than 2% in the 25 experienced states. This was 4 times the rate in states new to provisional voting, which averaged 0.47%.¹²
- The experienced states counted an average of 58% of the provisional ballots cast, nearly double the proportion in the new states, which counted just 33% of cast provisional ballots.
- The combined effect of these two differences was significant. In experienced states 1.53% of the total vote came from counted provisional ballots. In new states, provisional ballots accounted for only 0.23% of the total vote.

Those voting with provisional ballots in experienced states had their ballots counted more frequently than those in the new states. This experience effect is evidence that there is room for improvement in provisional balloting procedures, especially in those states new to the process.¹³ That conclusion gains support from the perspectives of the local election officials revealed in the survey conducted as a part of this research. Local (mostly county level) election officials from "experienced" states were more likely to:

¹¹ See the appendix for our classification of "old" and "new" states and explanation of why the total is less than 50.

¹³ Managing the provisional voting process can strain the capacity election administrators. For example, Detroit, counted 123 of the 1,350 provisional ballots cast there in 2004. A recent study concluded that Detroit's "6-day time limit to process provisional ballots was very challenging and unrealistic. To overcome this challenge, the entire department's employees were mobilized to process provisional ballots." (emphasis added.) GAO Report-05-997, "Views of Selected Local Officials on Managing Voter Registration and Ensuring Citizens Can Vote," September 2005.

FINAL DRAFT

For Review by the Standards Board and Board of Advisors

- Be prepared to direct voters to their correct precincts with maps;
- Regard provisional voting as easy to implement;
- Report that provisional voting sped up and improved polling place operations
- Conclude that the provisional voting process helped officials maintain accurate registration databases.

Officials from “new” states, on the other hand, were more likely to agree with the statement that provisional voting created unnecessary problems for election officials and poll workers.

If experience with provisional voting does turn out to be a key variable in performance, that is good news. As states gain experience with provisional ballots their management of the process could become more consistent and more effective over subsequent elections. Further information from the EAC on best practices and the need for more consistent management of the election process could sharpen the lessons learned by experience. The EAC can facilitate the exchange of experience among the states and can offer all states information on more effective administration of provisional voting.

Concluding optimistically that experience will make all the difference, however, may be unwarranted. Only if the performance of the “new” states was the result of administrative problems stemming from inexperience will improvement be automatic as election officials move along the learning curve. Two other possibilities exist. Our current understanding of how provisional voting worked in 2004 is not sufficient to determine unambiguously which view is correct.

1. “New” states may have a political culture different from “old” states. That is, underlying features of the “new” states political system may be the reason they had not adopted some form of provisional voting before HAVA. The “new” states may strike a different balance among the competing objectives of ballot access, ballot security and practical administration. They may ascribe more responsibility to the individual voter to take such actions as registering early, finding out where the right precinct is, or re-registering after changing address. They may value keeping control at the local level, rather than ceding authority to state or federal directives. The training they offer poll workers about provisional ballots may not be as frequent or effective as in other states. If the inconsistent performance in the “new” states arises out of this kind of political culture, improving effectiveness in the use of the provisional ballots -- as measured by intrastate consistency in administration--- will be harder and take longer to achieve.¹⁴
2. “Old” states may devote fewer resources to updating their registration files or databases because they consider provisional ballots as a reasonable fail safe way for voters with registration problems a way to cast a ballot. The adoption of statewide voter registration databases in compliance with HAVA therefore may reduce the variation in the use of provisional ballots among the states.

Other influences decreasing consistency among the states include:

¹⁴ Despite differing political cultures among states and the latitude HAVA provides states, the statute does, indeed impose some degree of uniformity on issues that Congress thought essential. For example, before HAVA, took effect, “no state gave the voter the right to find out the status of their ballot after the election. “ Now all offer that opportunity. See Bali and Silver, “The Impact of Politics, Race and Fiscal Strains on State Electoral Reforms after Election 2000,” manuscript, Department of Political Science, Michigan State University. Resisting HAVA’s mandates through foot-dragging lacks any legitimate foundation in law or policy.

- The more rigorous the verification requirements, the smaller the percentage of provisional ballots that were counted. Some states verified provisional ballots by comparing the voter's signature to a sample, some matched such identifying data as address, birth date, or social security number, others required voters who lacked ID at the polling place to return later with the ID to evaluate the provisional ballot, and some required provisional voters to execute an affidavit.¹⁵
 - In the 4 states that simply matched signatures, nearly 3.5% of the total turnout consisted of provisional ballots, and just under three-fourths of those ballots (73%) were counted.
 - In the 14 states that required voters to provide such additional information as address or date of birth just over 1.5% of the total turnout consisted of provisional ballots, and 55% of those ballots were counted.
 - In the 14 states that required an affidavit (attesting, for example, that the voter was legally registered and eligible to vote in the jurisdiction) just over one-half of a percent (0.6%) of turnout came from provisional ballots, and less than one-third of those (30%) were counted. (But note that HAVA requires all voters to certify that they are eligible and registered in order to cast a provisional ballot, which is functionally an affidavit. The 14 states described here used an explicit affidavit form.)
 - In the 10 states that required voters to return later with identifying documents just under 1.5% of the total turnout came from provisional ballots, and more than half (52%) of these were counted. Voters apparently found this requirement less onerous than the affidavit, even though it required a separate trip to a government office
- Voter registration databases provided information that reduced the number of provisional ballots counted.¹⁶ In states using provisional voting for the first time, states with registered-voter databases counted only 20% of the ballots that were cast. States without such databases counted more than double that rate (44%). As HAVA's requirement for adoption of statewide databases spreads across the country, this variation among states is likely to narrow. Real-time access to a continually updated, statewide list of registered voters should reduce the number of provisional ballots used and reduce the percentage counted since most of those who receive them will be less likely to be actually registered in the state.
- States that counted out-of-precinct ballots counted 56% of the provisional ballots cast. States that counted ballots cast only in the proper precinct counted an average of 42% of provisional ballots.¹⁷

¹⁵ See Table 2 in Appendix 2 for information on the verification method used in each state.

¹⁶ The Election Day Survey found that states using statewide voter registration databases reported a lower incidence of casting provisional ballots than states without voter registration databases, suggesting that better administration of voter registration rolls might be associated with fewer instances where voters would be required to cast a provisional ballot due to a problem with their voter registration.

¹⁷ The Election Day Survey concluded that : "Jurisdictions with jurisdiction-wide provisional ballot acceptance reported higher rates of provisional ballots cast, 2.09 percent of registration or 4.67 percent of ballots cast in polling places, than those with in-precinct-only acceptance, 0.72 and 1.18 percent, respectively. Predictably, those jurisdictions with more permissive jurisdiction-wide acceptance reported higher rates of counting provisional ballots, 71.50 percent, than other jurisdictions, 52.50 percent."

- In experienced states, the disparity was even more pronounced: 52% of provisional ballots cast were counted in states requiring in-district ballots, while 70% were counted in those allowing out-of-precinct ballots.
- If all states had counted out-of-precinct ballots, perhaps 290,000 more provisional ballots would have been counted across the country.¹⁸
- States that provide a longer the time to evaluate provisional ballots counted a higher proportion of those ballots.¹⁹
 - Fourteen states permitted less than one week to evaluate provisional ballots, 15 states permitted between one and two weeks, and 14 states permitted greater than two weeks²⁰.
 - Those states that permitted less than one week counted an average of 35.4% of their ballots.
 - States that permitted between one and two weeks counted 47.1%.
 - States that permitted more than 2 weeks, counted 60.8% of the provisional ballots cast²¹.
 - The effect of allowing more time for evaluation is felt most strongly in states where more than 1% of the overall turnout was of provisional ballots. In states where provisional ballots were used most heavily, those that permitted less than one week to evaluate ballots counted 58.6% while those that permitted one to two weeks counted 65.0% of ballots, and those states that permitted greater than three weeks verified the highest proportion of provisional ballots, at 73.8%.

Variation Within States

Not only was there little consistency among states in the use of provisional ballots, there was also little consistency within states. This was true in both new and old states. Of the 20 states for which we have county-level provisional ballot data, the rate of counting provisional ballots varied by as much as 90% to 100% among counties in the same state. This suggests that additional factors beyond statewide factors, such as verification requirements or the time provided for ballot evaluation, also influence the provisional voting process. Reacting to the lack of consistency within states, the Carter-Baker Commission recommended that "states, not counties or municipalities, should establish uniform procedures for the verification and counting of provisional ballots, and that procedure should be applied uniformly throughout the state."²²

Election Line reported that:

¹⁸ This estimate is a rough approximation. States that recognize out-of-precinct ballots counted, on average, 56% of the provisional votes cast. Applying that ratio to the 1.9 million provisional ballots cast nationwide would result in 1.1 million provisional ballots that would have been counted if all states accepted out-of-precinct votes. States that did not recognize out-of-precinct ballots counted 42% of the provisional ballots cast, or about 813,000 ballots, for a difference of about 290,000 votes.

¹⁹ See Appendix ___, Relationship Between Time Allotted to Verify Provisional Ballots and the Level of Ballots that are Verified, David Andersen, The Eagleton Institute of Politics

²⁰ Many thanks to Ben Shepler, of the Moritz College of Law, for assembling complete data on the time requirements states permitted for the counting of provisional ballots.

²² Recommendation 2.3.2 of the Report of the Commission on Federal Election Reform, "Building Confidence in U.S. Elections," September 2005, p.16. The report also observed that, "...different procedures for counting provisional ballots within and between states led to legal challenges and political protests. Had the margin of victory for the presidential contest been narrower, the lengthy dispute that followed the 2000 election could have been repeated."

- In Ohio some counties counted provisional ballots not cast in the assigned precinct even though the state's policy was to count only those ballots cast in the correct precinct.
- Some counties in Washington tracked down voters who would otherwise have had their provisional ballots rejected because they had failed to complete part of their registration form, gave them the chance to correct those omissions, and then counted the provisional ballot. This would probably not have come to light except for the sharp examination caused by the very close election for governor.

Resources available to administer provisional voting varied considerably among and within states. The result is that differences in demographics and resources result in different experiences with provisional voting. For example, the Election Day Survey found that:

- Jurisdictions with lower education and income tend to report more inactive voter registrations, lower turnout, and more provisional ballots cast.
- Jurisdictions with higher levels of income and education reported higher average numbers of poll workers per polling place or precinct and reported lower rates of staffing problems per precinct.
- Staffing problems appeared to be particularly acute for jurisdictions in the lowest income and education categories. Small, rural jurisdictions and large, urban jurisdictions tended to report higher rates of an inadequate number of poll workers within polling places or precincts.
- Predominantly non-Hispanic, Black jurisdictions reported a greater percentage of polling places or precincts with an inadequate number of poll workers. Predominantly non-Hispanic, Native American jurisdictions reported the second highest percentage of staffing problems.

The conclusions to be drawn from these findings are clear. In voting districts with lower education levels, poverty, and inadequately staffed polling places, the voting process is unlikely to function well. More people will end up casting provisional ballots. That makes the provisional voting process especially important in such districts. But if jurisdictions struggle with regular voting, how well are they likely to do with the more complicated provisional balloting process? In precincts where the voting process, in general, is managed poorly, provisional ballots cannot be expected to work much better. In these areas, the focus should be on broader measures to improve the overall functionality of struggling voting districts, although improving the management of provisional balloting may help at the margin.

Effectiveness of Provisional Voting

The certainty of our conclusions about the effectiveness of provisional voting is limited because of the complexity of the problem and a lack of important information. An ideal assessment of how well provisional ballots worked in 2004 would require knowing the decisions of local officials in 200,000 precincts on how to inform voters about provisional voting; their performance in providing a provisional ballot to those qualified to receive one, and their decisions whether to count a provisional ballot. Information needed about the eligibility or registration status of provisional voters is also not available.

We see no automatic correlation between the quality of a state's voting system and either the number of provisional ballots cast or counted. Low numbers could reflect accurate statewide voting data and good voter education. Or they could suggest that provisional ballots were not made easily available. High numbers could be seen as signifying an effective provisional voting system or a weak registration process. But we do know that in 2004 provisional ballots allowed 1.2 million citizens to vote, citizens who would otherwise have been turned away from the polls.

Since we do not know the total number of registered voters who might have voted but could not make a precise, quantitative estimate of the effectiveness of provisional voting impossible. The Cal Tech – MIT Voting Technology Project, however, estimated that 4 – 6 million votes were lost in the 2000 presidential election for the reasons shown in Table 1 below. The estimate is an approximation, but it may provide data good enough for a general assessment of the size of the pool of potential voters who might have been helped by the provisional ballot process.

Estimates of Votes Lost In 2000 Presidential Election

Votes Lost (Millions)	Cause
1.5 – 2	Faulty equipment and confusing ballots
1.5 – 3	Registration mix-ups
<1	Polling place operations
?	Absentee ballot administration

Table 1 Cal Tech – MIT Voting Technology Project Estimates

4 – 6 million votes are lost in presidential elections due to the causes shown in the table. Registration mix-ups (e.g., name not on list) and polling place operations (e.g., directed to wrong precinct) are the causes most likely to be remedied by provisional voting.

The table shows that the universe of voters who could be helped by provisional voting might be 2.5 – 3 million voters. In 2004, about 1.2 million provisional voters were counted. A rough estimate, then, of the effectiveness of provisional voting in 2004, then, might be 40% to 50% (ballots counted/votes lost)²³. Whatever the precise figure, it seems reasonable to conclude that there is considerable room for improvement in the administration of provisional voting.

Legislative Response

Indeed, several states²⁴ came to the conclusion that the administration of their provisional voting procedures needed to be improved and amended their statutes after the 2004 election. State legislation adopted since the election points to particular areas of concern.

²³ Another interpretation of the data should be considered. The Census Bureau's Current Population Survey (CPS) developed the category of "registration mix-ups" to assess the states' registration systems. After each election the CPS asks people if they were registered and if they voted. The CPS gives breakdowns of reasons why people did not vote. Survey responders tend to deflect blame when answering questions about voting. In the narrow context of provisional ballots, 'registration problems' would cover only voters who went to the polls where the determination that they were not registered was wrong or they were registered, but in the wrong precinct. If they were in the wrong precinct, provisional voting can help them in only 17 states. In 2004, only 6.8% of those not voting and registered blamed registration problems, while 6.9% reported so in 2000.

²⁴ Twelve states made statutory or regulatory changes: Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Louisiana, Montana, New Mexico, North Carolina, Virginia and Wyoming. See Table 4 in Appendix 2.

Not enough time to examine and count the provisional ballots. Florida, Indiana, Virginia, and Washington all have clarified or extended the timeline to evaluate the ballots. But taking more time can prove a problem, particularly in presidential elections with the looming deadline to certify the vote for the Electoral College.²⁵

Lack of uniform rules for counting ballots and effective training of the election officials in interpreting and applying those rules to determine the validity of ballots. Colorado, New Mexico, North Carolina, and Washington have all passed legislation focused on improving the efficacy and consistency of the voting and counting process.

Litigation

Successful legal challenges to the process highlight areas where provisional voting procedures were wanting. A flurry of litigation occurred around the country in October 2004 concerning the so-called “wrong precinct issue” – whether provisional ballots cast by voters in a precinct other than their designated one would be counted for statewide races. These lawsuits were largely unsuccessful in their stated goal: most courts, including the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit (the only federal appeals court to rule on the issue), rejected the contention that HAVA requires the counting of these wrong-precinct provisional ballots.

This litigation was significant nonetheless.

- First, the Sixth Circuit decision established the precedent that voters have the right to sue in federal court to remedy violations of HAVA.
- Second --and significantly-- the litigation clarified the right of voters to receive provisional ballots, even though the election officials were certain they would not be counted. The decision also defined an ancillary right --the right to be directed to the correct precinct. There voters could cast a regular ballot that would be counted. If they insisted on casting a provisional ballot in the wrong precinct, they would be on notice that it would be a symbolic gesture only.
- Third, these lawsuits prompted election officials to take better care in instructing precinct officials on how to notify voters about the need to go to the correct precinct in order to cast a countable ballot – although the litigation regrettably came too late to be truly effective in this regard. In many states, on Election Day 2004, the procedures in place for notifying voters about where to go were less than ideal, reflecting less-than-ideal procedures for training poll workers on this point.

There was also pre-election litigation over the question whether voters who had requested an absentee ballot were entitled to cast a provisional ballot. In both cases (one in Colorado and one, decided on Election Day, in Ohio), the federal courts ruled that HAVA requires that these voters receive a provisional ballot. Afterwards, it is for state officials under state law to ²⁵ The resources available to evaluate and count provisional ballots within a tight schedule may not be easily available. The General Accounting Office reports that Detroit, where 1,350 provisional ballots were cast and 123 counted, found the 6-day time frame for processing provisional ballots “very challenging and unrealistic. To overcome this challenge, the entire department’s employees were mobilized to process provisional ballots.” The report also found that in Los Angeles County, “staff had to prepare duplicate ballots to remove ineligible or invalid contests when voters cast their ballots at the wrong precinct. To overcome this challenge, staffing was increased to prepare the duplicate ballots.” In a close, contested election, “duplicate” ballots would doubtless receive long and careful scrutiny.” See Appendix 7, GAO, “Views of Selected Local Election Officials on Managing Voter Registration and Ensuring Eligible Citizens Can Vote,” September 2005. determine whether these provisional ballots will be counted, in part by determining if these provisional voters already had voted an absentee ballot (in which case one ballot should be ruled ineligible, in order to avoid double voting). These decisions confirm the basic premise that provisional ballots should be available whenever voters believe they are entitled to them, so that their preferences can be recorded, with a subsequent determination whether these preferences count as valid votes.

Because every provisional ballot counted represents a voter who, if the system had worked perfectly, should have voted by regular ballot, the advent of statewide registration databases is likely to reduce the use of provisional ballots. The one area in which such databases may not make a difference is for those who voted by provisional ballot because they did not bring required identification documents to the polling place. The statewide voter registration database will facilitate verifying that ballot, but the voter will still have voted provisionally. Beyond that exception, even with statewide registries in every state, provisional voting will remain an important failsafe, and voters should have confidence that the failsafe will operate correctly.

The wide variation in the implementation of provisional voting among and particularly within states suggests that EAC can help states strengthen their processes. Research-based recommendations for best, or at least better, practices based on the experience gained in the 2004 election can be useful in states' efforts to achieve greater consistency in the administration of provisional voting.

Recommendations for Best Practices

Recent legislative activity shows that state efforts to improve the provisional voting process are underway. Those states, as well as others that have not yet begun to correct shortcomings that became apparent in 2004, can benefit from considering the best practices described here. By recommending best practices, the EAC will offer informed advice while respecting diversity among the states. One way to strengthen the recommendations and build a constituency for them would be for EAC to ask its advisory committee members to recommend as best practices procedures that have worked in their states.

Self-evaluation of Provisional Voting –4 Key Questions

The first need to achieve greater consistency within each state is to think about provisional voting systematically. As legislators, election officials, and citizens in the states prepare for the 2006 election, they should ask themselves these questions about their provisional voting systems.

1. Does the provisional voting system distribute, collect, record, and tally provisional ballots with sufficient accuracy to be seen as procedurally legitimate by both supporters and opponents of the winning candidate? Does the tally include all votes cast by properly registered voters who correctly completed the steps required?
2. Is the provisional voting system sufficiently robust to perform well under the pressure of a close election when ballot evaluation will be under scrutiny and litigation looms?
3. Do the procedural requirements of the system permit cost-efficient operation? Are the administrative demands of the system reasonably related to the staff and other resource requirements available?

FINAL DRAFT

For Review by the Standards Board and Board of Advisors

4. How great is the variation in the use of provisional voting in counties or equivalent levels of voting jurisdiction within the state? Is the variation great enough to cause concern that the system may not be administered uniformly across the state?

If the answers to these questions leave room for doubt about the effectiveness of the system or some of its parts, the EAC's recommendation of best practices should provide the starting point for a state's effort to improve its provisional voting system.

Best Practices For Each Step In The Process

We examined each step of the provisional voting process to identify specific areas where the states should focus their attention to reduce the inconsistencies noted in our analysis. We offer recommendations in each area appropriate to the responsibilities that HAVA assigns the EAC for the proper functioning of the provisional voting process.

The Importance of Clarity

The EAC should emphasize above all else the importance of clarity in the rules governing every stage of provisional voting. As the Century Foundation's recent report observed, "Close elections increasingly may be settled in part by the evaluating and counting of provisional ballots. . . . To avoid post election disputes over provisional ballots—disputes that will diminish public confidence in the accuracy and legitimacy of the result—well in advance of the election, states should establish, announce, and publicize clear statewide standards for every aspect of the provisional ballot process, from who is entitled to receive a provisional ballot to which ones are counted."²⁶

Litigation surrounding the 2004 election resulted in decisions that, if reflected in state statutes or regulations and disseminated in effective training for poll workers, can increase the clarity of provisional ballot procedures, increase predictability, and bolster confidence in the system. By taking the following steps, states can incorporate those court rulings into their procedures.

- Promulgate, ideally by legislation, clear standards for evaluating provisional ballots, and provide training for the officials who will apply those standards. For example, in Washington State, the court determined that an election official's failure in evaluating ballots to do a complete check against all signature records is an error serious enough to warrant recanvassing.²⁷ Clear direction by regulation or statute on what records to use in evaluating ballots could have saved precious time and effort and increased the reliability of the provisional voting system.
- States should provide poll workers standard information resources for the training of poll workers by local jurisdictions. Training materials might include, for example, maps or databases with instruction on how to locate polling places for potential voters who show up at the wrong place. Usable and useful information in the hands of poll workers can protect voters from being penalized by ministerial errors at the polling place.²⁸

While rejecting the notion that all ballots cast in the wrong precinct should be counted, the court ruled that provisional votes cast in the wrong precinct should be thrown out provided that the voter had been directed to the correct precinct. This meant that provisional votes cast in the wrong precinct (and even the

- State training materials provided to local jurisdictions should make clear that the only permissible requirement to obtain a provisional ballot is an affirmation that the voter is registered in the jurisdiction and eligible to vote in an election for federal office.²⁹ Recent legislation in Arizona indicates that recommendations should emphasize HAVA's requirement that persons appearing at the polling place claiming to be registered voters cannot be denied a ballot because they do not have identification with them. Poll workers may need appropriate training to understand their duty to give such voters a provisional ballot.³⁰

A. Registration and Pre-Election Information for Voters

Providing crisp, clear information to voters before the election is important to the success of the provisional voting process. The better voters understand their rights and obligations, the easier the system will be to manage, and the more legitimate the appearance of the process. States can begin by assessing the utility and clarity of the information for voters on their websites and by considering what information might be added to sample ballots mailed to voters before elections. Best practices in this area would include:

1. If states require identification at the time of registration, the kind of IDs required should be stated precisely and clearly and be publicly and widely available in a form that all voters can understand. For example, "You must bring your driver's license. If you don't have a driver's license, then you must bring an ID card with your photograph on it and this ID card must be issued by a government agency."³¹
2. The process to re-enfranchise felons should be clear and straightforward. To avoid litigation over the registration status of felons, best practice should be defined as making re-enfranchisement automatic, or no more burdensome than the process required for any new registrant.³²
3. State or county websites for voters should offer full, clear information on boundaries of precincts, location of polling places, requirements for identification, and other necessary guidance that will facilitate registration and the casting of a regular ballot. An 800 number should also be provided. Models are available: the statewide databases in Florida and Michigan provide voters with provisional voting information, registration verification and precinct location information.

B. At the Polling Place

wrong polling place) would count if there were no evidence that the voter had been directed to a different polling place. The court placed a duty upon election officials to make sure the voters were in the correct locations. Note that this question would not arise in a state that counted ballots cast in the wrong polling place but within the correct county.

²⁹ Sandusky County Democratic Party v. Blackwell, 387 F.3d 565, 774 (6th Cir. 2004).

³¹ Websites in 29 states describe, with varying degrees of specificity, the identification voters may need. In 18 states voters can learn something about the precinct in which they should vote. And in 6 states (California, District of Columbia, Kentucky, Michigan, North Carolina, and South Carolina) they can verify their registration on the website.

Avoiding error at the polling place will allow more voters to cast a regular ballot and all others who request it to cast a provisional ballot.

1. The layout and staffing of the polling place, particularly the multi-precinct polling place is important. Greeters, maps, and prominently posted voter information about provisional ballots, ID requirements, and related topics can help the potential voters cast their ballot in the right place. States should require poll workers to be familiar with the options and provide the resources needed for them to achieve the knowledge needed to be helpful and effective. Colorado has clear regulations on polling place requirements, including HAVA information and voting demonstration display.³³ Many states require training of poll workers. In some states that requirement is recent: after the 2004 election, New Mexico adopted a requirement for poll workers to attend an "election school."³⁴ A state statutory requirement for training could facilitate uniform instruction of poll workers in those states that do not already provide it.
2. The provisional ballot should be of a design or color sufficiently different from a regular ballot to avoid confusion over counting, as occurred in Washington State. The ballot might include a tear-off leaflet with information for voters such as: "Reasons Why Your Provisional Ballot Might Not Be Counted" on one side and "What to Do if My Provisional Ballot Is Not Counted" on the other.
3. Because provisional ballots offer a fail-safe, supplies of the ballots at each polling place should be sufficient for all the potential voters likely to need them. In 2004, some polling places ran out of ballots, with unknown effects on the opportunity to vote. In Middlesex County, New Jersey, for example, on Election Day the Superior Court ordered the county clerk to assure that sufficient provisional ballots were available at several heavily used polling places, and it authorized the clerk "in the event additional provisional ballots are required . . . to photocopy official provisional ballots."³⁵ At least two states, Connecticut and Delaware, provide guidelines to local election officials on how to estimate the demand for provisional ballots. Connecticut sets the number at 1% of the voters in the district, Delaware at 6%.³⁶ States that do not offer a practical method to guide the supply of provisional ballots at polling places should consider doing so. The guideline should take into account both the number of voters in the district and the number of provisional ballots actually cast in recent elections.
4. To achieve the procedural clarity needed to forestall disputes, states should establish a clear chain of custody for the handling of provisional ballots from production through distribution, collection and, finally, evaluation. A number of states have clear procedures for at least parts of this chain of custody. All states should examine their chain-of-custody requirements for clarity. Illinois includes the potentially beneficial requirement that ballots be transported by bi-partisan teams, which offers the potential to avoid some charges of election fraud.

C. Evaluating Voter Eligibility and Counting Provisional Ballots

The clarity of criteria for evaluating voter eligibility is critical to a sound process for deciding which of the cast provisional ballots should be counted. Public recognition of the validity of those criteria is important to establishing the legitimacy of the system as a whole. The experience in 2004 in North Carolina, Washington, and Ohio underlines the importance of clear criteria. As the Century Foundation report put it, "Whatever procedures the states choose [to determine if a provisional ballot should be counted], the paramount consideration—as with all others concerning provisional voting—is that they be clear and thus not susceptible to post-election manipulation and litigation."³⁷ Nonetheless, the *Panio v. Sutherland*³⁸ decision in New York shows the difficulty of defining the range of administrative errors from which the provisional voters should be held harmless. Even when the standard is "clerical error" judges can differ over what that means exactly. Possibly a state law might be able to clarify a definition by giving examples of clerical errors, but even then the definition is unlikely to be perfect.

1. State statutes or regulations should define a reasonable period for voters who lack the HAVA-specified ID or other information bearing on their eligibility to provide it in order to facilitate the state's ability to verify that the person casting the provisional ballot is the same one who registered. While there may be a concern to ensure that the individual who returns with the ID may not be the same individual who cast the provisional ballot, the spirit of HAVA demands that the opportunity to prove identity be provided after Election Day. A signature match can go far in establishing that the individual who voted and the individual returning later with identification is, in fact, the same person. Encouraging a voter who lacks ID on Election Day to return later to help the verification process by providing proper identification will strengthen the system and increase public confidence in the electoral process. Our data indicate that some voters would prefer to return with ID rather than to sign an affidavit, perhaps because of uncertainty about the legal process involved in the affidavit. At least 11 states allow voters to provide ID or other information one to 13 days after voting. Of particular interest is Kansas, which allows voters to proffer their ID by electronic means or by mail, as well as in person.³⁹
2. More provisional ballots are counted in those states that verify ballots cast outside the correct precinct.⁴⁰ While HAVA arguably leaves this decision up to the states, pointing out the effect of the narrower definition on the portion of ballots counted could be useful to the states in deciding this question. States should be aware, however, of the additional burden placed on the ballot-evaluation process when out-of-precinct ballots are considered. And tradeoffs are involved if out-of-precinct voters are unable to vote for the local offices that might appear on the ballot in their district of residence. One option for states is to involve the voters in the decision by pointing out that voters who cast their provisional ballots in the wrong precinct may not be able to participate in the local election. The voter could then decide to go to the correct precinct or vote provisionally for the higher offices at the top of the ticket only.

3. Alternatively, if a state chooses to require voters to appear at their assigned precinct, where the same polling site serves more than one precinct, a voter's provisional ballot should count so long as the voter cast that ballot at the correct polling site even if at the wrong precinct within that location.⁴¹ Ideally the voter could be directed to the correct machine, but poll worker advice will not always be correct. One way to assess the balance of issues here is to consider that, if a voter in a multi-precinct polling place is sent to the wrong machine, the error is probably the poll worker's, and the voter should not be penalized.
4. Officials should follow a written procedure, and perhaps a checklist, to identify the reason why a provisional ballot is rejected (e.g., check the applicable box "unregistered voter"; "lack of signature match" "wrong precinct," etc.) Those forms should be disclosed publicly when completed. Colorado's election rules offer particularly clear guidance to the official evaluating a provisional ballot.⁴²

Colorado Rejection Codes (Any ballot given a rejection code shall not be counted):

RFS	(Rejection federal or state) No federal or state candidates or issues to duplicate.
RNS	(Rejection not signed) Provisional Ballot Affidavit not signed.
RIN	(Rejection incomplete information provided) Required information is incomplete and the designated election official is unable to confirm voter's eligibility.
RNR	(Rejection not registered) Voter did not register by the voter registration deadline or by emergency registration, Colorado voter registration record was not found, or voter was previously cancelled and has not been reinstated pursuant to 1-2-605(10). C.R.S.
REE	(Rejection envelope empty) Provisional ballot envelope is empty.
RAB	(Rejection voter voted absentee) Designated election official has confirmed that voter voted an absentee ballot.
REV	(Rejection based on ballot cast in early voting) Voter voted early.
RIP	(Rejection based on incorrect party) Incorrect Party in Primary Election.
RFE	(Rejection felon not eligible to vote) Individual was convicted of a felony and is either serving a sentence of confinement or detention or is on parole.
RWC	(Rejection elector not registered in county or State of Colorado) Non-county or non-state resident; therefore voter not eligible to vote in the county where the provisional ballot was voted.

registered by mail or through a voter registration drive, is tagged as id deficient, and did not provide id at the time of voting.

RRD (Rejection registration deficient) Voter had deficient or incomplete registration and required information was not provided prior to or at the time of filling in the provisional ballot envelope. Voter's eligibility cannot be established.

D. Verification of Provisional Ballots

1. States that use the information on the provisional ballot to permit voters who have changed their addresses to update their registrations should adopt clear procedures on that process and specify how the new information will be communicated between different Boards of Elections
2. In verifying provisional ballots, the time by which election officials must make their eligibility determinations is particularly important in presidential elections because of the need to certify electors to the Electoral College. States should consider in particular how to divide the time allowed them by the safe-harbor provisions that apply in presidential elections to the certification to the Electoral College. Some part of this five-week period will be consumed by the eligibility evaluation, but states should take care to provide a sufficient period of time as well for challenges. If a state consumes 21 days following the election in the eligibility evaluations, only two weeks will remain for legal challenges to be concluded. Is that sufficient? Or should the state provide the resources needed to complete the eligibility determinations in 10 days or two weeks, leaving three weeks or more for legal challenges in a close election? Our research did not identify an optimum division of the five weeks available. The prudent course here would be to encourage states to consider the issue and then make a careful decision about how to complete all steps in the evaluation of ballots and challenges to those determinations within the five weeks available.

E. Post-election Information for Voters

Timely information to voters about the disposition of their provisional ballot will provide helpful feedback and more important enable voters to determine if they are registered for future elections and, if not, what they need to do to become registered.

1. Establish mechanisms to ensure that voters casting provisional ballots are informed whether they are now registered for future elections and, if not, what they need to do to become registered.

F. State Laws Governing Litigation over Provisional Voting

1. Establish special, streamlined litigation procedures for Election Day complaints that individuals are being denied the right to cast a provisional ballot

Broader Considerations

G. Integrity and the Appearance of Integrity

1. State laws or regulations providing for non-partisan or bi-partisan bodies to make a public determination of the validity of provisional ballots would increase confidence in the system.

FINAL DRAFT

2. To improve transparency, state laws or regulations should require the purging process for registration to be public and with an opportunity for voters to correct an erroneous determination that they should be purged.
3. State laws or regulation should require the evaluation process for provisional ballots to be public, while protecting the names of those who voted provisionally.

H. Continuous Assessment of the Provisional Ballot -- Process and Performance

Defining what makes for a successful provisional voting system is difficult. The most successful system is probably not the one with the most provisional votes cast (that could indicate problems with the registration system). Nor is the system with the greatest number counted or with the fewest counted necessarily superior because the evaluation process could be flawed.

Defining quality requires a broad perspective about how well the system works, how open it is to error recognition and correction, and how well provisional voting processes are connected to the registration and voter identification regimes. The EAC should consider engaging one of the national quality organizations or processes, such as Six Sigma⁴³ or the Baldrige Quality process⁴⁴ to evaluate the provisional ballot process. Pending such a review, the EAC can recommend that states take the following actions.

1. Recognize that the first step to improving quality is to see the provisional voting process as a system and take a systems approach to regular evaluation through standardized metrics with explicit goals for performance.
2. States should begin by collecting data systematically on the provisional voting process so that they can evaluate their voting system and assess changes from one election to the next. The effort should start in the 2006 election, and the data collected should include:
 - Provisional votes cast and counted by jurisdiction, say counties, with details on why the voter had to vote provisionally (lack of ID, not on list, challenged at polling place, issued absentee ballot, etc) and number of ballots actually counted in each category.
 - Reasons why provisional ballots were not counted, using categories such as those that have been adopted by Colorado, described earlier in this report.
 - Measures of variance among jurisdictions.
 - Number of poll workers trained in administration of provisional voting by polling place
 - Number of jurisdictions posting information on provisional voting in the polling place
 - Time required to evaluate ballots by jurisdiction

⁴³ Six Sigma is a measure of quality that strives for near perfection. Six Sigma is a disciplined, data-driven approach and methodology for eliminating defects (driving towards six standard deviations between the mean and the nearest specification limit) in any process -- from manufacturing to transactional and from product to service.

⁴⁴ The Baldrige Criteria for Performance Excellence provide a systems perspective for understanding performance management. They reflect validated, leading-edge management practices against which an organization can measure itself. With their acceptance nationally and internationally as the model for performance excellence, the Criteria represent a common language for communication among organizations for sharing best practices. The Criteria are also the basis for the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award process.

Improving understanding of the provisional voting process through analysis of detailed information will enable state and local election officials to strengthen their systems. By collecting and analyzing this data states can identify which aspects of the registration and electoral system are most important in shunting voters into the provisional ballot process. Responsible officials can then look to their registration system, identification requirements or poll worker training as a way to reduce the need for voters to cast their ballots provisionally.

ATTACHMENT 1 – Data Sources for Classification of the States

Our research on provisional voting divided the various states into several categories to allow an assessment of how different factors may have influenced the process of casting and counting provisional ballots. This analysis was conducted before the release of the Election Day Study, and the categories we used may differ in some respects from its work. The variables used to analyze a state's use of provisional ballots:

1. New vs. Old (states that used a provisional ballot before the 2004 election)
2. Use of a statewide database of registered voters vs. no use of a statewide database
3. Counting out-of-precinct ballots vs. not counting out-of-precinct ballots
4. Voter identification requirements
5. Method used to verify provisional ballots
6. Levels of provisional ballots cast and counted

We first assigned states within these categories based on classifications done by Electionline.org in its studies. The Electionline data was the only published information available at the time of our research. We reviewed the Electionline data carefully, and, in select cases, updated it with new, detailed information that had become available after its publication. The changes we made are explained below.

--Idaho, Maine, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Wisconsin and Wyoming were excluded from our analysis. They have election-day registration systems, and did not need to use HAVA-compliant provisional ballots.

--North Dakota does not register voters, so it also was excluded from HAVA requirements and did not use provisional voting.

--Mississippi has not reported its provisional voting results and could not be included in our analysis, though it was compliant in 2004.

--Pennsylvania did not report its totals for the Election Day Study, but we obtained information on Pennsylvania and included it in our analysis.

New vs. Old States

We classified states as “new” or “old” based on the 2001 Electionline study of provisional voting,⁴⁵ but condensed its classifications into a single dichotomous variable, new/old with all other cases excluded. The Electionline study divided states into five categories of their use of provisional ballots in the 2000 election:

1. Use of provisional ballots (P)
2. Limited use of provisional ballots (LP)
3. Affidavit ballots (A)
4. No system in place (N)
5. Unnecessary/Not Applicable (U/NA)

We included in the list of “Old States” all states listed as using provisional ballots, limited use of provisional ballots or affidavit ballots. States in all three categories would have been familiar with key aspects of provisional voting. States that had no provisional voting system in place for the 2002 election, and were HAVA compliant in 2004, were listed as “new” states, as 2004 would have been the first year in which they would be offering the option of provisional voting. States that were listed as unnecessary or not applicable were excluded from this study, as they were exempt from the HAVA regulations in 2004 because they either allowed same-day registration or did not register voters.

Rhode Island is the only state categorized as an old state by Electionline that we moved into the list of new states. Electionline's map shows Rhode Island as a state that used provisional voting in 2000, but in the state description, it is listed as having no system in place. We learned from the Rhode Island Board of Elections that the state had previously permitted potential voters to sign an affidavit if they did not appear on a precinct's list of registered voters, but felt they were registered to vote. Based on the signed affidavit, the election official would then contact a county official to see if the voter was on a more complete registration list. If the voter's name was on the complete list, that voter was permitted to cast a regular ballot. As this process did not grant the voter a provisional ballot, but served as a different type of administrative failsafe, we concluded that Rhode Island's first use of provisional voting was in 2004 and, therefore, classified the state as "new" to the system of provisional balloting.

Statewide List of Registered Voters

The Electionline preview of the 2004 Election⁴⁶ was the starting point for compiling a list of states that had a statewide database of registered voters. That study listed 34 States that did not have their statewide database systems complete, and 16 that did, including the District of Columbia. North Dakota does not register voters, so does not need to compile such a database. Electionline's criterion for concluding that a state had a statewide list was that the state have participation from all jurisdictions in a statewide system. We added Oklahoma to the list of states with statewide databases because we found it had met the Electionline criteria by the 2004 election, albeit too late for inclusion in the Electionline survey.

Out-of-Precinct Ballots

We based our classification of states that allow the counting of ballots cast outside the correct precinct on the data in the 2004 Electionline preview of the 2004 election². States that evaluated ballots cast in a precinct where the voter was not registered were categorized as "out-of-precinct." States that invalidated such ballots were categorized as "In-precinct only."

Verification Method

We identified four different ways states assessed provisional ballots to determine if they should be counted: signature match, match voter data, signed affidavits, and bringing back identification later. We gathered information about these verification techniques by checking state websites and consulting journalistic accounts. We consulted state legislation to provide further information where needed.

Data Collection

To assemble our data for analysis, we began by using the data on provisional votes cast and counted reported by Electionline. To increase the accuracy of this data, we surveyed each state's election websites for updated data, and for reported numbers on the county level. We then sent emails to 49 (we excluded Alaska, see below) states and the District of Columbia, requesting updated data on the number of provisional votes cast and counted by county. We received information from 25 states by our cut-off date of August 25, 2005.

Received Updated Data	Did Not Receive Updated Data
California	Alabama
District of Columbia	Alaska ⁴⁸
Florida	Arizona
Hawaii	Arkansas

⁴⁸ Alaska was not contacted via email, as the state does not have voting districts comparable to counties in other states and could not be matched with comparable census data.

⁴⁹ Maryland reported provisional ballots that were counted per county, but not number cast.

⁵⁰ Nebraska reported an incomplete list of provisional ballots cast and counted by county, but designated counties by number, rather than by name.

Data Differences

The data used in this study differ from the data reported in the Election Day Study for 19 states. The Election Day Study was not completed until well after our statistical analysis of provisional voting was finished. Where there are differences, they are typically very small, usually fewer than 100 votes either cast or counted. Of the 9 states that have differences of more than 100 votes cast or counted, 7 have reported their numbers directly to us and can be considered updated data that EDS had not obtained. For one of those states, New Mexico, EDS had incomplete data, and for another, Pennsylvania, EDS had no data at all. The data that we have collected reflects updated numbers from the states that have changed following recounts and litigation that altered how ballots were evaluated.

Tom-

As was just discussed, the EAC's Commissioners have elected to delay a presentation of Eagleton's report on Voter Identification to the EAC Board of Advisors and Standards Board, at this time.

The Commissioners will spend time over the next several weeks reviewing and considering this report in great detail and will make a determination, shortly thereafter, regarding how they wish to proceed with the issuance of an EAC report on this study.

Many thanks to you and your staff for the work that has been done. We look forward to next week's presentation of the Eagleton/Moritz study of provisional voting.

Questions/Issues: (Sorry they're a little late)

There have been concerns about both machine failure and pollworker training in the recent primary in Chicago-- what is the EAC doing to focus on these concerns, and how do you believe local election officials are meeting the challenge, and what can ordinary citizens do to assist the process.

What can voters do best to protect their right to vote on election day? What should they bring with them and what information should they know?

(There is, of course the voter identification issues that have been debated on the country with conservatives largely concerned about voting fraud, and liberals largely concerned about voter access. Can you comment on this debate?)

I've heard about a new requirement for provisional voting? What does this mean, and if I'm a voter, and told I can't vote, how do I cast a provisional vote?

You recently authored a New York Times opinion piece (along with Fair Vote President John Anderson) recommending that all high school graduates be registered to vote (to be effective on their 18th birthday). What do you think can be done with that recommendation in the states, and why did you come to that opinion.

You were recently in Ohio to observe the federal primary. Do you see different issues in different states, or are the problems based on the technology used or procedures promulgated?

I don't know if you had heard about this but in NCSL's annual conference, they're having a piece on Voter ID and fraud issues. I don't know who's on that panel, but I thought I would let you know, since so much of that work is being done through the state legislatures. Hope all is well, and thanks for the updates....

Supremes Rule on Re-Redistricting of Texas

10:15 am - 11:30 am

Three years after the highly publicized redrawing of Texas congressional districts, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in June on whether the Legislature acted unconstitutionally. How will the decision alter the redistricting process? What subtle, but critical, lines were buried in the text of the opinions?

Legislative Competition and the role of Gerrymandering?

11:30 am - 12:45 pm

Are legislative elections really less competitive today than in the past? Is gerrymandering the culprit or one of many reasons. New research helps put the redistricting factor in perspective.

Are Voters Who they Say they Are?

1:00 pm - 2:00 pm

Many states continue to look at the issue of voter ID and struggle with balancing the need for maximum access to the polls with trying to eliminate any possible fraud. How big is this problem and what are states doing about it?

Will Fall Elections Run like Clockwork?

2:00 pm - 3:00 pm

Since the controversial 2000 election debacle, most states have implemented key election reforms to shore up the system and respond to federal legislation. Will this fall's 2006 election go off without a hitch or will new problems emerge in the voting process?

What's Next in Redistricting Technology

Subject State election fraud statute collection?

Dear Craig:

Hope is well with you. Hoping that you can help us out with a quick request from a member of congressional committee. They would like to know if there exists a list (compendium or index) of state election laws on crime and fraud specifically. They are trying to get access to such a list as soon as possible, for a Congressional hearing on Thursday. If no list exists to your knowledge, that's great. If it does exist, and we can get access to it, please let me know.

Thanks so much, Craig. I hope all is well.

PROVIDING EAC ASSISTANCE IN DEVELOPING VOLUNTARY GUIDANCE ON PROVISIONAL VOTING AND VOTER IDENTIFICATION PROCEDURES

0.0 Contract Title: Assistance to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission in the Development of Guidance on Provisional Voting and Voter Identification Procedures

1.0 Background: Sec. 302(a) of HAVA requires that all States allow the casting of provisional ballots in instances where a voter declares their eligibility to vote but their name does not appear on the official list of eligible voters, or an election official asserts that a voter is not eligible to vote. This section describes several requirements for implementation of provisional voting, but the States have considerable latitude in specifying how to carry out these requirements. The EAC seeks to examine how provisional voting was implemented in the 2004 general election and to prepare guidance for the States on this topic for the 2006 Federal elections.

HAVA Sec. 303(b) mandates that first time voters who register by mail are required to show proof of identity before being allowed to cast a ballot. The law prescribes certain requirements concerning this section, but also leaves considerable discretion to the States for its implementation. The EAC seeks to examine how these voter identification requirements were implemented in the 2004 general election and to prepare guidance for the States on this topic for the 2006 elections.

One of the remedies for a voter not having an acceptable proof of identity is to allow the voter to cast a provisional ballot, either at the polling place or by mail. This linkage between these two HAVA sections provides a rationale for conducting research on these topics in parallel. However, it is anticipated that two separate guidance documents will result.

2.0 Objective: The objective of this contract is for EAC to obtain assistance with the collection, analysis and interpretation of information regarding HAVA provisional voting and voter identification requirements for the purpose of drafting guidance on these topics for promulgation to the States in time for implementation for the 2006 Federal elections. The anticipated outcome of this activity is the generation of concrete policy recommendations to be issued as voluntary guidance for States.

3.0 Scope: In general the Contractor shall be responsible for all research and analysis activities, including the conduct of public hearings for fact finding and public comment purposes. However, in light of the urgent need to get this work underway, the EAC has scheduled a public hearing on February 23, 2005, on the topic of provisional voting.

An initial framework for provisional voting policy has been set by the court decisions rendered on the election procedures utilized in the 2004 election. The 6th Circuit decision, in particular, has drawn some boundaries which must be given due regard in the course of considering future policy alternatives for provisional voting.

Notice of public meetings and hearings is required to be published in the Federal Register. The Contractor shall be responsible for preparing the notice documents, and the EAC will submit the notices and cover the cost of publication. In addition, draft guidance documents must be published in the Federal Register to obtain public comment prior to their adoption. Again, the Contractor will work with the EAC to prepare the draft documents for publication, which the EAC will submit and cover the cost of publication. Comments received will be provided to the Contractor for analysis and incorporation into the final guidance documents, as appropriate.

4.0 Specific Tasks

For ease of reference, following task 4.3 the remaining tasks are listed separately under the headings of Provisional Voting and Voter Identification Requirements. It is understood that the work on these two topics will be conducted essentially concurrently, with Voter Identification activities starting approximately one month after Provisional Voting.

- 4.1 Prepare a project work plan. The Contractor shall prepare and deliver a brief Project Plan not later than 10 days after contract award. This plan shall describe how the Contractor will accomplish each of the project tasks, including a timeline indicating major milestones. A single document will be prepared to include both provisional voting and voter identification tasks. The Plan shall be presented at a project kickoff meeting with the EAC Project Manager.
- 4.2 Submit monthly progress reports. The Contractor shall submit a monthly progress report within 2 weeks of the end of each month. This report shall provide a brief summary of activities performed and indicate progress against the timeline provided in the Project Plan. Any issues that could adversely affect schedule should be identified for resolution. Budget status should also be provided.
- 4.3 Conduct periodic briefings for the EAC. The Contractor shall periodically meet with the EAC Project Manager and the lead Commissioner for this work to discuss research findings and progress. The Project Plan should make allowance for this activity. The number and frequency of briefings will be determined by the Contractor Project Manager and the EAC Project Manager as the work progresses. The Contractor may also be required to periodically brief the full Commission on their work.

Provisional Voting

- 4.4 Collect and analyze State legislation, administrative procedures, and court cases. An understanding of the disparities and similarities of how provisional voting was implemented around the country will provide a baseline for the consideration of future approaches. Seventeen States never had provisional voting before HAVA was enacted, while many other States did. A State-by-State compendium of the legislation, procedures, and litigation reviewed shall be delivered along with the analysis results.

- 4.5 Recommend alternative approaches for future implementation of provisional voting. The Contractor shall conduct a literature review to identify other research results and data available on this topic. The EAC Election Day Survey, for example, contained several questions on provisional voting. The EAC will make these survey data available to the Contractor. Based on their analysis of available research and the results of Task 4.5, the Contractor shall diagnose the problems and challenges of provisional voting implementation and hypothesize alternative approaches.

The Contractor shall assess the efficacy of these alternatives in relation to the following inter-related policy objectives: (1) enabling the maximum number of eligible voters to cast ballots that will be counted; (2) providing procedural simplicity for voters, poll workers, and election officials; (3) minimizing opportunity for voter fraud; and (4) maintaining a reasonable workload for election officials and poll workers. Additional policy considerations may be identified in the course of this research effort. The Contractor shall document and brief these alternatives to the Commission.

- 4.6 Prepare preliminary draft guidance document. Based on the feedback received from the Commission, the Contractor shall prepare a draft guidance document for review and comment by the EAC Board of Advisors. EAC will convene a Board of Advisors meeting or teleconference for the discussion of this document. The Contractor shall provide the document in advance and participate in the Board meeting to answer questions and record comments.
- 4.7 Revise draft guidance for publication in the Federal Register. The Contractor shall revise the guidance document as appropriate to reflect the comments of the EAC and the Board of Advisors and provide the draft guidance for publication in the Federal Register by the EAC.
- 4.8 Arrange one public hearing for receiving public comment on draft guidance. This hearing should be scheduled 30 days after the initial publication date. The Contractor shall select the location in consultation with the EAC. No speakers will be required. EAC will handle publicity for the meeting
- 4.9 Prepare final guidance document for EAC adoption. Review all comments received in response to Federal Register publication and at public hearing and revise guidance document as appropriate. Provide final version to EAC for adoption.

Voter Identification Requirements

- 4.10 Collect and analyze State legislation, administrative procedures, and court cases. It is assumed that the collection of information for analysis of voter identification requirements will be performed concurrently with the research for Task 4.5. An understanding of the disparities and similarities of how voter identification requirements were implemented around the country will provide a baseline for the consideration of future approaches. A State-by-State compendium of the legislation, procedures, and litigation reviewed shall be delivered along with the analysis results.
- 4.11 Convene a half day public hearing on the topic of voter identification requirements. The Contractor shall be responsible for all aspects of planning and conducting this hearing in consultation with the EAC. The Contractor shall identify three panels of three to four speakers each. The Contractor shall arrange for speaker attendance to include travel and per diem expenses. The EAC will provide publicity for the hearing. The Contractor shall prepare a document summarizing the proceedings and containing all testimony provided.
- 4.12 Recommend alternative approaches for future implementation of HAVA voter identification requirements. The Contractor shall conduct a literature review to identify other research results and data available on this topic. Based on their analysis of available research and the results of Task 5.11, the Contractor shall diagnose the problems and challenges of voter identification and hypothesize alternative approaches. The Contractor shall coordinate with the EAC to identify appropriate policy objectives by which to assess these alternatives. The Contractor shall document and brief these alternatives to the Commission.
- 4.13 Prepare preliminary draft guidance document. Based on the feedback received from the Commission, the Contractor shall prepare a draft guidance document for review and comment by the EAC Board of Advisors. EAC will convene a Board meeting or teleconference for the discussion of this document. The Contractor shall provide the document in advance and participate in the Board meeting to answer questions and record comments.
- 4.14 Revise draft guidance for publication in the Federal Register. The Contractor shall revise the guidance document as appropriate to reflect the comments of the EAC and the Board of Advisors and provide the draft guidance for publication in the Federal Register by the EAC.
- 4.15 Arrange one public hearing for receiving public comment on the draft guidance. This hearing should be scheduled 30 days after the initial publication date. The Contractor shall select the location in consultation with the EAC. No speakers will be required. EAC will handle publicity for the hearing.
- 4.16 Prepare final guidance document for EAC adoption. Review all comments received in response to Federal Register publication and at public hearing and revise guidance document as appropriate. Provide final version to EAC for adoption.

Contract Type. The contract type will be Time and Materials with a ceiling of 6.0 Place of performance. The principal place of performance will be the Contractor's place of business. Meetings and occasional work efforts may be performed at the EAC offices.

7.0 Period of Performance. The period of performance is from date of award until October 28, 2005.

Tom-

Had a very good review and discussion of the PRG at this morning's Commissioner meeting.

Also, the Commissioners have marked their calendars for a conference call with the Eagleton/Moritz team on July 12 at 9:30 AM.

Several concerns were raised about the composition of the PRG and, after some discussion, I indicated that Eagleton will provide the EAC with a revised participant list, and with a more detailed description of the PRG's mission, goals, objectives, workplan and timelines for accomplishing its work.

The Vice Chair is concerned that there is not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG. I would suggest the team do more research to identify well-recognized conservative academics to put on the Group.

Further, the Commissioners recommend a tiered process in which the PRG will prepare a "dispassionate" analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions. This analysis and these conclusions will then be vetted with a defined/select group of local election officials, and then, with a defined/select group of advocacy organizations.

It was also suggested that a final round of focus group meetings be held with a cross-section of these election officials, advocates and academics for an overall interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Hope this helps clarify concerns; I look forward to sharing your revisions to the PRG with them.

INTRODUCTION

This report describes our progress from the start of the project on May 26 through June 30, 2005. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks; progress made; challenges encountered or anticipated; milestones reached; and projections for work to be completed in the coming month.

The objective of the contract is to assist the EAC in the collection, analysis and interpretation of information regarding HAVA provisional voting and voter identification requirements on which to base policy recommendations as guidance for the states in the conduct of the 2006 elections. The work has begun well, thanks to the clarity of the EAC's expectations and the strong collaboration by the scholars and staff at the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, and the Moritz College of Law at the Ohio State University.

The document report is divided into 4 sections that cover: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, Project Management, and the Financial Report. Each section references the specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract.

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Tasks 3.4 – 3.9 in our contract relate to provisional voting. Work on the first of these must be complete before proceeding to later tasks. The work plan provides for two months to complete Task 3.4. Work on this task is on schedule.

Task 3.4: Collect and analyze state legislation, administrative procedures, and court cases. Understand the disparities and similarities of how provisional voting was implemented around the country.

LEGISLATION, REGULATIONS, AND LITIGATION

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation. When complete, this information will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task. It also will provide a base of understanding for the analysis of states' actual experience with provisional voting in 2004, for which the Eagleton team has lead responsibility.

Description: The Moritz team includes faculty, an executive administrator, a reference librarian, and several research assistants. It began immediately to compile statutes, case law and administrative procedures regarding Provisional Voting. The team has created a 50 state chart to summarize information on provisional voting. Categories for which state statutes and administrative procedures are being reviewed include:

- When did the state create a system compliant with the HAVA provisional ballot requirements?
- Who may be eligible to cast a provisional ballot? and
- What is the process for discovering whether your provisional ballot was counted in the election?

Progress: Initial research for 27 states, including the collection of provisional voting statutes is complete. This phase of the work is on schedule for completion by August 1. By the beginning of the week of July 11, Moritz's full time research assistant will move from voter identification research to gathering and organizing case law on provisional voting.

Challenges: Identifying the relevant statutes has been challenging; states use different terminology to codify provisional voting issues. Many states have scattered election law provisions throughout their codes. This variation from state to state makes creating a snapshot view across states a challenge. The team is meeting this challenge, and the work is on schedule.

PREPARATION FOR AND EXPERIENCE WITH PROVISIONAL VOTING

The Eagleton team is constructing a narrative description for each state of the 50 states and the District of Columbia. It is also surveying a stratified random sample of county election officials to improve its understanding of actual practice in administering provisional voting.

Description: To construct the narratives, a researcher is examining newspaper accounts, state websites, and reports from third-party organizations to determine what information is publicly available about these issues during the 2004 election. To organize the information derived from this examination, we are creating an information system that will make it possible to catalog the basic information about the states (i.e. whether a state was new to provisional voting, the percentage of provisional votes counted, the method of notifying voters if their vote was counted, etc.) and combine it with Moritz's collection and analysis of statutes, regulations and litigation. The information system will make it possible to provide answers to such topics of particular interest listed in the contract as: "How did preparation for provisional voting vary between states that had some form of provisional voting and those that did not?" and "How did litigation affect implementation?"

Progress: The researcher in this area has identified sources of information for every state and the collection process is well underway. Verified database entries for 24 states are complete, as are two state narrative summaries. This phase of the research is on schedule for completion by the end of July.

Challenges: A key challenge is determining just what states actually did in practice to verify and count provisional ballots. A second challenge has been determining the variations in policy within individual states. We are still wrestling with resolving this challenge, but the work is on schedule.

Work Plan: By the end of the July, the compilation of statutes, administrative regulations, and litigation will be complete and ready to be combined with the state-by-state narrative compiled by Eagleton. That will form the basis for the analysis and recommendation of alternative approaches for provisional voting required under Task 3.5.

SURVEY OF COUNTY ELECTION OFFICIALS

This survey will help the research team understand more about such key topics of interest as:

- "How did the experience of provisional voting vary between states that previously had some form of provisional voting and those where provisional voting was new in 2004?"
- "Did state and local processes provide for consistent counting of provisional ballots?"
- "Did local officials have a clear understanding of how to implement provisional voting?"

The survey results will supplement the information on these topics from the compilation of statutes, regulations and cases and from the narrative we are constructing for each state.

Description: The Center for Public Interest Polling (CPIP) at Eagleton is conducting a national survey of county election officials to measure several aspects of provisional voting. The survey is designed to determine the following factors related to provisional voting at the county level:

- The content and quality of instructions provided to county officials by the states
- The steps taken by county officials to pass information on to poll workers;
- Differences in experience between states new to provisional voting and those that had some form of provisional ballot before HAVA; and
- Recommendations to improve and/or reduce the need for provisional voting

Progress: The survey instrument is complete. CPIP has compiled a list of election officials at the county level and at the municipal or regional level for states that do not assign the election responsibility to counties. It was forwarded to the call center, Schulman, Ronca & Bucuvalas Inc., (SRBI) the week of July 5, 2005. A sample will be drawn the week of July 12. Human Subjects Approval from Rutgers University was granted July 12. Pre-notification letters will be sent to election officials around July 12-13, 2005. The EAC has reviewed a draft of this letter, which we have now revised to make clear that the survey will increase our understanding of the provisional voting process, but is not being conducted on behalf of the EAC.

Challenges: We made special efforts to expedite Human Subject Approval to meet the schedule in the work plan. In the absence of an existing, reliable database of local election officials, we had to create one especially for this project. In order to provide a valid comparison between the states new to provisional voting with those that previously had some form of provisional ballot we doubled the sample size from 200 to 400. This increase will require an increase in the budget for the survey from $15,000 to about $24,000. We intend to reallocate costs within the existing budget to make this improvement possible, and will submit a letter describing the reallocation to the EAC in mid-July.

The sample has been, and will continue to represent the biggest challenge in this survey. Compiling the sample required substantial coordination and research to determine the accuracy of the identity and contact information for potential respondents. The difficulty in determining the appropriate contact is attributed to variation in county election officials' titles, jurisdiction types, and state and county election structures across the country. In addition to the potential pitfalls of reaching the appropriate county official, another factor in actually making contact with this special population will be dependent upon the hours that they keep, and may be hindered by the summer season.

Work Plan: This questionnaire will be pre-tested by July 15, and will field July 18 through August 5, 2005. This is somewhat later than projected in the revised work plan, but the information will arrive in time to be considered in drafting the analysis and alternatives document required under Task 3.5.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

The contract lists 7 tasks (3.10 – 3.16) related to Voter Identification Requirements. During the reporting period, we have made substantial progress in the first two tasks, which constitute the information-gathering phase of the work on Voter ID. The research of Voter ID requirements is proceeding concurrently with our work on the experience of provisional voting.

Task 3.10: Legislation, regulations, and litigation

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation. When complete, this information will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task.

Description: A team of Election Law@Moritz faculty, executive administrator, a reference librarian, and several research assistants is compiling statutes on Voter Identification, and providing a summarized analysis of this research.

Progress: The Moritz team has created a 50-state chart to record data on voter identification. Categories for which state statutes and administrative regulations are being reviewed include: “Who is required to present ID”, “Types of ID required”, and “Consequences of having no ID”. We have completed the initial research for 45 states and have collected the voter identification statutes for those states. An Election Law@Moritz Fellow is conducting an academic literature review on voter identification. This literature review will help shape the analytical framework that will guide us when the compendium of statutes and administrative regulations is complete.

Challenges: Identifying the relevant statutes has been challenging because of the different terminology used from state to state to codify voter identification issues, and because many states have scattered election law provisions throughout their codes. This variety from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Projections: At the current rate, a draft of the voter identification chart should be complete on schedule, by the end of July. Work on the literature review will continue into August, but will be available to inform the analysis of alternative approaches for voter identification called for by Task 3.12 of the contract.

SUPPLEMENTS TO LEGAL ANALYSIS

To supplement the legal analysis, the Eagleton team is undertaking two research efforts: First, compiling information on the debate over voter in the states; and second, estimating the effect on turnout of voter id requirements. Tracking the continuing political debate over voter identification reveals that the relatively narrow HAVA requirements for voter identification have apparently sparked in many states a broader concern with more rigorous identification requirements for all voters. We are following these developments both to monitor possible secondary effects of HAVA on voter ID, and to provide a rich collection of alternative approaches for consideration.

Individual narratives for the states with significant activity in voter ID will provide a resource for understanding the wide range of experience in the 2004 election. The narratives will include an appraisal of the prevalence and nature of vote fraud, a focus of the concern with increasing the rigor of voter ID requirements. This work is on schedule to be completed by the end of July. The next key milestones will be the completion of the state database and drafting the first narratives.

VOTER ID AND TURNOUT ANALYSIS

The second supplemental analysis will provide objective information on a contentious feature of the debate over voter ID in the states: the effects of more rigorous voter ID regimes on voter turnout and the relationship between the voter ID regime and vote fraud. As part of this effort, Eagleton is undertaking a statistical analysis to gauge the effect of a state's voter ID regime on turnout, especially turnout by minority and elderly voters.

Description: We are creating a database and gathering statistics on the effects of state-level voter identification requirements on voter turnout at the county-level in the 2004 election. Analysis on the county-level will enable us to estimate the influence of ID requirements on various age groups, races, ethnicities and gender groups. We are compiling data from both the 2000 and 2004 Presidential elections to measure the effect that changes in ID requirements may have had on voter turnout through two national election cycles.

Progress: The structure of the database is complete. It contains demographic information from the Census, and turnout data from various sources. The researcher assigned to this task is devising the syntax that will be required to run the statistics when the dataset is complete. The methodology for this part of the study is complete, and the actual data collection will soon be finished.

Projection: We are waiting for the Census Bureau to release the 2004 County Demographic Estimates. We have ordered and await the arrival of 2 datasets that contain voter turnout and voter registration numbers on the county-level for both the 2000 and 2004 elections. Once these two sources of information are received, the researcher will insert this information into the existing database, clean up the dataset, and begin to run the statistics. By that point, the researcher will have separated the states into various ID-requirement groupings that have been determined by the team, which will require coordination with several other parts of the study. This work is on schedule. By the end of July, the researcher should have county-level and state-level statistics on the impact of each ID system upon turnout, analyzed through various demographic features on the county-level.

Task 3.11 Public meeting on Voter Identification Requirements

Description: We are working closely with EAC staff, particularly the General Counsel, to plan a half day public meeting on Voter ID requirements. Presentations at the meeting will form an important part of the information we are compiling about Voter ID requirements and the strengths and shortcomings of a range of alternative approaches.

Progress: We have recommended a focus on the debate over Voter ID now underway in the states. To provide a vivid picture of the debate, we have recommended that one panel include legislators on opposite sides of the issue from two different states. Our research identified Mississippi and Wisconsin as two states to focus on, and we have recommended specific legislators from each. We have discussed with staff adding a researcher to the panel to put the debate in Wisconsin and Mississippi in either a national or historic context. We also recommended two researchers from contrasting points of view, to address the effects of Voter ID provisions under HAVA and broader provisions that are now the subject of national debate. EAC staff recommended a panel of two state election directors to address the interaction of Voter ID with HAVA. We are awaiting a decision on our recommendations from EAC staff. We have no reason not to believe that the work is on schedule to be completed in time to organize a productive meeting on July 28.

Challenges: The date and location of this hearing has been changed twice since the beginning of the project. It was originally scheduled to take place in late June, but was rescheduled for July to allow the June hearing to focus on voting machine technology. The regular meeting was rescheduled for July 26 in Minneapolis, and was recently changed to July 28 in Pasadena. The changes in the scheduling of the July meeting have complicated our choice of panelists. More seriously, the changes mean that information from the hearing will not be available as early in the research process as contemplated in the contract. This timeframe will now require the team to summarize the hearing events at the same time that we are drafting the analysis and alternatives paper in early August.

Additionally, while our contract states that the "Contractor shall be responsible for all aspects of planning and conducting this hearing in consultation with the EAC," we have been asked only to make recommendations of topics and panelists, and the arrangements for the organization of the hearing are in other hands. This lack of clarity has caused some confusion and has delayed invitations to panelists. Thanks to frequent communication with members of the EAC, the process now seems to be working smoothly.

Projection: We believe the work is on schedule for completion in time to recruit the panelists for the July 28 hearing. Preparation of the hearing summary will likely be delayed because of the need to complete the analysis and alternatives paper.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

Immediately after announcement of the award of the contract, Eagleton and Moritz began supplementing the core group that had prepared to proposal to building a highly qualified team to undertake the work. That team was in place by mid June, just a few weeks after the contract award.

As described in the proposal, the direction of the project is the responsibility of a five-person committee of faculty and staff from Eagleton and Moritz, chaired by Dr. Ruth Mandel, Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics. Project Director Thomas O'Neill, a consultant to Eagleton, reports to this team and provides day-to-day guidance and coordination for the research. A weekly meeting of all the researchers engaged in the project if the primary means of coordinating the work. We have recently added an internal website to facilitate the review and revision of written materials.

Task 3.1 Update the Work Plan

The first task was completed on time with the submission of a detailed work plan and timeline. EAC staff requested that the work plan be supplemented with a Gantt chart created on MS Project, and we submitted that a few days later.

PEER REVIEW GROUP

Description: A feature of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group (PRG). The EAC indicated at our first meeting in May that it would review our recommendations for members of the PRG. Our initial vision of the PRG was a small group of scholars and representatives of advocacy organizations that would comment on the research design, review drafts of our analyses and reports, and, in general, identify areas of the research that should be strengthened and help us improve the breadth, depth and clarity of reports based on that research.

Progress: Upon reflection, the project team agreed that the PRG should not include representatives of advocacy groups. We concluded, as representatives they would feel obligated to act as advocates for positions already taken by their groups. While advocacy organizations should be consulted as stakeholders during the course of our work, they were unlikely to achieve the goals we had in mind for the PRG as a source of advice on research design, methodology, and analysis. We submitted a revised list of potential members, substantially comprised of academics, to EAC for review.

The EAC responded with suggestions concerning both the balance of the PRG's membership and the creation of additional committees to review our work. We answered with an analysis of the cost and time involved adopting the EAC's suggestions as well as with suggestions for a balanced selection of academics for the Peer Review Group. We have not received response on this correspondence from the EAC, and the recruitment of the group is on hold.

Challenges: Communications on this issue with the EAC have not been clear or timely. The PRG should be in place now to comment on our research design while there is still time to refine it. While we are confident in the quality of our work, the wisdom and perspective of the outstanding candidates we have proposed for membership would strengthen the analysis and reports of our work.

Projections: We have effectively brought these challenges to the attention of EAC staff and look forward to a resolution speedy enough to allow recruitment of the PRG's members before the end of the month. If we meet that goal, the work of the PRG will be about 2 weeks behind the milestones indicated in the work plan.

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and a website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law will be merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding provisional voting and voter identification.

Progress: The Moritz team has provided Eagleton staff with samples of the work that they are performing. An Eagleton staff member will be reviewing the content and formats of data from all supporting research and (re-)formatting once the work has been completed. The researchers and staff at Eagleton have created a shared folder on the Institute's server for the safe storage of work and access for those staff members. All of this work is being reviewed by the project team to ensure that a broad survey is being performed.

Challenges: There are no evident challenges to this task at this time.

Projections: By the end of July 2005, much of the above referenced research will have been completed with respective materials and charts near completion. At that time, staff at Eagleton will review, combine and format all documents and materials in preparation for our final reporting to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: A trial Intranet for the project became available during the week of June 26. The Intranet will facilitate the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

Progress: After meetings with staff members of Rutgers University Computer Services (RUCS) and subsequent submission of a proposal by RUCS for technical support and hosting of the Intranet and the evaluation of alternative commercial services, the project team decided at its June 28th meeting to publish the Intranet through www.intranets.com.

one of the leading commercial services. This decision was based on lower costs and earlier publication schedules than offered under the RUCS proposal. The Intranet services were evaluated during a free trial period, which demonstrated the ease of design and navigation of the proposed service.

Challenges: There are no immediate challenges to completion of this task by the timeframe specified below.

Projections: Design, testing and publication of initial content of the Intranet service is continuing, with all participants expected to be provided access by July 8, 2005.

FINANCIAL REPORT

The financial reporting for this project is supervised and prepared by the Division of Grant and Contract Accounting (DGCA) at Rutgers. Financial reporting on grant accounts is limited to actual expenses that have been incurred during the reporting period. Given that the report reflects the first month of the project, several procedures for payment of subcontractors on the project were initiated. Expenses related to those members of the team are not reflected in this report because they have not yet been incurred.

Our contact at DGCA is: Constance Bornheimer, (732) 932-0165, EXT. 2235.

A detail of expenses incurred from project inception through June 30, 2005, is attached.

Job-

I write to see if you might be available to come to Washington on Monday, August 1 to meet with several EAC staff and Commissioners to discuss the voter fraud/voter intimidation project and your possible work as a consultant on the project.

I'd like to schedule this 1-2 hour meeting for sometime between 1 and 3 in the afternoon.

Might you be available to come to Washington for this ?

Tom-

I will be in touch shortly with possible dates in very late August or early September, when EAC staff might be available to meet with Eagleton to discuss the project's research results and next steps.

In the meantime, I thought it was important to follow up on the issues Vice Chair DeGregorio raised while we were in Pasadena.

To be certain that I have the latest information, could you send to me the final list of the Eagleton/Moritz Peer Review Group and the list of organizations that Eagleton will be contacting for input?

INTRODUCTION

This report describes our progress from July 1 through July 31, 2005. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks; progress made; challenges encountered or anticipated; milestones reached; and projections for work to be completed in the coming month.

The effort this month continued to focus on research for the analysis and alternatives paper, including the compilation of Provisional Voting statutes, regulations, and litigation from the 50 states. We also prepared and delivered testimony at the EAC's regular monthly meeting in Pasadena on July 28.

The data collection, analysis, and compilation are all on schedule. Because of delays in agreeing on the composition of the Peer Review Group with EAC, however, the actual completion and submission of the analysis and alternatives paper to the EAC will most likely be delayed about a week beyond the target date in the work plan. We are scheduled to discuss the draft paper and guidance document prior to submission, with the EAC on September 6, and the final draft cannot be completed until several days after that date.

The document report is divided into 4 sections that cover: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, Project Management, and the Financial Report. Each section references the specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract.

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Tasks 3.4 – 3.9 in our contract relate to provisional voting. Work on the first of these must be complete before proceeding to later tasks. Task 3.4 was completed this month.

Task 3.4: Collect and analyze state legislation, administrative procedures, and court cases. Understand the disparities and similarities of how provisional voting was implemented around the country.

LEGISLATION, REGULATIONS, AND LITIGATION

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation. This information constitutes the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task. It also will provide a base of understanding for the analysis of states' actual experience with provisional voting in 2004, for which the Eagleton team has lead responsibility.

Description: The Moritz team has created a 50-state chart to summarize information on provisional voting, compiled statutes, case law and administrative procedures regarding Provisional Voting.

Progress: The 50-state (plus District of Columbia) chart created to collect data on provisional voting is complete. We have collected the statutes for all states. State by state summaries of provisional voting have been written for 47 states and D.C. A memorandum summarizing provisional voting litigation is complete. The collection of the documents associated with the litigation is nearing completion.

Challenges: The variety in the form of provisional voting legislation from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: The remaining 3 state summaries of provisional voting will be completed by August 8. Analysis of all the information, data, and survey results concerning provisional voting data will be performed in August.

PREPARATION FOR AND EXPERIENCE WITH PROVISIONAL VOTING

The Eagleton team has researched and compiled a narrative of each state's experience with provisional voting in 2004. At the end of July the survey of 400 local election officials was nearing its end, and – as of this writing – is now complete with an analysis and report in draft form. We will rely on the survey results to improve our understanding of actual practice in administering provisional voting, including the steps local officials took to prepare for the election.

PROVISIONAL VOTING NARRATIVES

Description: To construct the narratives, a researcher examined newspaper accounts, state websites, and reports from third-party organizations to gather information on the experience with provisional voting in the 2004 election. To organize the information derived from this examination, we created an information system that catalogues information about the states (i.e. whether a state was new to provisional voting, the percentage of provisional votes counted, the method of notifying voters if their vote was counted, etc.) and combined it with Moritz's collection and analysis of statutes, regulations and litigation.

Progress: The state-by-state database is complete, as is a first draft of all state narratives. This work has been shared with the larger team and is being reviewed currently in preparation for constructing analysis and recommendation of alternative approaches for provisional voting required under Task 3.5.

Work Plan: In the next month, revisions of the narratives will be complete. In addition to this research, we will expand upon vote fraud research and examine further the relationship between instances of vote fraud and ensuing election reforms.

SURVEY OF COUNTY ELECTION OFFICIALS

Description: The Center for Public Interest Polling (CPIP) at Eagleton conducted a national survey of county election officials to measure several aspects of provisional voting. The survey was designed to determine the following factors related to provisional voting at the county (or equivalent election jurisdiction) level:

- The content and quality of instructions provided to county officials by the states;
- The steps taken by county officials to pass information on to poll workers;
- Differences in experience between states new to provisional voting and those that had some form of provisional ballot before HAVA; and
- Recommendations to improve and/or reduce the need for provisional voting.

Progress: The fielding and initial analysis of the survey results are complete.

Work Plan: The information derived from the survey will be considered in drafting the analysis and alternatives document required under Task 3.5.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

The contract lists 7 tasks (3.10 – 3.16) related to Voter Identification Requirements. During the reporting period, we have completed tasks 3.10 and 3.11. The research on Voter ID requirements is proceeding concurrently with our work on the experience of provisional voting.

Task 3.10: Legislation, regulations, and litigation

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation with regard to Voter Identification Requirements. When complete, this information will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task.

Description: The Moritz team has compiled statutes on Voter Identification, and will provide a summarized analysis of this research to the project team for review.

Progress: The chart created to collect data on voter identification is complete and is now being reviewed. Voter identification statutes are being collected.

Challenges: Identifying the relevant statutes has been challenging because of the different terminology used from state to state to codify voter identification issues, and because many states have scattered election law provisions throughout their codes. This variety from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: Review of the voter identification chart, the collection of the voter identification statutes, and the writing of the state by state summaries will be completed by the end of August.

SUPPLEMENTS TO LEGAL ANALYSIS

To supplement the legal analysis, the Eagleton team is undertaking two research efforts: First, compiling information on the debate over voter ID in the states; and second, estimating the effect on turnout of voter ID requirements. Tracking the continuing political debate over voter identification reveals that the relatively narrow HAVA requirements for voter identification have apparently sparked in many states a broader concern with more rigorous identification requirements for all voters. We are following these developments both to monitor possible secondary effects of HAVA on voter ID, and to provide a rich collection of alternative approaches for consideration.

Individual narratives for the states with significant activity in voter ID will provide a resource for understanding the wide range of experience in the 2004 election. The narratives will include an appraisal of the prevalence and nature of vote fraud, a focus of the concern with increasing the rigor of voter ID requirements. The next key milestones will be the completion of the state database and drafting the first narratives.

VOTER ID AND TURNOUT ANALYSIS

The second supplemental analysis will provide objective information on a contentious feature of the debate over voter ID in the states: the effects of more rigorous voter ID regimes on voter turnout and the relationship between the voter ID regime and vote fraud. As part of this effort, Eagleton is undertaking a statistical analysis to gauge the effect of a state's voter ID regime on turnout, especially turnout by minority and elderly voters.

Description: We are creating a database and gathering statistics on the effects of state-level voter identification requirements on voter turnout at the county-level in the 2004 election.

Progress: The collection of data for the Voter ID-Turnout analysis is complete. The assembled database contains population demographic data, voter registration data and voter turnout data from all 50 states, 3113 Counties, and the District of Columbia. It also contains exit poll data from the 50 states, providing demographic data of voter turnout. The analysis of that data is well underway.

Challenges: The initial methodology that was devised to investigate the questions involved in this part of the study proved insufficient, as the necessary data was unobtainable (the Census Bureau has not yet released their 2004 data). After re-developing an appropriate methodology, the necessary data has been assembled, we have resumed the analysis of this data.

Projection: The analysis of the impact that voter identification requirements have upon voter turnout should be completed around mid-August.

Task 3.11 Public meeting on Voter Identification Requirements

Description: In early July, we continued our efforts to identify specific Voter ID topics or issues and panelists who could shed light on them. We recommended a focus on the debate over Voter ID now underway in the states. To provide a vivid picture of the debate, we recommended that one panel include specific legislators on opposite sides of the issue from two different states, Mississippi and Wisconsin. We also discussed adding a researcher to the panel in order to place the debate in a national or historical context. We also recommended a panel of two academic researchers with contrasting points of view, to address the effects of Voter ID provisions under HAVA. In response to our suggestions, EAC staff recommended a panel of two state election directors to address the interaction of Voter ID with HAVA.

By mid-July, the EAC had decided which topics and speakers should be invited, however most of those speakers proved unable to attend.

Progress: Tom O'Neill and Dan Tokaji attended the EAC Public Meeting held in Pasadena on July 28. Their presentations at the meeting described the progress of the research and our developing perspective on how to assess the quality of the provisional voting process in the states and identify possible steps for improvement.

Challenges: The changes in the scheduling of the July meeting delayed and ultimately made it impossible to assemble a panel, from which we could derive substantive insight into voter identification issues as they are playing out in the states. Additionally, due to the date of the hearing, the information from the hearing was not available as early in the research process as contemplated in the contract.

Projection: Preparation of the hearing summary will likely be delayed, due to the team's focus on preparation of the analysis and alternatives paper.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

PEER REVIEW GROUP

Description: A feature of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group (PRG). The EAC indicated at our first meeting in May that it would review our recommendations for members of the PRG. Our initial vision of the PRG was a small group of scholars and representatives of advocacy organizations that would comment on the research design, review drafts of our analyses and reports, and, in general, identify areas of the research that should be strengthened and help us improve the breadth, depth and clarity of reports based on that research.

Progress: Upon reflection, the project team agreed that the PRG should not include representatives of advocacy groups. We concluded that as representatives they would feel obligated to act as advocates for positions already taken by their groups. While advocacy organizations might be consulted as stakeholders during the course of our work, they were unlikely to achieve the goals we had in mind for the PRG as a source of advice on research design, methodology, and analysis. We submitted a revised list of potential members, substantially comprised of academics, to the EAC for review.

The EAC responded with suggestions concerning both the balance of the PRG's membership and the creation of additional committees to review our work. We provided an analysis of the cost and time involved in adopting the EAC's suggestions as well as with suggestions for a balanced selection of academics for the Peer Review Group. In the end, the EAC determined that Eagleton should appoint a balanced Peer Review Group of its own choosing. Initial phone calls were made to all members of that group by the end of July, and written invitations and descriptions of the process have gone to all possible members who had indicated their interest in serving.

Challenges: Communications on this issue with the EAC were not clear or timely. The purpose of the PRG is to review our work, and to comment on our research design, which is well underway. We had planned to have the PRG in place early enough in the project to enable them to provide feedback, including the research design. While we are confident in the quality of our work, the experience and perspective of the Peer Review Group will strengthen our analysis and recommendations as we find a way to receive its critique in the more limited time now available. The delay in creating the Peer Review Group will result in a delay in the completion of the final draft of the analysis and alternatives paper and in the preliminary guidance document.

Projections: The work of the PRG will be about 2 weeks behind the milestones indicated in the work plan.

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and an internal website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law will be merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding provisional voting and voter identification.

Progress: The Moritz team has provided Eagleton staff with all completed work. An Eagleton staff member reviews the content and formats of data from all supporting research and will (re-)format once the work has been completed for the compendium and reports submitted to the EAC. The researchers and staff at Eagleton have created a shared folder on the Institute's server for the safe storage of work and access for those staff members. All of this work is being reviewed by the project team to ensure that a broad survey is being performed.

Projections: By the end of July 2005, much of the above referenced research has been completed. The entire project team has begun the process of reviewing all work, and will combine and format all documents and materials in preparation for our final reporting to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: All project team members have signed on to the Intranet site. The Intranet facilitates the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

Progress: Project team members regularly post drafts, completed materials and spreadsheets online for internal review. The intranet has been extremely helpful to team members and serves as an internal website with announcements and important documents readily available to all team members.

Tom-

Thank you for sharing this list of your Peer Review Group members, to-date. I will share this list with the Commissioners and will be certain to let your know of their feedback, if any.

I will also be back in touch regarding Eagleton's research around voter fraud and the research project EAC will be undertaking, this fall, around voting fraud and voter intimidation. The EAC is presently in the process of finalizing a work and staff plan for this project and once it is completed, I will be certain to brief you on it.

In the meantime, EAC staff and several of the Commissioners looks forward to meeting with the Eagleton/Moritz team on September 6 at 1:30 PM.

Thanks-- we had, and it's good coverage. The AP had a piece as well-- this can be seen as a victory. Has the CHC come out officially on these ID issues? It is my opinion that the movements are being made in state legs. that will apply AZ type laws elsewhere. We obviously have good communications with House Admin and Senate Rules, as well as Whip Hoyer's office, but increased communications with Hill member offices would be helpful, if you have any suggestions.

Feds revise stance on Arizona voter ID requirement

Wednesday, August 31, 2005 7:43 PM PDT

PHOENIX (AP) - Arizona voters may be able to obtain at least a provisional ballot at polling places even if they don't show required identification despite the ID requirement in a ballot measure approved by voters last year. Whether that provisional ballot gets counted is another question.

The U.S. Justice Department in January signed off on election-law changes made by Proposition 200 itself. And a top department official in April signaled that the state would not run afoul of federal law if it put into place procedures to implement the ballot measure's voter ID mandate.

However, a different department official on Thursday wrote the state, saying it was "necessary to clarify our earlier interpretation in order to ensure an accurate representation of the Justice Department's views."

Acting Assistant Attorney General Bradley J. Schlozman's letter to a state official said the federal Help America Vote Act of 2002 requires that a person claiming to be an eligible voter and willing to sign a statement to that effect be given at least a provisional ballot.

However, HAVA leaves it up to states to decide whether a person who casts a provisional ballot is actually eligible to vote and therefore whether a provisional ballot should be counted, Schlozman wrote. Therefore, the state is free to

INTRODUCTION

This report describes our progress from August 1 through August 31, 2005. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks; progress made; challenges encountered or anticipated; milestones reached; and projections for work to be completed in the coming month.

Research on Provisional Voting and a draft of reports on the analysis and alternatives were substantially completed in preparation for the September 6 briefing for the EAC. Important reports such as the National Survey of Local Election Officials' Experience with Provisional Voting; Statistical Review Provisional Voting in the 2004 Election; State-by-state Narrative of Developments in Provisional Voting and the compilation of Provisional Voting statutes, regulations, and litigation from the 50 states, were all completed in August.

We made further progress on recruiting a balanced and authoritative Peer Review Group (which, as this report is written, is receiving all the documents listed above for review). Ingrid Reed of Eagleton will coordinate the work of the Peer Review Group. A list of the members of the Peer Review Group is attached.

This report is divided into 3 sections: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, and Project Management. Each section references specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract. The Financial Report will be sent separately by the Rutgers Division of Grant and Contract Accounting.

Please direct questions or comments about this report to Tom O'Neill at:

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Tasks 3.4 – 3.9 in our contract relate to provisional voting. Work on the first of these must be complete before proceeding to later tasks. Task 3.4 was completed in August, and Task 3.5 is well underway.

Task 3.5: Analysis and Alternative Approaches. Assess the potential, problems, and challenges of provisional voting and develop alternative means to achieve the goals of provisional voting.

LEGISLATION, REGULATIONS, AND LITIGATION

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation. This information constitutes the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task. It has provided a base of understanding for the analysis of states' actual experience with provisional voting in 2004, for which the Eagleton team has lead responsibility.

Description: The Moritz team has created a 50-state chart to summarize information on provisional voting, compiled statutes, case law and administrative procedures regarding Provisional Voting and is near completion with this research.

Progress: We completed the state by state summaries of provisional voting in August. Also complete is a memorandum outlining provisional voting legislative changes since the 2004 election. This material was sent to the EAC as part of the package for briefing on September 6.

Challenges: The variety in the form and frequency of provisional voting legislation from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: The analysis of all the information, data, and survey results concerning provisional voting data will be completed in September, on schedule. The alternatives document should also be complete in September, pending response from the EAC on which direction those alternatives should follow.

PREPARATION FOR AND EXPERIENCE WITH PROVISIONAL VOTING

The Eagleton team has researched and compiled a narrative of each state's experience with provisional voting in 2004. The report findings from the survey of 400 local election officials is now complete. The survey results improve our understanding of actual practice in administering provisional voting, including the steps local officials took to prepare for the election.

PROVISIONAL VOTING NARRATIVES

Description: To construct the narratives, a researcher examined newspaper accounts, state websites, and reports from third-party organizations to gather information on the experience with provisional voting in the 2004 election. To organize the information derived from this examination, we created an information system that catalogues information about the states (i.e. whether a state was new to provisional voting, the percentage of provisional votes counted, the method of notifying voters if their vote was counted, etc.) and combined it with Moritz's collection and analysis of statutes, regulations and litigation.

Progress: A state-by-state narrative of developments in Provisional Voting is complete and has been distributed to the EAC and the Peer Review Group. This work has been crucial to the process of constructing our draft analysis and recommendation of alternative approaches for provisional voting required under Task 3.5.

Challenges: The primary obstacle to constructing the narratives was difficulty in communicating and obtaining necessary information from various state officials. As a result, the narratives underwent multiple revisions in order to incorporate the most up-to-date material available. Had the Election Day Study been available, this task would probably have been simplified considerably.

Work Plan: We completed revisions of the narratives.

SURVEY OF COUNTY ELECTION OFFICIALS

Description: The Center for Public Interest Polling (CPIP) at Eagleton conducted a national survey of county election officials to measure several aspects of provisional voting.

Progress: The analysis of the survey results and findings report are complete.

Work Plan: We used the information from the survey in drafting the analysis and alternatives document required under Task 3.5.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

The contract lists 7 tasks (3.10 – 3.16) related to Voter Identification Requirements. The research on Voter ID requirements is proceeding concurrently with our work on the experience of provisional voting, and is becoming the principal focus of our research.

Task 3.10: Legislation, regulations, and litigation

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation with regard to Voter Identification Requirements. This collection of material is nearing completion. It will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task.

Description: The Moritz team has compiled statutes on Voter Identification, and will provide a summarized analysis of this research to the project team for review.

Progress: We are refining the 50 state (plus District of Columbia) chart of data on voter identification. So far collected are voter identification statutes for 35 states. Summaries of the existing voter identification statutes have been written for forty states.

Challenges: Identifying the relevant statutes has been challenging because of the different terminology used from state to state to codify voter identification issues, and because many states have scattered election law provisions throughout their codes. This variety from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: The state by state voter identification statute summaries will be completed for the remaining ten states and D.C. and the review of the chart will be completed. Analysis of voter identification data will begin.

SUPPLEMENTS TO LEGAL ANALYSIS

To supplement the legal analysis, the Eagleton team is undertaking two research efforts: First, compiling information on the debate over voter ID in the states; and second, estimating the effect on turnout of different voter ID regimes. Tracking the continuing political debate over voter identification reveals that the relatively narrow HAVA requirements for voter identification have apparently sparked in many states a broader concern, and a sharp political debate over rigorous identification requirements for all voters. The research follows these developments both to monitor possible secondary effects of HAVA on voter ID, and to provide a rich collection of alternative approaches for consideration.

Individual narratives for the states with significant activity in voter ID will provide a resource for understanding the wide range of experience in the 2004 election. The narratives will include an appraisal of the prevalence and nature of vote fraud, a focus of the concern with increasing the rigor of voter ID requirements. The next key milestones will be the completion of the state database and drafting the first narratives.

VOTER ID AND TURNOUT ANALYSIS

The second supplemental analysis will provide objective information on a contentious feature of the debate over voter ID in the states: the effects of more rigorous voter ID regimes on voter turnout and the relationship between the voter ID regime and vote fraud. As part of this effort, Eagleton is undertaking a statistical analysis to gauge the effect of a state's voter ID regime on turnout, especially turnout by minority and elderly voters.

Description: We are creating a database and gathering statistics on the effects of state-level voter identification requirements on voter turnout at the county-level in the 2004 election.

Progress: The collection of data for the Voter ID-Turnout analysis is complete. The assembled database contains population demographic data, voter registration data and voter turnout data from all 50 states, 3113 Counties, and the District of Columbia. We have also utilized exit poll data collected on Election Day 2004 as a resource for understanding the demographics of voter turnout. The analysis of that data is underway.

Challenges: The main challenges to this task include gathering the complete set of changes to Voter ID laws over the past 5 years, and then incorporating those changes into a sound statistical methodology.

Projection: We will continue to work towards resolving the methodology issue, and ultimately produce a final report on this subject. The analysis of the impact that voter identification requirements have upon voter turnout should be completed around mid-September.

014170

PEER REVIEW GROUP

Description: A feature of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group (PRG). The Peer Review Group will review our research and methodology and provide valuable feedback and suggestions for the direction of our work.

Progress: The composition of the Peer Review Group has been determined and the membership has been submitted to the EAC. Additionally, as of the date of this report all PRG members have received their first mailing, which included several reports from our research, and a draft of our analysis and alternatives outline for their review.

Challenges: Our timeline for circulating and discussing our research with the PRG has been compromised due to delays in completing the recruitment of members of the group.

Projections: We are in the process of scheduling our first conference call with PRG members for the week of Sept. 19, 2005.

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and an internal website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law is being merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding provisional voting and voter identification.

Progress: At this point in the research process, many documents are complete after a lengthy process of circulating drafts among team members. As we near the end of the Provisional Voting research and move into the Voter Identification research, we will re-evaluate the volume of files contained in the Information System and update the system.

Projections: The entire project team continues to review all project drafts, and will staff members combine and format all documents and materials in preparation for our final reporting to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: All project team members have signed on to the Intranet site. The Intranet facilitates the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

Progress: Project team members regularly post drafts, completed materials and spreadsheets online for internal review. The intranet has been extremely helpful to team members and serves as an internal website with announcements and important documents readily available to all team members.

FINANCIAL REPORT

The financial reporting for this project is supervised and prepared by the Division of Grant and Contract Accounting (DGCA) at Rutgers. Financial reporting on grant accounts is limited to actual expenses that have been incurred during the reporting period. Our contact at DGCA is: Constance Bornheimer, (732) 932-0165, EXT. 2235.

A detail of expenses incurred from project August 1- August 31, 2005, will be sent under separate cover to: Ms. Dianna Scott, Administrative Officer, EAC.

Adam,

Just to make sure we're talking about the same thing, I'm actually not going to be at the "kick-off" on the 14th. This is a meeting just about our project on the 28th. The project is already underway and the contracts finalized.

Since the meeting I refer to on the 28th is from 10-12, is there any possibility of the three of us having lunch after that?

I was about to email you as well. It was certainly good to meet you last week, as I've heard about your work through numerous sources, and am glad we have finally been able to chat. As with many things (we started to discuss), the EAC is doing a lot of these projects for the first time. And unlike a thinktank, or nonprofit, we are constrained in a number of ways, and there are "sensitivities" that exist. Of course, there are benefits to not being a nonprofit, as well.

I'll state that at least myself, but hopefully Cmsr. Martinez will be at the kickoff meeting. You may do this already, but I would attempt to lay out the ideal structure for your involvement in the contract, and perhaps communicate this to Karen and the other contractor immediately before the meeting. That will frame this contract structure (beyond the terms of the agreement) to your liking.

Obviously a suggestion. However, I think that the goal is good, efficient research that is unimpeachable in partisan or methodological grounds—that will then be submitted to the Commission for its approval (and actually getting its approval).

Feel free to call me anytime. If you're in DC before then, and have some time, let's get Cmsr Martinez, you and I together for lunch or coffee.

Best,
Adam

Karen:

I enjoyed the discussion too. I really think that this project will be of national importance and can positively affect elections administration while providing an answer to the handling of the vote fraud problem for the future.

On another note, why don't you leave an evening free while I am there for dinner. I am trying to bring my wife along. If you can bring your husband it could make for an interesting evening.

Summary of Election Activities of Job Serebrov

Background to Election Problems in Arkansas

Ever since Reconstruction, Arkansas has had a history of election problems. The election fraud that gave rise to the Brooks-Baxter War in Arkansas in the 1870s involved people from both sides of the aisle voting more than once, the dead rising to cast a ballot or two, destroying ballots, creating ballots and making ballot boxes disappear. A strong one-party system perpetuated this tradition into modern times.

In 1995, I met with Arkansas Supreme Court Justice Tom Glaze to discuss voting issues and my efforts to clean up the electoral process. Although supportive, Justice Glaze encouraged me to proceed with caution. Before being elected to the Supreme Court, Justice Glaze had been employed in the 1960s by Gov. Win Rockefeller to clean up ballot fraud throughout Arkansas. He was nearly disbarred in the process by those involved in ballot fraud in a small, rural county.

Shortly after my discussion with Justice Glaze, I discovered how pervasive the election problems were in the state. For instance, ballot boxes were stuffed or disappeared into the night only to return altered. Contrary to state law, county sheriffs running in contested elections maintained custody of the ballot boxes. In one instance, 20 voted ballot boxes were found in the attic of a sheriff's deputy after he died.

Attorney (1991-2004)

In my private practice as an attorney, I represented numerous clients in county election contests throughout Arkansas. I also represented clients in matters before the Federal Election Commission. I have never lost an election case. Finally, I was hired as a consultant to a major nonprofit legal organization to review and summarize the 2002 amendments to federal election laws and apply the new law to 10 scenarios.

Member, Washington County Board of Election Commissioners, Fayetteville, Arkansas (1990-1996)

This board consisted of three commissioners; I was the lone Republican. We were charged with supervising the training of poll workers, evaluating voting systems and then purchasing an optical scan system to be used countywide, preparing and justifying our annual budget before the Washington County Quorum Court, hiring and supervising staff and sitting as an administrative tribunal.

When I first came on the board, Washington County was primarily a one-party county and the Democrats were used to running elections according to tradition rather than the law. I had to battle with the two Democrats on the board to enforce election laws within the county. As I started to force the issue in the courts, the Republican Party gained strength. Four years later and after outlasting eight Democrat commissioners, I was able to work with new Democrat commissioners who recognized the need to enforce the law. At this point, the commission requested that I draft administrative regulations for the board. These remain in place today.

Founder, President, General Counsel; Arkansans for Fair Elections (1994-1999)

In 1994, Gov. Mike Huckabee (R), then a candidate for lieutenant governor, asked me to serve as his general counsel for ballot fraud protection. Thinking it best to act independently of any candidate, I formed Arkansans for Fair Elections. I served as the organization's president and, later, general counsel. This group launched a statewide educational campaign to train poll watchers to recognize irregular or fraudulent electoral procedures; this included the creation of literature and a video. Our extensive public relations campaign brought media attention to the issue. We also organized a statewide team of citizen poll watchers and attorneys to ensure that the election laws were fairly enforced. We were so successful in the lieutenant governor's race that Arkansans for Fair Elections was asked to continue the effort until 1999 when I moved to Louisiana.

General Counsel - Ballot Fraud Protection Committee, Republican Party of Arkansas (1995-1999)

In late 1995, Asa Hutchinson, chairman of the Republican Party of Arkansas, appointed me as general counsel for the newly formed Ballot Fraud Protection Committee of the state party. I retained this position until 1999. I was responsible for coordinating statewide enforcement efforts and directing a legal team to respond to problematic situations prior to and on election day.

(Through my role with Arkansans for Fair Elections and the Ballot Fraud Protection Committee, I successfully sued or negotiated a settlement in more than two-thirds of the 75 counties in Arkansas over electoral irregularities.)

Legal Consultant to Republican Members of the Arkansas General Assembly (1994-1996)

Republicans in the General Assembly requested that I review and draft suggested changes to Arkansas election law. Based on my personal experience as an election commissioner and as an election attorney, I identified a number of areas of concern and drafted new statutes modeled on the best examples that I could find from other states. My proposal was not passed by the Democrat-controlled General Assembly as a package, however, several of its components were passed into law.

Consultant to the Arkansas Court of Appeals Redistricting Commission (1996-1999)

I drafted five redistricting bills and maps for the 014186

constitutionally required redistricting of the Arkansas Court of Appeals. These bills were based on current U.S. Supreme Court precedent regarding gerrymandering. I had to present each bill and give supporting testimony to the commission.

Director of International Development - Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, Louisiana (2000-2003)

Part of my duties as director was to develop international cooperative projects. The theme of several of these proposals was democratization. In each case, I required review of the national election code of the country involved.

My activities in Namibia led to a request by the director of the Namibian Election Commission, Joram Rukambe and the Speaker of the Namibian National Assembly, Dr. Mose Tjitendero to review and suggest changes to the Namibian election code. This review took three months and resulted in proposed alterations a number of code sections. These suggestions were considered by the Namibian National Assembly and a number were incorporated into the code revisions. Additionally, I drafted legislation for the Speaker to guarantee voting rights to agricultural workers that were being denied by the owners of the farms. This legislation also was passed into law.

During this time, I was qualified as an election expert and placed on an election consultant list by the United Nations, IFES and the Electoral Institute of Southern Africa.

Karen,

Attached is the Progress Report for October. Please note that this report includes an attachment showing how our study classifies each state on key variables, such as counting out-of-precinct ballots, requirements for ballot evaluation, and other variables. It also displays how the data we used differs for some states for the vote counts reported by the Election Day Survey. We believe that our data is more accurate and complete (see for example the data for New Mexico and Pennsylvania).

I look forward to responding to any questions or concerns you or others at the EAC may have.

 - Task 3.10

- Financial Report

INTRODUCTION

This report describes our progress from October 1 through October 31, 2005. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks; progress made; challenges encountered or anticipated; milestones reached; and projections for work to be completed in the coming month.

In October we focused on finalizing our Provisional Voting analysis paper, including the development of recommendations to the EAC for a draft guidance document and best practices. These policy prescriptions are based on our research and the comments of the Peer Review Group. We completed a careful review of our data to reconcile it with other sources and identify the latest, most reliable information to use in the analysis. (See the attachment to this Progress Report for the details.) The importance of this demanding effort was described in September's Progress Report.

Also in October we revised the schedule for the project in light of the additional time that has been needed for review of earlier drafts by the EAC and the late completion of the Election Day Study. We will seek a meeting with the EAC in the next several weeks to confer about the schedule to complete the project and alternative approaches that could speed the conclusion of our work.

We will submit to the EAC a final draft of our report, a preliminary guidance document, and draft best practices before Thanksgiving. We project that EAC will take 3 to 4 weeks to review and react to that final draft. And we understand that after its review, the EAC will decide if it should move towards issuing a Guidance Document or recommending best practices. If the EAC does decide to issue a Guidance Document on Provisional Voting, the time needed for a review by the advisory boards is likely to delay a public hearing until early February.

This report is divided into 3 sections: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, and Project Management. Each section references specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract. The Financial Report will be sent separately by the Rutgers Division of Grant and Contract Accounting.

Please direct questions or comments about this report to [REDACTED]

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Tasks 3.4 – 3.9 in our contract relate to Provisional Voting. Work on the first of these must be complete before proceeding to later tasks. Task 3.4 was completed in August, Tasks 3.5 and 3.6 are nearing completion.

Task 3.5: Analysis and Alternative Approaches. Assess the potential, problems, and challenges of Provisional Voting and develop alternative means to achieve the goals of Provisional Voting.

LEGISLATION, REGULATIONS, AND LITIGATION

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation. This information constitutes the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task. It has provided a base of understanding for the analysis of states' actual experience with Provisional Voting in 2004, for which the Eagleton team has lead responsibility.

Description: The Moritz team has created a 50-state chart to summarize information on Provisional Voting, compiled statutes, case law and administrative procedures regarding Provisional Voting and has completed this research.

Progress: We have completed the memorandum outlining Provisional Voting legislative changes since the 2004 election and we are continuing to clarify the laws prior to these changes.

Challenges: The variety in the form and frequency of Provisional Voting legislation from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: The final analysis will be sent to the EAC by Thanksgiving.

PREPARATION FOR AND EXPERIENCE WITH PROVISIONAL VOTING

The Eagleton team has researched and compiled a narrative of each state's experience with Provisional Voting in 2004. The report findings from the survey of 400 local election officials are now complete. The survey results have proven to be instrumental in shaping our understanding of actual practice in administering Provisional Voting, including the steps local officials took to prepare for the election.

PROVISIONAL VOTING NARRATIVES

Description: To construct the narratives, a researcher examined newspaper accounts, state websites, and reports from third-party organizations to gather information on the experience with Provisional Voting in the 2004 election. To organize the information derived from this examination, we created an information system that catalogues information about the states (i.e. whether a state was new to Provisional Voting, the percentage of provisional votes counted, the method of notifying voters if their vote was counted, etc.) and combined it with Moritz's collection and analysis of statutes, regulations and litigation.

Progress: We completed a state-by-state narrative of developments in Provisional Voting and distributed it to the EAC and the PRG. This work has been helpful in understanding the context of the data collected on provisional voting from the states.

Challenges: The primary obstacle to constructing the narratives was difficulty in communicating and obtaining necessary information from various state officials. As a result, the narratives underwent several revisions to incorporate up-to-date and reliable information. Now that so many other analyses, including the Election Day Survey, have been released, we were challenged by different interpretations of the same basic facts. But the reconciliation of interpretation and data collection has been invaluable in establishing rigor in our report.

Work Plan: We completed revisions of the narratives incorporating comments from the PRG and addressing any discrepancies between our findings and other interpretations of similar information included in other studies.

PROVISIONAL VOTING STATISTICAL ANALYSIS

Description: During October the Eagleton research team continued to check its statistical analysis, and worked to reconcile the classifications of this analysis (such as states counting only those provisional ballots cast within the proper precinct versus states that counted ballots cast within the proper county) with the classification made in other parts of this study or in other studies (such as the Election Day Study or Electionline reports).

Progress: The effort to double check all of the classifications used in the study is complete. The results of this effort are displayed in the attachment to this progress report, "Characteristics of the Provisional Voting Process -- Classification of the States," beginning on page 9. Only Delaware and Arkansas remain unclear in regard to one of the measures, and both states have been contacted to receive clarification in this area..

Challenges: The difficulties encountered have been a result of communication delays and time constraints. Some states have been more responsive to our inquiries about their practices than others. Overall, this is not an irresolvable problem but it does slow the process of completion down.

Work Plan: By early-November the final revision of the statistical analysis, which includes full reconciliation of all data within the study, will be complete. The reconciliation of data is displayed in the attachment to this progress report.

SURVEY OF COUNTY ELECTION OFFICIALS

Description: The Eagleton Center for Public Interest Polling (CPIP) conducted a national survey of county election officials to measure several aspects of Provisional Voting.

Progress: The analysis of the survey results and findings report is complete. As a result of the critique by the PRG, the research team is revising and clarifying the descriptions of the survey design and sample selection process to make the research methods more transparent.

Work Plan: We used the information from the survey in drafting the analysis and alternatives document required under Task 3.5. We will include necessary clarifications regarding survey design and sample selection in the final analysis and alternatives document.

--

The report and recommendations now nearing completion constitutes the draft preliminary guidance document. Based on our conversation with the EAC, the draft gives the EAC the option of proceeding with a guidance document or issuing recommendations to the state for best practices, recommendations that would not constitute voluntary guidance. Before proceeding to Task 3.7 (revise the guidance document for publication) or 3.8 (arrange a public hearing on the draft guidance), we will await the EAC's decision on how to proceed.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

The contract lists 7 tasks (3.10 – 3.16) related to Voter Identification Requirements. The research on Voter ID requirements is proceeding concurrently with our work on the experience of Provisional Voting, and is becoming the principal focus of our research.

Task 3.10: Legislation, regulations, and litigation

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation with regard to Voter Identification Requirements. This collection of material is nearing completion. It will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task.

Description: The Moritz team has compiled statutes on Voter Identification, and will provide a summarized analysis of this research to the project team for review.

Progress: The 50 State (plus the District of Columbia) chart has been completed, the voter identification statutes have been collected for all states and D.C., and summaries of the existing voter identification statutes have been written for all states and D.C.

Challenges: Identifying the relevant statutes has been challenging because of the different terminology used from state to state to codify voter identification issues, and because many states have scattered election law provisions throughout their codes. This variety from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: Analysis of voter identification data has begun and will increasingly become the central focus of our work.

SUPPLEMENTS TO LEGAL ANALYSIS

To supplement the legal analysis, the Eagleton team is undertaking two research efforts: First, compiling information on the debate over voter ID in the states; and second, estimating the effect on turnout of different voter ID regimes. Tracking the continuing political debate over voter identification reveals that the relatively narrow HAVA requirements for voter identification have apparently sparked in many states a broader concern and a sharp political debate over rigorous identification requirements for all voters. The research follows these developments both to monitor possible secondary effects of HAVA on voter ID, and to provide a rich collection of alternative approaches for consideration.

VOTER ID AND TURNOUT ANALYSIS

The second supplemental analysis will provide objective information on a contentious feature of the debate over voter ID in the states: the effects of more rigorous voter ID regimes on voter turnout and the relationship between the voter ID regime and vote fraud. As part of this effort, Eagleton is undertaking a statistical analysis to gauge the effect of a state's voter ID regime on turnout, especially turnout by minority and elderly voters.

Description: We have created a database and gathered statistics on the effects of state-level voter identification requirements on voter turnout at the county-level in the 2004 election

Progress: The collection of data for the Voter ID-Turnout analysis is complete. The assembled database contains population demographic data, voter registration data and voter turnout data from all 50 states, 3113 Counties, and the District of Columbia. We have also used exit poll data collected on Election Day 2004 as a resource for understanding the demographics of voter turnout.

Challenges: The analysis of these data had been postponed until the data reconciliation of Provisional Voting is complete. As a result of the extensive revision and data reconciliation efforts aimed at the Provisional Voting section of our work VID had been temporarily placed on hold. We are now beginning data analysis on the impact of voter identification requirements on voter turnout.

Work Plan: The analysis of the impact that voter identification requirements have upon voter turnout should be completed by early December. Early January is our target to deliver the draft report and outline of alternative policies to the Peer Review Group. In mid January, the EAC would receive a draft report and recommendations that take into account the comments of the PRG.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

PEER REVIEW GROUP

Description: A feature of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group (PRG). It reviews our research and methodology and provides valuable feedback and suggestions for the direction of our work.

Progress: Eagleton has stayed in touch with members of the Peer Review Group since the September 21st conference call, and has solicited their final comments on the Provisional Voting research. During October, we telephoned two members who did not participate in the conference call to confirm their commitment to serving as members of the Peer Review Group. Profess Guy Charles affirmed his interest. Professor Pamela Karlan did not return the call. The revisions in the schedule for the project have now made it possible to begin the process of scheduling a meeting of the PRG to consider our draft report and recommendations on Voter Identification Issues. We anticipate that meeting will take place the second week of January.

Challenges: No new challenges were encountered during October.

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and an internal website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law is being merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding Provisional Voting and voter identification.

Progress: At this point in the research process, many documents are complete after a lengthy process of circulating drafts among team members. We have reorganized our system by separating final drafts from earlier versions of documents, discarding dated files contained in the Information System, and updating the system as a whole. Upon their completion, new documents continue to be added.

Projections: The entire project team continues to use the Information System which contains the above referenced research, in working toward the preparation for our final reports to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: All project team members have signed on to the Intranet site, and regularly post drafts, completed materials and spreadsheets online for internal review. The Intranet facilitates the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

FINANCIAL REPORT

The financial reporting for this project is supervised and prepared by the Division of Grant and Contract Accounting (DGCA) at Rutgers. Financial reporting on grant accounts is limited to actual expenses that have been incurred during the reporting period. Our contact at DGCA is: Constance Bornheimer, (732) 932-0165, EXT. 2235.

A detail of expenses incurred from project October 1- October 31, 2005, will be sent under separate cover to: Ms. Dianna Scott, Administrative Officer at the EAC.

Characteristics of the Provisional Voting Process

Classification of the States

Our research on provisional voting divided the various states into several categories to allow an assessment of how different factors may have influenced the process of casting and counting provisional ballots. This analysis was conducted before the release of the Election Day Study, and the categories we used may differ in some respects from its work. The categories analyzed here are:

1. New vs. Old (states that used a provisional ballot before the 2004 election)
2. Use of a statewide database of registered voters vs. no use of a statewide database
3. Counting out-of-precinct ballots vs. not counting out-of-precinct ballots
4. Voter identification requirements
5. Method used to verify provisional ballots
6. Levels of provisional ballots cast and counted

We first assigned states within these categories based on classifications done by Electionline.org in its studies. The Electionline data was the only published information available at the time of our research. We reviewed the Electionline data carefully, and, in select cases, updated it with new, detailed information that had become available after its publication. The changes we made are explained below.

Please note that:

--Idaho, Maine, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Wisconsin and Wyoming were excluded from our analysis. They have election-day registration systems, and did not need to use HAVA-compliant provisional ballots.

--North Dakota does not register voters, so it also was excluded from HAVA requirements and did not use provisional voting.

--Mississippi has not reported its provisional voting results and could not be included in our analysis, though it was compliant in 2004.

--Pennsylvania did not report its totals for the Election Day Study, but we obtained information on Pennsylvania and did include it in our analysis.

New vs. Old States

We classified states as “new” or “old” based on the 2001 Electionline study of provisional voting¹ and condensing its classifications into a single dichotomous variable, new/old with all other cases excluded. The Electionline study divided states into five categories of their use of provisional ballots in the 2000 election:

1. Use of provisional ballots (P)
2. Limited use of provisional ballots (LP)
3. Affidavit ballots (A)
4. No system in place (N)
5. Unnecessary/Not Applicable (U/NA)

We collapsed all of the states listed as using provisional ballots, limited use of provisional ballots or affidavit ballots as “old” states, because the states in all three categories would have been familiar with key aspects of provisional voting.. States that had no provisional voting system in place for the 2002 election, and were HAVA compliant in 2004, were listed as “new” states, as 2004 would have been the first year in which they would be offering the option of provisional voting. States that were listed as unnecessary or not applicable were excluded from this study, as they were exempt from the HAVA regulations in 2004 because they either allowed same-day registration or did not register voters.

Rhode Island is the only state categorized as an old state by Electionline that we moved into the list of new states. Electionline’s map shows Rhode Island as a state that used provisional voting in 2000, but in the state description, it is listed as having no system in place. We learned from the Rhode Island Board of Elections that the state had previously permitted potential voters to sign an affidavit if they did not appear on a precinct’s list of registered voters, but felt they were registered to vote. Based on the signed affidavit, the election official would then contact a county official to see if the voter was on a more complete registration list. If the voter’s name was on the complete list, that voter was permitted to cast a regular ballot. As this process did not grant the voter a provisional ballot, but served as a different type of administrative failsafe, we concluded that Rhode Island’s first use of provisional voting was in 2004 and, therefore, classified the state as “new” to the system of provisional balloting.

Statewide List of Registered Voters

The Electionline preview of the 2004 Election² was the starting point for compiling a list of states that had a statewide database of registered voters. That study listed 34 States that did not have their statewide database systems complete, and 16 that did, including the District of Columbia. North Dakota does not register voters, so does not need to compile such a database. Electionline's criterion for concluding that a state had a statewide list was that the state have participation from all jurisdictions in a statewide system. We added Oklahoma to the list of states with statewide databases because we found they had met the Electionline criteria by the 2004 election, albeit too late for inclusion in the Electionline survey.

Minnesota has a statewide database but was excluded from the analysis because it did not offer provisional ballots and was exempt from the HAVA requirements.

Out-of-Precinct Ballots

We based our classification of states that allow the counting of ballots cast outside the correct precinct on the data in the 2004 Electionline preview of the 2004 election². States that evaluated ballots cast in a precinct where the voter was not registered were categorized as “out-of-precinct.” States that invalidated such ballots were categorized as “In-precinct only.”

Voter Identification

We relied on Electionline studies, including the Voter Identification study³ and the 2004 Election Preview, to classify the states on their requirements for voter identification. Each state's categorization is taken directly from the Electionline studies except Hawaii.⁴ The five different, and increasingly rigorous, categories are: Give Name (8 states), Sign Name (14 states), Match Signature (8 states), Provide ID (15 states), and Photo ID (5 states).

³ This study can be found at: <http://electionline.org/Portals/1/Publications/Voter%20Identification.pdf>

⁴ In 2004, ElectionLine listed Hawaii as requiring identification. Our review of statutes revealed that Hawaii could require photo ID. Since that is the most rigorous form of identification that may be required of voters, we classified Hawaii under this category.

Table 4CATEGORIZATION OF STATES -- Forms of Identification Required

States in italics are exempt from HAVA or did not report Provisional Ballot data and are not included in the analysis.

Give Name	Sign Name	Match Signature	Provide ID	Photo ID
Maine	California	Illinois	Alabama	Florida
Massachusetts	DC	Nevada	Alaska	Hawaii
New Hampshire	Idaho	New Jersey	Arizona	Louisiana

South Dakota complicates the effort to assign each state to a category. It permits voters to sign an affidavit that would allow them to vote without presenting photo ID. While Hawaii did not normally require photo ID, its statutes gave challenged voters the opportunity to respond by producing a photo ID.

Verification Method

We identified four different ways states assessed provisional ballots to determine if they should be counted: signature match, match voter data, signed affidavits, and bringing back identification later. We gathered information about these verification techniques by checking state websites and consulting journalistic accounts. We consulted state legislation to provide further information where needed.

Data Collection

To assemble our data for analysis, we began by using the data on provisional votes cast and counted reported by Electionline. To increase the accuracy of this data, we surveyed each state's election websites for updated data, and for reported numbers on the county level. We then sent emails to 49 (we excluded Alaska, see below) states and the District of Columbia, requesting updated data on the number of provisional votes cast and counted by county. We received information from 25 states by our cut-off date of August 25, 2005.

* North Carolina lacked clear standards to evaluate provisional ballots and is excluded from this analysis.

⁵ Alaska was not contacted via email, as the state does not have voting districts comparable to counties in other states and could not be matched with comparable census data.

⁶ Maryland reported provisional ballots that were counted per county, but not number cast.

⁷ Nebraska reported an incomplete list of provisional ballots cast and counted by county, but designated counties by number, rather than by name.

Data Differences with Election Day Study

The data used in this study differs from the data reported in the Election Day Study for 19 states. The Election Day Study was not completed until well after our statistical analysis of provisional voting was finished, on the schedule laid out in our work plan. Where there are differences, they are typically very small, usually fewer than 100 votes either cast or counted. Of the 9 states that have differences of more than 100 votes cast or counted, 7 have reported their numbers directly to us and can be considered updated data that EDS had not obtained. For one of those states, New Mexico, EDS had incomplete data, and for another, Pennsylvania, EDS had no data at all. The data that we have collected reflects updated numbers from the states that have changed following recounts and litigation that altered how ballots were evaluated.

INTRODUCTION

This report describes our progress from November 1 through November 30, 2005. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks; progress made; challenges encountered or anticipated; milestones reached; and projections for work to be completed in the coming month.

In November we completed and submitted our Provisional Voting analysis paper, including recommendations to the EAC for best practices. These policy prescriptions are based on our research and the comments of the Peer Review Group on that research. We completed a careful review of our data to reconcile it with other sources and identify the latest, most reliable information to use in the analysis. The importance of this demanding effort was described in October's Progress Report. We continue to await the EAC's comments on that final draft.

Also in November we revised the schedule for the project in light of the additional time that has been needed for review of earlier drafts by the EAC and the late completion of the Election Day Study. We made a written request to the EAC for a no-cost extension of the contract through the end of February which we understand is likely to be approved before Christmas.

Since the submission of our Provisional Voting report to the EAC on November 28, 2005, our efforts have been entirely aimed at the completion of the voter identification research. We have been advised that EAC will take several weeks to review and react to our final draft on provisional voting. As we await a January meeting on that topic, we are moving ahead quickly on the statistical analysis of voter identification data and summarizing the legal research that was completed earlier.

This Monthly Progress Report is divided into 3 sections: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, and Project Management. Each section references specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract. The Financial Report will be sent separately by the Rutgers Division of Grant and Contract Accounting.

Please direct questions or comments about this report to [REDACTED] or by telephone at [REDACTED].

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Tasks 3.4 – 3.9 in our contract relate to Provisional Voting. Task 3.4 was completed in August, and Tasks 3.5 and 3.6 were completed in November.

Task 3.6: Prepare preliminary draft guidance document.

The report and recommendations which were sent to the EAC on November 28, 2005 recommends against the adoption of a guidance document per se and advises that the EAC adopt its recommendations as best practices. That recommendation followed agreement by the EAC with that course of action. The submission of that report and recommendations, however, constitutes the document required under this task. Before proceeding to Task 3.7 (revise the guidance document for publication) or 3.8 (arrange a public hearing on the draft guidance), we await the EAC's decision on how to proceed.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

The contract lists 7 tasks (3.10 – 3.16) related to Voter Identification Requirements. The research on Voter ID requirements is proceeding concurrently with our work on the experience of Provisional Voting, and is the principal focus of our research at this time.

Task 3.10: Legislation, regulations, and litigation

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation with regard to Voter Identification Requirements. This collection of material is nearing completion. It will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task.

Description: The Moritz team has compiled statutes on Voter Identification, and will provide a summarized analysis of this research to the project team for review.

Progress: The 50 state (plus District of Columbia) chart has been completed, the voter identification statutes have been collected for all states and D.C., and summaries of the existing voter identification statutes have been written for all states and D.C. Moritz has completed its review of voter identification litigation. Moritz and Eagleton have worked together to review the research, clarify the categorization of that research on our charts, and reconcile the data developed in our two different research techniques categorizations.

Challenges: The biggest challenge facing the reconciliation process of research findings, descriptions and categorizations is that it is being done by two different teams (Moritz and Eagleton) who rely on different primary source materials. Despite the necessity this has created to reconcile conflicting data from time to time, the collaboration has also been very beneficial because it has made our research efforts more rigorous.

Work Plan: During December we will conclude our reconciliation and continue analysis of voter identification research, including an analysis of the most important issues and trends in voter identification litigation.

SUPPLEMENTS TO LEGAL ANALYSIS

To supplement the legal analysis, the Eagleton team is undertaking two research efforts: First, compiling information on the debate over voter ID in the states; and second, estimating the effect on turnout of different voter ID regimes. Tracking the continuing political debate over voter identification reveals that the relatively narrow HAVA requirements for voter identification have apparently sparked in many states a broader concern and a sharp political debate over rigorous identification requirements for all voters. The research follows these developments both to monitor possible secondary effects of HAVA on voter ID, and to provide a rich collection of alternative approaches for consideration.

014211

During the month of November, we developed narratives to establish how laws were passed, looking at when they were proposed and when they were eventually enacted. In the upcoming month, Eagleton will examine voter registration forms across the states to see what forms of identification are requested from mail-in registrants. The difficulty will be determining the 2004 status of the states.

VOTER ID AND TURNOUT ANALYSIS

Now under way is a statistical analysis to gauge the effect of a state's voter ID regime on turnout, especially turnout by minority and elderly voters.

Description: We have created a database and gathered statistics on the effects of state-level voter identification requirements on voter turnout at the county-level in the 2004 election. In November, we have analyzed both aggregate- and individual-level data to determine whether there is any relationship between voter turnout and the various forms of voter identification states require.

Progress: Analysis is under way for two data sets: County-level data that includes registration and turnout rates for 2000 and 2004, as well as Census measures and indicators of the type of voter identification requirements that were in existence at the time of the 2004 presidential election. The second data set consists of the voter supplement to the November 2004 Current Population Survey. This data set allows for testing of the same hypotheses at the individual level. Preliminary findings from the aggregate data set suggest that voter ID requirements have their greatest effect at the registration stage, as opposed to the turnout stage. This is a first cut at the data, however, and we will be adding a number of control variables to the analysis to see if the relationship holds.

Challenges: These analyses use hierarchical linear modeling. Because voter identification requirements vary by state, one must pay special attention to other, unseen state-level influences on the data. The models are difficult to run and interpret, so the analyses are time-consuming.

Work Plan: The statistical analyses will continue during the month of December, and a draft of the findings is anticipated by the end of the month.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

PEER REVIEW GROUP

Description: A feature of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group (PRG). It reviews our research and methodology and provides valuable feedback and suggestions for the direction of our work.

014212

Progress: During the month of November, Eagleton contacted the PRG Members on two occasions. First, all members received the final draft provisional voting report that was submitted to the EAC. Further comments are welcome but not expected from the PRG. Second, we have asked PRG members to reserve two dates in mid-January for potential conference call sessions to review the voter identification report.

Challenges: No new challenges were encountered during November.

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and an internal website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law is being merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding Provisional Voting and voter identification.

Progress: At this point in the research process, many documents are complete after a lengthy process of circulating drafts among team members. We have reorganized our system by separating final drafts from earlier versions of documents, discarding dated files contained in the Information System, and updating the system as a whole. Upon their completion, new documents continue to be added.

Projections: The entire project team continues to use the Information System which contains the above referenced research, in working toward the preparation for our final reports to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: All project team members have signed on to the Intranet site, and regularly post drafts, completed materials and spreadsheets online for internal review. The Intranet facilitates the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

FINANCIAL REPORT

The financial reporting for this project is supervised and prepared by the Division of Grant and Contract Accounting (DGCA) at Rutgers. Financial reporting on grant accounts is limited to actual expenses that have been incurred during the reporting period. Our contact at DGCA is: Constance Bornheimer, (732) 932-0165, EXT. 2235.

A detail of expenses incurred from project November 1- November 30, 2005, will be sent under separate cover to: Ms. Dianna Scott, Administrative Officer at the EAC.

U.S. ELECTION ASSISTANCE COMMISSION

Status Report on the Voting Fraud-Voter Intimidation Research Project

014215

INTRODUCTION

Section 241 of the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) requires EAC to conduct research on election administration issues. Among the tasks listed in the statute is the development of:

- nationwide statistics and methods of identifying, deterring, and investigating voting fraud in elections for Federal office [section 241(b)(6)]; and
- ways of identifying, deterring, and investigating methods of voter intimidation [section 241(b)(7)].

EAC's Board of Advisors recommended that the agency make research on these matters a high priority.

FOCUS OF CURRENT RESEARCH

In September 2005, the Commission hired two consultants with expertise in this subject matter, Job Serebrov and Tova Wang, to:

- develop a comprehensive description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation in the context of Federal elections;
- perform background research (including Federal and State administrative and case law review), identify current activities of key government agencies, civic and advocacy organizations regarding these topics, and deliver a summary of this research and all source documentation;
- establish a project working group, in consultation with EAC, composed of key individuals and representatives of organizations knowledgeable about the topics of voting fraud and voter intimidation;
- provide the description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation and the results of the preliminary research to the working group, and convene the working group to discuss potential avenues for future EAC research on this topic; and
- produce a report to EAC summarizing the findings of the preliminary research effort and working group deliberations that includes recommendations for future research, if any;

As of the date of this report, the consultants have drafted a definition of election fraud, reviewed relevant literature and reports, interviewed persons from government and private sectors with subject matter expertise, analyzed news reports of alleged election fraud, reviewed case law, and established a project working group.

014216

DEFINITION OF ELECTION FRAUD

The consultants drafted a definition of election fraud that includes numerous aspects of voting fraud (including voter intimidation, which is considered a subset of voting fraud) and voter registration fraud, but excludes campaign finance violations and election administration mistakes. This draft will be discussed and probably refined by the project working group, which is scheduled to convene on May 18, 2006.

LITERATURE REVIEW

The consultants found many reports and books that describe anecdotes and draw broad conclusions from a large array of incidents. They found little research that is truly systematic or scientific. The most systematic look at fraud appears to be the report written by Lori Minnite, entitled "Securing the Vote: An Analysis of Election Fraud". The most systematic look at voter intimidation appears to be the report by Laughlin McDonald, entitled "The New Poll Tax". The consultants found that books written about this subject all seem to have a political bias and a pre-existing agenda that makes them somewhat less valuable.

Moreover, the consultants found that reports and books make allegations but, perhaps by their nature, have little follow up. As a result, it is difficult to know when something has remained in the stage of being an allegation and gone no further, or progressed to the point of being investigated or prosecuted or in any other way proven to be valid by an independent, neutral entity. This is true, for example, with respect to allegations of voter intimidation by civil rights organizations, and, with respect to fraud, John Fund's frequently cited book, "Stealing Elections".

Consultants found that researchers agree that measuring something like the incidence of fraud and intimidation in a scientifically legitimate way is extremely difficult from a methodological perspective and would require resources beyond the means of most social and political scientists. As a result, there is much more written on this topic by advocacy groups than social scientists.

Other items of note:

- There is as much evidence, and as much concern, about structural forms of disenfranchisement as about intentional abuse of the system. These include felon disenfranchisement, poor maintenance of databases and identification requirements.
- There is tremendous disagreement about the extent to which polling place fraud, e.g. double voting, intentional felon voting, noncitizen voting, is a serious problem. On balance, more researchers find it to be less of a problem than is commonly described in the political debate; but some reports say it is a major problem, albeit hard to identify.

- There is substantial concern across the board about absentee balloting and the opportunity it presents for fraud.
- Federal law governing election fraud and intimidation is varied and complex and yet may nonetheless be insufficient or subject to too many limitations to be as effective as it might be.
- Deceptive practices, e.g. targeted flyers and phone calls providing misinformation, were a major problem in 2004.
- Voter intimidation continues to be focused on minority communities, although the American Center for Voting Rights uniquely alleges it is focused on Republicans.

Recommendations

The consultants recommend that subsequent EAC research include a follow up study of allegations made in reports, books and newspaper articles. They also suggest that the research should focus on filling the gap between the lack of reports based on methodical studies by social or political scientists and the numerous, but less scientific, reports published by advocacy groups.

INTERVIEWS

The consultants jointly selected experts from the public and private sector for interviews. The consultants' analysis of their discussions with these members of the legal, election official, advocacy, and academic communities follows.

Common Themes

- There is virtually universal agreement that absentee ballot fraud is the biggest problem, with vote buying and registration fraud coming in after that. The vote buying often comes in the form of payment for absentee ballots, although not always. Some absentee ballot fraud is part of an organized effort; some is by individuals, who sometimes are not even aware that what they are doing is illegal. Voter registration fraud seems to take the form of people signing up with false names. Registration fraud seems to be most common where people doing the registration were paid by the signature.
- There is widespread but not unanimous agreement that there is little polling place fraud, or at least much less than is claimed, including voter impersonation, "dead" voters, noncitizen voting and felon voters. Those few who believe it occurs often enough to be a concern say that it is impossible to show the extent to which it happens, but do point to instances in the press of such incidents. Most people believe that false registration forms have not resulted in polling place fraud, although it may create the perception that vote fraud is possible. Those who believe there is more polling place fraud than reported/investigated/prosecuted believe that registration fraud does lead to fraudulent votes. Jason Torchinsky from the American Center for Voting Rights is the only interviewee who believes that polling place fraud is widespread and among the most significant problems in the system.

- Abuse of challenger laws and abusive challengers seem to be the biggest intimidation/suppression concerns, and many of those interviewed assert that the new identification requirements are the modern version of voter intimidation and suppression. However there is evidence of some continued outright intimidation and suppression, especially in some Native American communities. A number of people also raise the problem of poll workers engaging in harassment of minority voters. Other activities commonly raised were the issue of polling places being moved at the last moment, unequal distribution of voting machines, videotaping of voters at the polls, and targeted misinformation campaigns.
- Several people – including representatives from the Department of Justice (DOJ) - indicate that, for various reasons, DOJ is bringing fewer voter intimidation and suppression cases now, and has increased its focus on matters such as noncitizen voting, double voting, and felon voting. While DOJ's Voting Section, Civil Rights Division, focuses on systemic patterns of malfeasance, the Election Crimes Branch, Public Integrity Section, has increased prosecutions of individual instances of felon, alien, and double voting at the same time as it maintains an aggressive pursuit of systematic schemes to corrupt the electoral process.
- The problem of badly kept voter registration lists, with both ineligible voters remaining on the rolls and eligible voters being taken off, remains a common concern. A few people are also troubled by voters being on registration lists in two states. They said that there was no evidence that this had led to double voting, but it opens the door to the possibility. There is great hope that full implementation of the new requirements of HAVA – done well, a major caveat – will reduce this problem dramatically.

Common Recommendations:

- Many of those interviewed recommend better poll worker training as the best way to improve the process; a few also recommended longer voting times or voting on days other than election day (such as weekends) but fewer polling places so only the best poll workers would be employed.
- Many interviewed support stronger criminal laws and increased enforcement of existing laws with respect to both fraud and intimidation. Advocates from across the spectrum expressed frustration with the failure of the Department of Justice to pursue complaints.

- With respect to DOJ's Voting Section, Civil Rights Division, John Tanner indicated that fewer cases are being brought because fewer are warranted – it has become increasingly difficult to know when allegations of intimidation and suppression are credible since it depends on one's definition of intimidation, and because both parties are doing it. Moreover prior enforcement of the laws has now changed the entire landscape – race based problems are rare now. Although challenges based on race and unequal implementation of identification rules would be actionable, Mr. Tanner was unaware of such situations actually occurring and his office has not pursued any such cases.
- Craig Donsanto of DOJ's Election Crimes Branch, Public Integrity Section, says that while the number of election fraud related complaints have not gone up since 2002, nor has the proportion of legitimate to illegitimate claims of fraud, the number of cases DOJ is investigating and the number of indictments his office is pursuing are both up dramatically. Since 2002, DOJ has brought more cases against alien voters, felon voters and double voters than ever before. Mr. Donsanto would like more resources so that his agency can do more and would like to have laws that make it easier for the federal government to assume jurisdiction over voter fraud cases.
- A couple of interviewees recommend a new law that would make it easier to criminally prosecute people for intimidation even when there is not racial animus.
- Several advocate expanded monitoring of the polls, including some associated with the Department of Justice.
- Almost everyone hopes that administrators will maximize the potential of statewide voter registration databases to prevent fraud.
- Challenge laws, both with respect to pre-election day challenges and challengers at the polls, need to be revised by all states to ensure they are not used for purposes of wrongful disenfranchisement and harassment.
- Several people advocate passage of Senator Barak Obama's "deceptive practices" bill.
- There is a split on whether it would be helpful to have nonpartisan election officials – some indicated they thought even if elections officials are elected as non partisan officials, they will carry out their duties in biased ways nonetheless. However, most agree that elections officials pursuing partisan agendas are a problem that must be addressed in some fashion. Suggestions included moving election responsibilities out of the secretary of states' office; increasing transparency in the process; and enacting conflict of interest rules.
- A few recommend returning to allowing use of absentee ballots "for cause" only if it were politically feasible.

- A few recommend enacting a national identification card, including Pat Rogers, an attorney in New Mexico, and Jason Torchinsky from ACVR, who advocates the proposal in the Carter-Baker Commission Report.
- A couple of interviewees indicated the need for clear standards for the distribution of voting machines

NEWS ARTICLES

Consultants conducted a Nexis search of related news articles published between January 1, 2001 and January 1, 2006. A systematic, numerical analysis of the data collected during this review is currently being prepared. What follows is an overview of these articles provided by the consultants.

Absentee Ballots

According to press reports, absentee ballots are abused in a variety of ways:

- Campaign workers, candidates and others coerce the voting choices of vulnerable populations, usually elderly voters.
- Workers for groups and individuals have attempted to vote absentee in the names of the deceased.
- Workers for groups, campaign workers and individuals have attempted to forge the names of other voters on absentee ballot requests and absentee ballots and thus vote multiple times.

It is unclear how often actual convictions result from these activities (a handful of articles indicate convictions and guilty pleas), but this is an area in which there have been a substantial number of official investigations and actual charges filed, according to news reports where such information is available. A few of the allegations became part of civil court proceedings contesting the outcome of the election.

While absentee fraud allegations turn up throughout the country, a few states have had several such cases. Especially of note are Indiana, New Jersey, South Dakota, and most particularly, Texas. Interestingly, there were no articles regarding Oregon, where the entire system is vote by mail.

Voter Registration Fraud

According to press reports, the following types of allegations of voter registration fraud are most common:

- Registering in the name of dead people;
- Fake names and other information on voter registration forms;
- Illegitimate addresses used on voter registration forms;
- Voters being tricked into registering for a particular party under false pretenses;
and
- Destruction of voter registration forms depending on the party the voter registered with.

There was only one self evident instance of a noncitizen registering to vote. Many of the instances reported included official investigations and charges filed, but few actual convictions, at least from the news reporting. There have been multiple reports of registration fraud in California, Colorado, Florida, Missouri, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Voter Intimidation and Suppression

This is the area which had the most articles, in part because there were so many allegations of intimidation and suppression during the 2004 election. Most of these remained allegations and no criminal investigation or prosecution ensued. Some of the cases did end up in civil litigation.

This is not to say that these alleged activities were confined to 2004 – there were several allegations made during every year studied. Most notable were the high number of allegations of voter intimidation and harassment reported during the 2003 Philadelphia mayoral race.

A very high number of the articles were about the issue of challenges to voters' registration status and challengers at the polling places. There were many allegations that planned challenge activities were targeted at minority communities. Some of the challenges were concentrated in immigrant communities.

However, the tactics alleged varied greatly. The types of activities discussed also include the following:

- Photographing or videotaping voters coming out of polling places;
- Improper demands for identification;

- Poll watchers harassing voters;
- Poll workers being hostile to or aggressively challenging voters;
- Disproportionate police presence;
- Poll watchers wearing clothes with messages that seemed intended to intimidate; and
- Insufficient voting machines and unmanageably long lines.

Although the incidents reported on occurred everywhere, not surprisingly, many came from “battleground” states. There were several such reports out of Florida, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

“Dead Voters and Multiple Voting”

There were a high number of articles about people voting in the names of the dead and voting more than once. Many of these articles were marked by allegations of big numbers of people committing these frauds, and relatively few of these allegations turning out to be accurate according to investigations by the newspapers themselves, elections officials, and criminal investigators. Often the problem turned out to be a result of administrative error, poll workers mis-marking voter lists, a flawed registration list and/or errors made in the attempt to match names of voters on the list with the names of the people who voted. In a good number of cases, there were allegations that charges of double voting by political leaders were an effort to scare people away from the voting process.

Nonetheless there were a few cases of people actually being charged and/or convicted for these kinds of activities. Most of the cases involved a person voting both by absentee ballot and in person. A few instances involved people voting both during early voting and on Election Day, which calls into question the proper marking and maintenance of the voting lists. In many instances, the person charged claimed not to have voted twice on purpose. A very small handful of cases involved a voter voting in more than one county and there was one substantiated case involving a person voting in more than one state. Other instances in which such efforts were alleged were disproved by officials.

In the case of voting in the name of a dead person, the problem lay in the voter registration list not being properly maintained, i.e. the person was still on the registration list as eligible to vote, and a person took criminal advantage of that. In total, the San Francisco Chronicle found five such cases in March 2004; the AP cited a newspaper analysis of five such persons in an Indiana primary in May 2004; and a senate committee found two people to have voted in the names of the dead in 2005.

As usual, there were a disproportionate number of such articles coming out of Florida. Notably, there were three articles out of Oregon, which has one hundred percent vote-by-mail.

Vote Buying

There were a surprising number of articles about vote buying cases. A few of these instances involved long-time investigations concentrated in three states (Illinois, Kentucky, and West Virginia). There were more official investigations, indictments and convictions/pleas in this area.

Deceptive Practices

In 2004 there were numerous reports of intentional disinformation about voting eligibility and the voting process meant to confuse voters about their rights and when and where to vote. Misinformation came in the form of flyers, phone calls, letters, and even people going door to door. Many of the efforts were reportedly targeted at minority communities. A disproportionate number of them came from key battleground states, particularly Florida, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. From the news reports found, only one of these instances was officially investigated, the case in Oregon involving the destruction of completed voter registration applications. There were no reports of prosecutions or any other legal proceeding.

Non-citizen Voting

There were surprisingly few articles regarding noncitizen registration and voting – just seven all together, in seven different states across the country. They were also evenly split between allegations of noncitizens registering and noncitizens voting. In one case, charges were filed against ten individuals. In another case, a judge in a civil suit found there was illegal noncitizen voting. Three instances prompted official investigations. Two cases, from this Nexis search, remained just allegations of noncitizen voting.

Felon Voting

Although there were only thirteen cases of felon voting, some of them involved large numbers of voters. Most notably, of course, are the cases that came to light in the Washington gubernatorial election contest (see Washington summary) and in Wisconsin (see Wisconsin summary). In several states, the main problem was the large number of ineligible felons that remained on the voting list.

Election Official Fraud

In most of the cases in which fraud by elections officials is suspected or alleged, it is difficult to determine whether it is incompetence or a crime. There are several cases of ballots gone missing, ballots unaccounted for and ballots ending up in a worker's possession. In two cases workers were said to have changed peoples' votes. The one instance in which widespread ballot box stuffing by elections workers was alleged was in Washington State. The judge in the civil trial of that election contest did not find that elections workers had committed fraud. Four of the cases are from Texas.

Recommendation

The consultants recommend that subsequent EAC research should include a Nexis search that specifically attempts to follow up on the cases for which no resolution is evident from this particular initial search.

CASE LAW RESEARCH

After reviewing over 40,000 cases from 2000 to the present, the majority of which came from appeals courts, the consultants found comparatively few applicable to this study. Of those that were applicable, the consultants found that no apparent thematic pattern emerges. However, it appears to them that the greatest areas of fraud and intimidation have shifted from past patterns of stealing votes to present problems with voter registration, voter identification, the proper delivery and counting of absentee and overseas ballots, provisional voting, vote buying, and challenges to felon eligibility.

Recommendation

Because so few cases provided a picture of these current problems, consultants suggest that subsequent EAC research include a review of state trial-level decisions.

PROJECT WORKING GROUP

Consultants and EAC worked together to select members for the Voting Fraud-Voter Intimidation Working Group that included election officials and representatives of advocacy groups and the legal community who have an interest and expertise in the subject matter. (See Attachment A for a list of members.) The working group is scheduled to convene at EAC offices on May 18, 2006 to consider the results of the preliminary research and to offer ideas for future EAC activities concerning this subject.

FINAL REPORT

After convening the project working group, the consultants will draft a final report summarizing the results of their research and the working group deliberations. This report will include recommendations for future EAC research related to this subject matter. The draft report will be reviewed by EAC and, after obtaining any clarifications or corrections deemed necessary, will be made available to the EAC Standards Board and EAC Board of Advisors for review and comment. Following this, a final report will be prepared.

Subject RE: Peer Review Group [REDACTED]

Tom-

Had a very good review and discussion of the PRG at this morning's Commissioner meeting.

Also, the Commissioners have marked their calendars for a conference call with the Eagleton/Moritz team on July 12 at 9:30 AM.

Several concerns were raised about the composition of the PRG and, after some discussion, I indicated that Eagleton will provide the EAC with a revised participant list, and with a more detailed description of the PRG's mission, goals, objectives, workplan and timelines for accomplishing its work.

The Vice Chair is concerned that there is not sufficient conservative representation on the PRG. I would suggest the team do more research to identify well-recognized conservative academics to put on the Group.

Further, the Commissioners recommend a tiered process in which the PRG will prepare a "dispassionate" analysis of the issues and draw some tentative conclusions. This analysis and these conclusions will then be vetted with a defined/select group of local election officials, and then, with a defined/select group of advocacy organizations.

It was also suggested that a final round of focus group meetings be held with a cross-section of these election officials, advocates and academics for an overall interactive reaction to the analysis and recommendations.

Hope this helps clarify concerns; I look forward to sharing your revisions to the PRG with them.

Tom-

I will be back to you early next week with EAC's feedback on this.

Our initial reaction is that the group needs to include some local and/or state-level election officials, who have first-hand experience with these issues.

We will get you additional names and reactions by mid-week next week.

Thanks

Subject Peer Review Group

Karen,

As you probably recall, one of the features of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group to look over our findings, conclusions and draft reports before we prepare final drafts for the EAC's review. The EAC asked that before recruiting members of the PRG we submit names for EAC's review. The aim, course, is to assemble a panel that is experienced, informed, and balanced.

Attached is a list of potential PRG members drawn from academia, the law, and non-profit organizations with interests in this area. Please look it over.

We may conclude that the PRG should also include two or three former government officials now in academia or related fields. We have a conference call with our partners at Moritz planned for tomorrow or Friday to decide a) if former officials should be included in the PRG and b) if so, who they should be. I'll keep you informed of our thinking as it develops.

Subject Eagleton Institute June 2005 Progress Report

Ms. Dyson,

Attached please find the June 2005 Progress Report for the project entitled, "Contract to Provide Research Assistance to the EAC for the Development of Voluntary Guidance on Provisional Voting and Voter Identification Procedures." If you have any questions regarding any part of this document please direct them to Tom O'Neill at [REDACTED]

The financial reporting for this project is performed by the Division of Grant and Contract Accounting at Rutgers University. A copy of this report was not made available to us in an electronic format. Hard copies of the Progress Report and Financial Report have been Fedex'ed to you this afternoon and should arrive to your attention tomorrow morning. Please let me know if you do not receive this package by tomorrow afternoon.

Thank you for your time, have a great evening.

INTRODUCTION

This report describes our progress from the start of the project on May 26 through June 30, 2005. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks; progress made; challenges encountered or anticipated; milestones reached; and projections for work to be completed in the coming month.

The objective of the contract is to assist the EAC in the collection, analysis and interpretation of information regarding HAVA provisional voting and voter identification requirements on which to base policy recommendations as guidance for the states in the conduct of the 2006 elections. The work has begun well, thanks to the clarity of the EAC's expectations and the strong collaboration by the scholars and staff at the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, and the Moritz College of Law at the Ohio State University.

The document report is divided into 4 sections that cover: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, Project Management, and the Financial Report. Each section references the specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract.

Please direct any questions or comments about this report to Tom O'Neill at:

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Tasks 3.4 – 3.9 in our contract relate to provisional voting. Work on the first of these must be complete before proceeding to later tasks. The work plan provides for two months to complete Task 3.4. Work on this task is on schedule.

Task 3.4: Collect and analyze state legislation, administrative procedures, and court cases. Understand the disparities and similarities of how provisional voting was implemented around the country.

LEGISLATION, REGULATIONS, AND LITIGATION

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation. When complete, this information will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task. It also will provide a base of understanding for the analysis of states' actual experience with provisional voting in 2004, for which the Eagleton team has lead responsibility.

Description: The Moritz team includes faculty, an executive administrator, a reference librarian, and several research assistants. It began immediately to compile statutes, case law and administrative procedures regarding Provisional Voting. The team has created a 50 state chart to summarize information on provisional voting. Categories for which state statutes and administrative procedures are being reviewed include:

- When did the state create a system compliant with the HAVA provisional ballot requirements?
- Who may be eligible to cast a provisional ballot? and
- What is the process for discovering whether your provisional ballot was counted in the election?

Progress: Initial research for 27 states, including the collection of provisional voting statutes is complete. This phase of the work is on schedule for completion by August 1. By the beginning of the week of July 11, Moritz's full time research assistant will move from voter identification research to gathering and organizing case law on provisional voting.

Challenges: Identifying the relevant statutes has been challenging; states use different terminology to codify provisional voting issues. Many states have scattered election law provisions throughout their codes. This variation from state to state makes creating a snapshot view across states a challenge. The team is meeting this challenge, and the work is on schedule.

The Eagleton team is constructing a narrative description for each state of the 50 states and the District of Columbia. It is also surveying a stratified random sample of county election officials to improve its understanding of actual practice in administering provisional voting.

Description: To construct the narratives, a researcher is examining newspaper accounts, state websites, and reports from third-party organizations to determine what information is publicly available about these issues during the 2004 election. To organize the information derived from this examination, we are creating an information system that will make it possible to catalog the basic information about the states (i.e. whether a state was new to provisional voting, the percentage of provisional votes counted, the method of notifying voters if their vote was counted, etc.) and combine it with Moritz's collection and analysis of statutes, regulations and litigation. The information system will make it possible to provide answers to such topics of particular interest listed in the contract as: How did preparation for provisional voting vary between states that had some form of provisional voting and those that did not?" and "How did litigation affect implementation?"

Progress: The researcher in this area has identified sources of information for every state and the collection process is well underway. Verified database entries for 24 states are complete, as are two state narrative summaries. This phase of the research is on schedule for completion by the end of July.

Challenges: A key challenge is determining just what states actually did in practice to verify and count provisional ballots. A second challenge has been determining the variations in policy within individual states. We are still wrestling with resolving this challenge, but the work is on schedule.

Work Plan: By the end of the July, the compilation of statutes, administrative regulations, and litigation will be complete and ready to be combined with the state-by-state narrative compiled by Eagleton. That will form the basis for the analysis and recommendation of alternative approaches for provisional voting required under Task 3.5.

SURVEY OF COUNTY ELECTION OFFICIALS

This survey will help the research team understand more about such key topics of interest as:

- "How did the experience of provisional voting vary between states that previously had some form of provisional voting and those where provisional voting was new in 2004?"
- "Did state and local processes provide for consistent counting of provisional ballots?"
- "Did local officials have a clear understanding of how to implement provisional voting?"

The survey results will supplement the information on these topics from the compilation of statutes, regulations and cases and from the narrative we are constructing for each state.

Description: The Center for Public Interest Polling (CPIP) at Eagleton is conducting a national survey of county election officials to measure several aspects of provisional voting. The survey is designed to determine the following factors related to provisional voting at the county level:

- The content and quality of instructions provided to county officials by the states
- The steps taken by county officials to pass information on to poll workers;
- Differences in experience between states new to provisional voting and those that had some form of provisional ballot before HAVA; and
- Recommendations to improve and/or reduce the need for provisional voting

Progress: The survey instrument is complete. CPIP has compiled a list of election officials at the county level and at the municipal or regional level for states that do not assign the election responsibility to counties. It was forwarded to the call center, Schulman, Ronca & Bucuvalas Inc., (SRBI) the week of July 5, 2005. A sample will be drawn the week of July 12. Human Subjects Approval from Rutgers University was granted July 12. Pre-notification letters will be sent to election officials around July 12-13, 2005. The EAC has reviewed a draft of this letter, which we have now revised to make clear that the survey will increase our understanding of the provisional voting process, but is not being conducted on behalf of the EAC.

Challenges: We made special efforts to expedite Human Subject Approval to meet the schedule in the work plan. In the absence of an existing, reliable database of local election officials, we had to create one especially for this project. In order to provide a valid comparison between the states new to provisional voting with those that previously had some form of provisional ballot we doubled the sample size from 200 to 400. This increase will require an increase in the budget for the survey from $15,000 to about $24,000. We intend to reallocate costs within the existing budget to make this improvement possible, and will submit a letter describing the reallocation to the EAC in mid-July.

The sample has been, and will continue to represent the biggest challenge in this survey. Compiling the sample required substantial coordination and research to determine the accuracy of the identity and contact information for potential respondents. The difficulty in determining the appropriate contact is attributed to variation in county election officials' titles, jurisdiction types, and state and county election structures across the country. In addition to the potential pitfalls of reaching the appropriate county official, another factor in actually making contact with this special population will be dependent upon the hours that they keep, and may be hindered by the summer season.

Work Plan: This questionnaire will be pre-tested by July 15, and will field July 18 through August 5, 2005. This is somewhat later than projected in the revised work plan, but the information will arrive in time to be considered in drafting the analysis and alternatives document required under Task 3.5.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

The contract lists 7 tasks (3.10 – 3.16) related to Voter Identification Requirements. During the reporting period, we have made substantial progress in the first two tasks, which constitute the information-gathering phase of the work on Voter ID. The research of Voter ID requirements is proceeding concurrently with our work on the experience of provisional voting.

Task 3.10: Legislation, regulations, and litigation

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation. When complete, this information will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task.

Description: A team of Election Law@Moritz faculty, executive administrator, a reference librarian, and several research assistants is compiling statutes on Voter Identification, and providing a summarized analysis of this research.

Progress: The Moritz team has created a 50-state chart to record data on voter identification. Categories for which state statutes and administrative regulations are being reviewed include: “Who is required to present ID”, “Types of ID required”, and “Consequences of having no ID”. We have completed the initial research for 45 states and have collected the voter identification statutes for those states. An Election Law@Moritz Fellow is conducting an academic literature review on voter identification. This literature review will help shape the analytical framework that will guide us when the compendium of statutes and administrative regulations is complete.

Challenges: Identifying the relevant statutes has been challenging because of the different terminology used from state to state to codify voter identification issues, and because many states have scattered election law provisions throughout their codes. This variety from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Projections: At the current rate, a draft of the voter identification chart should be complete on schedule, by the end of July. Work on the literature review will continue into August, but will be available to inform the analysis of alternative approaches for voter identification called for by Task 3.12 of the contract.

SUPPLEMENTS TO LEGAL ANALYSIS

To supplement the legal analysis, the Eagleton team is undertaking two research efforts: First, compiling information on the debate over voter in the states; and second, estimating the effect on turnout of voter id requirements. Tracking the continuing political debate over voter identification reveals that the relatively narrow HAVA requirements for voter identification have apparently sparked in many states a broader concern with more rigorous identification requirements for all voters. We are following these developments both to monitor possible secondary effects of HAVA on voter ID, and to provide a rich collection of alternative approaches for consideration.

Individual narratives for the states with significant activity in voter ID will provide a resource for understanding the wide range of experience in the 2004 election. The narratives will include an appraisal of the prevalence and nature of vote fraud, a focus of the concern with increasing the rigor of voter ID requirements. This work is on schedule to be completed by the end of July. The next key milestones will be the completion of the state database and drafting the first narratives.

VOTER ID AND TURNOUT ANALYSIS

The second supplemental analysis will provide objective information on a contentious feature of the debate over voter ID in the states: the effects of more rigorous voter ID regimes on voter turnout and the relationship between the voter ID regime and vote fraud. As part of this effort, Eagleton is undertaking a statistical analysis to gauge the effect of a state's voter ID regime on turnout, especially turnout by minority and elderly voters.

Description: We are creating a database and gathering statistics on the effects of state-level voter identification requirements on voter turnout at the county-level in the 2004 election. Analysis on the county-level will enable us to estimate the influence of ID requirements on various age groups, races, ethnicities and gender groups. We are compiling data from both the 2000 and 2004 Presidential elections to measure the effect that changes in ID requirements may have had on voter turnout through two national election cycles.

Progress: The structure of the database is complete. It contains demographic information from the Census, and turnout data from various sources. The researcher assigned to this task is devising the syntax that will be required to run the statistics when the dataset is complete. The methodology for this part of the study is complete, and the actual data collection will soon be finished.

Projection: We are waiting for the Census Bureau to release the 2004 County Demographic Estimates. We have ordered and await the arrival of 2 datasets that contain voter turnout and voter registration numbers on the county-level for both the 2000 and 2004 elections. Once these two sources of information are received, the researcher will insert this information into the existing database, clean up the dataset, and begin to run the statistics. By that point, the researcher will have separated the states into various ID-requirement groupings that have been determined by the team, which will require coordination with several other parts of the study. This work is on schedule. By the end of July, the researcher should have county-level and state-level statistics on the impact of each ID system upon turnout, analyzed through various demographic features on the county-level.

Task 3.11 Public meeting on Voter Identification Requirements

Description: We are working closely with EAC staff, particularly the General Counsel, to plan a half day public meeting on Voter ID requirements. Presentations at the meeting will form an important part of the information we are compiling about Voter ID requirements and the strengths and shortcomings of a range of alternative approaches.

Progress: We have recommended a focus on the debate over Voter ID now underway in the states. To provide a vivid picture of the debate, we have recommended that one panel include legislators on opposite sides of the issue from two different states. Our research identified Mississippi and Wisconsin as two states to focus on, and we have recommended specific legislators from each. We have discussed with staff adding a researcher to the panel to put the debate in Wisconsin and Mississippi in either a national or historic context. We also recommended two researchers from contrasting points of view, to address the effects of Voter ID provisions under HAVA and broader provisions that are now the subject of national debate. EAC staff recommended a panel of two state election directors to address the interaction of Voter ID with HAVA. We are awaiting a decision on our recommendations from EAC staff. We have no reason not to believe that the work is on schedule to be completed in time to organize a productive meeting on July 28.

Challenges: The date and location of this hearing has been changed twice since the beginning of the project. It was originally scheduled to take place in late June, but was rescheduled for July to allow the June hearing to focus on voting machine technology. The regular meeting was rescheduled for July 26 in Minneapolis, and was recently changed to July 28 in Pasadena. The changes in the scheduling of the July meeting have complicated our choice of panelists. More seriously, the changes mean that information from the hearing will not be available as early in the research process as contemplated in the contract. This timeframe will now require the team to summarize the hearing events at the same time that we are drafting the analysis and alternatives paper in early August.

Additionally, while our contract states that the "Contractor shall be responsible for all aspects of planning and conducting this hearing in consultation with the EAC," we have been asked only to make recommendations of topics and panelists, and the arrangements for the organization of the hearing are in other hands. This lack of clarity has caused some confusion and has delayed invitations to panelists. Thanks to frequent communication with members of the EAC, the process now seems to be working smoothly.

Projection: We believe the work is on schedule for completion in time to recruit the panelists for the July 28 hearing. Preparation of the hearing summary will likely be delayed because of the need to complete the analysis and alternatives paper.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

Immediately after announcement of the award of the contract, Eagleton and Moritz began supplementing the core group that had prepared to proposal to building a highly qualified team to undertake the work. That team was in place by mid June, just a few weeks after the contract award.

As described in the proposal, the direction of the project is the responsibility of a five-person committee of faculty and staff from Eagleton and Moritz, chaired by Dr. Ruth Mandel, Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics. Project Director Thomas O'Neill, a consultant to Eagleton, reports to this team and provides day-to-day guidance and coordination for the research. A weekly meeting of all the researchers engaged in the project if the primary means of coordinating the work. We have recently added an internal website to facilitate the review and revision of written materials.

Task 3.1 Update the Work Plan

The first task was completed on time with the submission of a detailed work plan and timeline. EAC staff requested that the work plan be supplemented with a Gantt chart created on MS Project, and we submitted that a few days later.

PEER REVIEW GROUP

Description: A feature of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group (PRG). The EAC indicated at our first meeting in May that it would review our recommendations for members of the PRG. Our initial vision of the PRG was a small group of scholars and representatives of advocacy organizations that would comment on the research design, review drafts of our analyses and reports, and, in general, identify areas of the research that should be strengthened and help us improve the breadth, depth and clarity of reports based on that research.

Progress: Upon reflection, the project team agreed that the PRG should not include representatives of advocacy groups. We concluded, as representatives they would feel obligated to act as advocates for positions already taken by their groups. While advocacy organizations should be consulted as stakeholders during the course of our work, they were unlikely to achieve the goals we had in mind for the PRG as a source of advice on research design, methodology, and analysis. We submitted a revised list of potential members, substantially comprised of academics, to EAC for review.

The EAC responded with suggestions concerning both the balance of the PRG's membership and the creation of additional committees to review our work. We answered with an analysis of the cost and time involved adopting the EAC's suggestions as well as with suggestions for a balanced selection of academics for the Peer Review Group. We have not received response on this correspondence from the EAC, and the recruitment of the group is on hold.

Challenges: Communications on this issue with the EAC have not been clear or timely. The PRG should be in place now to comment on our research design while there is still time to refine it. While we are confident in the quality of our work, the wisdom and perspective of the outstanding candidates we have proposed for membership would strengthen the analysis and reports of our work.

Projections: We have effectively brought these challenges to the attention of EAC staff and look forward to a resolution speedy enough to allow recruitment of the PRG's members before the end of the month. If we meet that goal, the work of the PRG will be about 2 weeks behind the milestones indicated in the work plan.

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and a website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law will be merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding provisional voting and voter identification.

Progress: The Moritz team has provided Eagleton staff with samples of the work that they are performing. An Eagleton staff member will be reviewing the content and formats of data from all supporting research and (re-)formatting once the work has been completed. The researchers and staff at Eagleton have created a shared folder on the Institute's server for the safe storage of work and access for those staff members. All of this work is being reviewed by the project team to ensure that a broad survey is being performed.

Challenges: There are no evident challenges to this task at this time.

Projections: By the end of July 2005, much of the above referenced research will have been completed with respective materials and charts near completion. At that time, staff at Eagleton will review, combine and format all documents and materials in preparation for our final reporting to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: A trial Intranet for the project became available during the week of June 26. The Intranet will facilitate the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

Progress: After meetings with staff members of Rutgers University Computer Services (RUCS) and subsequent submission of a proposal by RUCS for technical support and hosting of the Intranet and the evaluation of alternative commercial services, the project team decided at its June 28th meeting to publish the Intranet through www.intranets.com,

one of the leading commercial services. This decision was based on lower costs and earlier publication schedules than offered under the RUCS proposal. The Intranet services were evaluated during a free trial period, which demonstrated the ease of design and navigation of the proposed service.

Challenges: There are no immediate challenges to completion of this task by the timeframe specified below.

Projections: Design, testing and publication of initial content of the Intranet service is continuing, with all participants expected to be provided access by July 8, 2005.

FINANCIAL REPORT

The financial reporting for this project is supervised and prepared by the Division of Grant and Contract Accounting (DGCA) at Rutgers. Financial reporting on grant accounts is limited to actual expenses that have been incurred during the reporting period. Given that the report reflects the first month of the project, several procedures for payment of subcontractors on the project were initiated. Expenses related to those members of the team are not reflected in this report because they have not yet been incurred.

Our contact at DGCA is: Constance Bornheimer, (732) 932-0165, EXT. 2235.

A detail of expenses incurred from project inception through June 30, 2005, is attached.

INTRODUCTION

This report describes our progress from July 1 through July 31, 2005. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks; progress made; challenges encountered or anticipated; milestones reached; and projections for work to be completed in the coming month.

The effort this month continued to focus on research for the analysis and alternatives paper, including the compilation of Provisional Voting statutes, regulations, and litigation from the 50 states. We also prepared and delivered testimony at the EAC's regular monthly meeting in Pasadena on July 28.

The data collection, analysis, and compilation are all on schedule. Because of delays in agreeing on the composition of the Peer Review Group with EAC, however, the actual completion and submission of the analysis and alternatives paper to the EAC will most likely be delayed about a week beyond the target date in the work plan. We are scheduled to discuss the draft paper and guidance document prior to submission, with the EAC on September 6, and the final draft cannot be completed until several days after that date.

The document report is divided into 4 sections that cover: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, Project Management, and the Financial Report. Each section references the specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract.

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Tasks 3.4 – 3.9 in our contract relate to provisional voting. Work on the first of these must be complete before proceeding to later tasks. Task 3.4 was completed this month.

Task 3.4: Collect and analyze state legislation, administrative procedures, and court cases. Understand the disparities and similarities of how provisional voting was implemented around the country.

LEGISLATION, REGULATIONS, AND LITIGATION

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation. This information constitutes the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task. It also will provide a base of understanding for the analysis of states' actual experience with provisional voting in 2004, for which the Eagleton team has lead responsibility.

Description: The Moritz team has created a 50-state chart to summarize information on provisional voting, compiled statutes, case law and administrative procedures regarding Provisional Voting.

Progress: The 50-state (plus District of Columbia) chart created to collect data on provisional voting is complete. We have collected the statutes for all states. State by state summaries of provisional voting have been written for 47 states and D.C. A memorandum summarizing provisional voting litigation is complete. The collection of the documents associated with the litigation is nearing completion.

Challenges: The variety in the form of provisional voting legislation from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: The remaining 3 state summaries of provisional voting will be completed by August 8. Analysis of all the information, data, and survey results concerning provisional voting data will be performed in August.

PREPARATION FOR AND EXPERIENCE WITH PROVISIONAL VOTING

The Eagleton team has researched and compiled a narrative of each state's experience with provisional voting in 2004. At the end of July the survey of 400 local election officials was nearing its end, and – as of this writing – is now complete with an analysis and report in draft form. We will rely on the survey results to improve our understanding of actual practice in administering provisional voting, including the steps local officials took to prepare for the election.

PROVISIONAL VOTING NARRATIVES

Description: To construct the narratives, a researcher examined newspaper accounts, state websites, and reports from third-party organizations to gather information on the experience with provisional voting in the 2004 election. To organize the information derived from this examination, we created an information system that catalogues information about the states (i.e. whether a state was new to provisional voting, the percentage of provisional votes counted, the method of notifying voters if their vote was counted, etc.) and combined it with Moritz's collection and analysis of statutes, regulations and litigation.

Progress: The state-by-state database is complete, as is a first draft of all state narratives. This work has been shared with the larger team and is being reviewed currently in preparation for constructing analysis and recommendation of alternative approaches for provisional voting required under Task 3.5.

Work Plan: In the next month, revisions of the narratives will be complete. In addition to this research, we will expand upon vote fraud research and examine further the relationship between instances of vote fraud and ensuing election reforms.

SURVEY OF COUNTY ELECTION OFFICIALS

Description: The Center for Public Interest Polling (CPIP) at Eagleton conducted a national survey of county election officials to measure several aspects of provisional voting. The survey was designed to determine the following factors related to provisional voting at the county (or equivalent election jurisdiction) level:

- The content and quality of instructions provided to county officials by the states;
- The steps taken by county officials to pass information on to poll workers;
- Differences in experience between states new to provisional voting and those that had some form of provisional ballot before HAVA; and
- Recommendations to improve and/or reduce the need for provisional voting.

Progress: The fielding and initial analysis of the survey results are complete.

Work Plan: The information derived from the survey will be considered in drafting the analysis and alternatives document required under Task 3.5.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

The contract lists 7 tasks (3.10 – 3.16) related to Voter Identification Requirements. During the reporting period, we have completed tasks 3.10 and 3.11. The research on Voter ID requirements is proceeding concurrently with our work on the experience of provisional voting.

Task 3.10: Legislation, regulations, and litigation

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation with regard to Voter Identification Requirements. When complete, this information will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task.

Description: The Moritz team has compiled statutes on Voter Identification, and will provide a summarized analysis of this research to the project team for review.

Progress: The chart created to collect data on voter identification is complete and is now being reviewed. Voter identification statutes are being collected.

Challenges: Identifying the relevant statutes has been challenging because of the different terminology used from state to state to codify voter identification issues, and because many states have scattered election law provisions throughout their codes. This variety from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: Review of the voter identification chart, the collection of the voter identification statutes, and the writing of the state by state summaries will be completed by the end of August.

SUPPLEMENTS TO LEGAL ANALYSIS

To supplement the legal analysis, the Eagleton team is undertaking two research efforts: First, compiling information on the debate over voter ID in the states; and second, estimating the effect on turnout of voter ID requirements. Tracking the continuing political debate over voter identification reveals that the relatively narrow HAVA requirements for voter identification have apparently sparked in many states a broader concern with more rigorous identification requirements for all voters. We are following these developments both to monitor possible secondary effects of HAVA on voter ID, and to provide a rich collection of alternative approaches for consideration.

Individual narratives for the states with significant activity in voter ID will provide a resource for understanding the wide range of experience in the 2004 election. The narratives will include an appraisal of the prevalence and nature of vote fraud, a focus of the concern with increasing the rigor of voter ID requirements. The next key milestones will be the completion of the state database and drafting the first narratives.

VOTER ID AND TURNOUT ANALYSIS

The second supplemental analysis will provide objective information on a contentious feature of the debate over voter ID in the states: the effects of more rigorous voter ID regimes on voter turnout and the relationship between the voter ID regime and vote fraud. As part of this effort, Eagleton is undertaking a statistical analysis to gauge the effect of a state's voter ID regime on turnout, especially turnout by minority and elderly voters.

Description: We are creating a database and gathering statistics on the effects of state-level voter identification requirements on voter turnout at the county-level in the 2004 election.

Progress: The collection of data for the Voter ID-Turnout analysis is complete. The assembled database contains population demographic data, voter registration data and voter turnout data from all 50 states, 3113 Counties, and the District of Columbia. It also contains exit poll data from the 50 states, providing demographic data of voter turnout. The analysis of that data is well underway.

Challenges: The initial methodology that was devised to investigate the questions involved in this part of the study proved insufficient, as the necessary data was unobtainable (the Census Bureau has not yet released their 2004 data). After re-developing an appropriate methodology, the necessary data has been assembled, we have resumed the analysis of this data.

Projection: The analysis of the impact that voter identification requirements have upon voter turnout should be completed around mid-August.

Task 3.11 Public meeting on Voter Identification Requirements

Description: In early July, we continued our efforts to identify specific Voter ID topics or issues and panelists who could shed light on them. We recommended a focus on the debate over Voter ID now underway in the states. To provide a vivid picture of the debate, we recommended that one panel include specific legislators on opposite sides of the issue from two different states, Mississippi and Wisconsin. We also discussed adding a researcher to the panel in order to place the debate in a national or historical context. We also recommended a panel of two academic researchers with contrasting points of view, to address the effects of Voter ID provisions under HAVA. In response to our suggestions, EAC staff recommended a panel of two state election directors to address the interaction of Voter ID with HAVA.

By mid-July, the EAC had decided which topics and speakers should be invited, however most of those speakers proved unable to attend.

Progress: Tom O'Neill and Dan Tokaji attended the EAC Public Meeting held in Pasadena on July 28. Their presentations at the meeting described the progress of the research and our developing perspective on how to assess the quality of the provisional voting process in the states and identify possible steps for improvement.

Challenges: The changes in the scheduling of the July meeting delayed and ultimately made it impossible to assemble a panel, from which we could derive substantive insight into voter identification issues as they are playing out in the states. Additionally, due to the date of the hearing, the information from the hearing was not available as early in the research process as contemplated in the contract.

Projection: Preparation of the hearing summary will likely be delayed, due to the team's focus on preparation of the analysis and alternatives paper.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

PEER REVIEW GROUP

Description: A feature of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group (PRG). The EAC indicated at our first meeting in May that it would review our recommendations for members of the PRG. Our initial vision of the PRG was a small group of scholars and representatives of advocacy organizations that would comment on the research design, review drafts of our analyses and reports, and, in general, identify areas of the research that should be strengthened and help us improve the breadth, depth and clarity of reports based on that research.

Progress: Upon reflection, the project team agreed that the PRG should not include representatives of advocacy groups. We concluded that as representatives they would feel obligated to act as advocates for positions already taken by their groups. While advocacy organizations might be consulted as stakeholders during the course of our work, they were unlikely to achieve the goals we had in mind for the PRG as a source of advice on research design, methodology, and analysis. We submitted a revised list of potential members, substantially comprised of academics, to the EAC for review.

The EAC responded with suggestions concerning both the balance of the PRG's membership and the creation of additional committees to review our work. We provided an analysis of the cost and time involved in adopting the EAC's suggestions as well as with suggestions for a balanced selection of academics for the Peer Review Group. In the end, the EAC determined that Eagleton should appoint a balanced Peer Review Group of its own choosing. Initial phone calls were made to all members of that group by the end of July, and written invitations and descriptions of the process have gone to all possible members who had indicated their interest in serving.

Challenges: Communications on this issue with the EAC were not clear or timely. The purpose of the PRG is to review our work, and to comment on our research design, which is well underway. We had planned to have the PRG in place early enough in the project to enable them to provide feedback, including the research design. While we are confident in the quality of our work, the experience and perspective of the Peer Review Group will strengthen our analysis and recommendations as we find a way to receive its critique in the more limited time now available. The delay in creating the Peer Review Group will result in a delay in the completion of the final draft of the analysis and alternatives paper and in the preliminary guidance document.

Projections: The work of the PRG will be about 2 weeks behind the milestones indicated in the work plan.

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and an internal website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law will be merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding provisional voting and voter identification.

Progress: The Moritz team has provided Eagleton staff with all completed work. An Eagleton staff member reviews the content and formats of data from all supporting research and will (re-)format once the work has been completed for the compendium and reports submitted to the EAC. The researchers and staff at Eagleton have created a shared folder on the Institute's server for the safe storage of work and access for those staff members. All of this work is being reviewed by the project team to ensure that a broad survey is being performed.

Projections: By the end of July 2005, much of the above referenced research has been completed. The entire project team has begun the process of reviewing all work, and will combine and format all documents and materials in preparation for our final reporting to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: All project team members have signed on to the Intranet site. The Intranet facilitates the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

Progress: Project team members regularly post drafts, completed materials and spreadsheets online for internal review. The intranet has been extremely helpful to team members and serves as an internal website with announcements and important documents readily available to all team members.

Tom-

Thank you for sharing this list of your Peer Review Group members, to-date. I will share this list with the Commissioners and will be certain to let your know of their feedback, if any.

I will also be back in touch regarding Eagleton's research around voter fraud and the research project EAC will be undertaking, this fall, around voting fraud and voter intimidation. The EAC is presently in the process of finalizing a work and staff plan for this project and once it is completed, I will be certain to brief you on it.

In the meantime, EAC staff and several of the Commissioners looks forward to meeting with the Eagleton/Moritz team on September 6 at 1:30 PM.

Karen,

Attached is a report on the status of recruitment of members of the Peer Review Group. We extended 9 invitations. We have four confirmed members, one reluctant turn-down, one who has yet to respond to an initial inquiry, and are awaiting confirmation from 3 others who initially agreed. Please let me know if you need additional information.

Subject August Progress Report - Eagleton Institute of Politics

Hi Karen,

Attached is the August progress report in fulfillment of our Contract to Provide Research Assistance to the EAC for the Development of Voluntary Guidance on Provisional Voting and Voter Identification Procedures. Please note, as per your instructions earlier this month, that the financial report will be sent via Fedex under separate cover to: Ms. Dianna Scott, Administrative Officer, EAC. Also attached to the progress report is a finalized list of our Peer Review Group members. If you have any questions regarding this report, please contact Tom O'Neill [REDACTED]

Have a great day,
Lauren Vincelli

OUTLINE

- Introduction
- Provisional Voting
 - Task 3.5
- Voter Identification Requirements
 - Task 3.10
 - Task 3.11
- Project Management
 - Task 3.1
- Financial Report

INTRODUCTION

This report describes our progress from August 1 through August 31, 2005. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks; progress made; challenges encountered or anticipated; milestones reached; and projections for work to be completed in the coming month.

Research on Provisional Voting and a draft of reports on the analysis and alternatives were substantially completed in preparation for the September 6 briefing for the EAC. Important reports such as the National Survey of Local Election Officials' Experience with Provisional Voting; Statistical Review Provisional Voting in the 2004 Election; State-by-state Narrative of Developments in Provisional Voting; and the compilation of Provisional Voting statutes, regulations, and litigation from the 50 states, were all completed in August.

We made further progress on recruiting a balanced and authoritative Peer Review Group (which, as this report is written, is receiving all the documents listed above for review). Ingrid Reed of Eagleton will coordinate the work of the Peer Review Group. A list of the members of the Peer Review Group is attached.

This report is divided into 3 sections: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, and Project Management. Each section references specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract. The Financial Report will be sent separately by the Rutgers Division of Grant and Contract Accounting.

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Tasks 3.4 – 3.9 in our contract relate to provisional voting. Work on the first of these must be complete before proceeding to later tasks. Task 3.4 was completed in August, and Task 3.5 is well underway.

Task 3.5: Analysis and Alternative Approaches. Assess the potential, problems, and challenges of provisional voting and develop alternative means to achieve the goals of provisional voting.

LEGISLATION, REGULATIONS, AND LITIGATION

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation. This information constitutes the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task. It has provided a base of understanding for the analysis of states' actual experience with provisional voting in 2004, for which the Eagleton team has lead responsibility.

Description: The Moritz team has created a 50-state chart to summarize information on provisional voting, compiled statutes, case law and administrative procedures regarding Provisional Voting and is near completion with this research.

Progress: We completed the state by state summaries of provisional voting in August. Also complete is a memorandum outlining provisional voting legislative changes since the 2004 election. This material was sent to the EAC as part of the package for briefing on September 6.

Challenges: The variety in the form and frequency of provisional voting legislation from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: The analysis of all the information, data, and survey results concerning provisional voting data will be completed in September, on schedule. The alternatives document should also be complete in September, pending response from the EAC on which direction those alternatives should follow.

PREPARATION FOR AND EXPERIENCE WITH PROVISIONAL VOTING

The Eagleton team has researched and compiled a narrative of each state's experience with provisional voting in 2004. The report findings from the survey of 400 local election officials is now complete. The survey results improve our understanding of actual practice in administering provisional voting, including the steps local officials took to prepare for the election.

014250

PROVISIONAL VOTING NARRATIVES

Description: To construct the narratives, a researcher examined newspaper accounts, state websites, and reports from third-party organizations to gather information on the experience with provisional voting in the 2004 election. To organize the information derived from this examination, we created an information system that catalogues information about the states (i.e. whether a state was new to provisional voting, the percentage of provisional votes counted, the method of notifying voters if their vote was counted, etc.) and combined it with Moritz's collection and analysis of statutes, regulations and litigation.

Progress: A state-by-state narrative of developments in Provisional Voting is complete and has been distributed to the EAC and the Peer Review Group. This work has been crucial to the process of constructing our draft analysis and recommendation of alternative approaches for provisional voting required under Task 3.5.

Challenges: The primary obstacle to constructing the narratives was difficulty in communicating and obtaining necessary information from various state officials. As a result, the narratives underwent multiple revisions in order to incorporate the most up-to-date material available. Had the Election Day Study been available, this task would probably have been simplified considerably.

Work Plan: We completed revisions of the narratives.

SURVEY OF COUNTY ELECTION OFFICIALS

Description: The Center for Public Interest Polling (CPIP) at Eagleton conducted a national survey of county election officials to measure several aspects of provisional voting.

Progress: The analysis of the survey results and findings report are complete.

Work Plan: We used the information from the survey in drafting the analysis and alternatives document required under Task 3.5.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

The contract lists 7 tasks (3.10 – 3.16) related to Voter Identification Requirements. The research on Voter ID requirements is proceeding concurrently with our work on the experience of provisional voting, and is becoming the principal focus of our research.

Task 3.10: Legislation, regulations, and litigation

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation with regard to Voter Identification Requirements. This collection of material is nearing completion. It will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task.

Description: The Moritz team has compiled statutes on Voter Identification, and will provide a summarized analysis of this research to the project team for review.

Progress: We are refining the 50 state (plus District of Columbia) chart of data on voter identification. So far collected are voter identification statutes for 35 states. Summaries of the existing voter identification statutes have been written for forty states.

Challenges: Identifying the relevant statutes has been challenging because of the different terminology used from state to state to codify voter identification issues, and because many states have scattered election law provisions throughout their codes. This variety from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: The state by state voter identification statute summaries will be completed for the remaining ten states and D.C. and the review of the chart will be completed. Analysis of voter identification data will begin.

SUPPLEMENTS TO LEGAL ANALYSIS

To supplement the legal analysis, the Eagleton team is undertaking two research efforts: First, compiling information on the debate over voter ID in the states; and second, estimating the effect on turnout of different voter ID regimes. Tracking the continuing political debate over voter identification reveals that the relatively narrow HAVA requirements for voter identification have apparently sparked in many states a broader concern, and a sharp political debate over rigorous identification requirements for all voters. The research follows these developments both to monitor possible secondary effects of HAVA on voter ID, and to provide a rich collection of alternative approaches for consideration.

Individual narratives for the states with significant activity in voter ID will provide a resource for understanding the wide range of experience in the 2004 election. The narratives will include an appraisal of the prevalence and nature of vote fraud, a focus of the concern with increasing the rigor of voter ID requirements. The next key milestones will be the completion of the state database and drafting the first narratives.

VOTER ID AND TURNOUT ANALYSIS

The second supplemental analysis will provide objective information on a contentious feature of the debate over voter ID in the states: the effects of more rigorous voter ID regimes on voter turnout and the relationship between the voter ID regime and vote fraud. As part of this effort, Eagleton is undertaking a statistical analysis to gauge the effect of a state's voter ID regime on turnout, especially turnout by minority and elderly voters.

Description: We are creating a database and gathering statistics on the effects of state-level voter identification requirements on voter turnout at the county-level in the 2004 election.

Progress: The collection of data for the Voter ID-Turnout analysis is complete. The assembled database contains population demographic data, voter registration data and voter turnout data from all 50 states, 3113 Counties, and the District of Columbia. We have also utilized exit poll data collected on Election Day 2004 as a resource for understanding the demographics of voter turnout. The analysis of that data is underway.

Challenges: The main challenges to this task include gathering the complete set of changes to Voter ID laws over the past 5 years, and then incorporating those changes into a sound statistical methodology.

Projection: We will continue to work towards resolving the methodology issue, and ultimately produce a final report on this subject. The analysis of the impact that voter identification requirements have upon voter turnout should be completed around mid-September.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

PEER REVIEW GROUP

Description: A feature of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group (PRG). The Peer Review Group will review our research and methodology and provide valuable feedback and suggestions for the direction of our work.

Progress: The composition of the Peer Review Group has been determined and the membership has been submitted to the EAC. Additionally, as of the date of this report all PRG members have received their first mailing, which included several reports from our research, and a draft of our analysis and alternatives outline for their review.

Challenges: Our timeline for circulating and discussing our research with the PRG has been compromised due to delays in completing the recruitment of members of the group.

Projections: We are in the process of scheduling our first conference call with PRG members for the week of Sept. 19, 2005.

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and an internal website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law is being merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding provisional voting and voter identification.

Progress: At this point in the research process, many documents are complete after a lengthy process of circulating drafts among team members. As we near the end of the Provisional Voting research and move into the Voter Identification research, we will re-evaluate the volume of files contained in the Information System and update the system.

Projections: The entire project team continues to review all project drafts, and will staff members combine and format all documents and materials in preparation for our final reporting to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: All project team members have signed on to the Intranet site. The Intranet facilitates the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

Progress: Project team members regularly post drafts, completed materials and spreadsheets online for internal review. The intranet has been extremely helpful to team members and serves as an internal website with announcements and important documents readily available to all team members.

FINANCIAL REPORT

The financial reporting for this project is supervised and prepared by the Division of Grant and Contract Accounting (DGCA) at Rutgers. Financial reporting on grant accounts is limited to actual expenses that have been incurred during the reporting period. Our contact at DGCA is: Constance Bornheimer, (732) 932-0165, EXT. 2235.

A detail of expenses incurred from project August 1 - August 31, 2005, will be sent under separate cover to: Ms. Dianna Scott, Administrative Officer, EAC .

Karen,

Attached is the Progress Report for October. Please note that this report includes an attachment showing how our study classifies each state on key variables, such as counting out-of-precinct ballots, requirements for ballot evaluation, and other variables. It also displays how the data we used differs for some states for the vote counts reported by the Election Day Survey. We believe that our data is more accurate and complete (see for example the data for New Mexico and Pennsylvania).

I look forward to responding to any questions or concerns you or others at the EAC may have.

- Financial Report

INTRODUCTION

This report describes our progress from October 1 through October 31, 2005. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks; progress made; challenges encountered or anticipated; milestones reached; and projections for work to be completed in the coming month.

In October we focused on finalizing our Provisional Voting analysis paper, including the development of recommendations to the EAC for a draft guidance document and best practices. These policy prescriptions are based on our research and the comments of the Peer Review Group. We completed a careful review of our data to reconcile it with other sources and identify the latest, most reliable information to use in the analysis. (See the attachment to this Progress Report for the details.) The importance of this demanding effort was described in September's Progress Report.

Also in October we revised the schedule for the project in light of the additional time that has been needed for review of earlier drafts by the EAC and the late completion of the Election Day Study. We will seek a meeting with the EAC in the next several weeks to confer about the schedule to complete the project and alternative approaches that could speed the conclusion of our work.

We will submit to the EAC a final draft of our report, a preliminary guidance document, and draft best practices before Thanksgiving. We project that EAC will take 3 to 4 weeks to review and react to that final draft. And we understand that after its review, the EAC will decide if it should move towards issuing a Guidance Document or recommending best practices. If the EAC does decide to issue a Guidance Document on Provisional Voting, the time needed for a review by the advisory boards is likely to delay a public hearing until early February.

014270

This report is divided into 3 sections: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, and Project Management. Each section references specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract. The Financial Report will be sent separately by the Rutgers Division of Grant and Contract Accounting.

Please direct questions or comments about this report to [REDACTED] or by [REDACTED]

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Tasks 3.4 – 3.9 in our contract relate to Provisional Voting. Work on the first of these must be complete before proceeding to later tasks. Task 3.4 was completed in August, Tasks 3.5 and 3.6 are nearing completion.

Task 3.5: Analysis and Alternative Approaches. Assess the potential, problems, and challenges of Provisional Voting and develop alternative means to achieve the goals of Provisional Voting.

LEGISLATION, REGULATIONS, AND LITIGATION

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation. This information constitutes the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task. It has provided a base of understanding for the analysis of states' actual experience with Provisional Voting in 2004, for which the Eagleton team has lead responsibility.

Description: The Moritz team has created a 50-state chart to summarize information on Provisional Voting, compiled statutes, case law and administrative procedures regarding Provisional Voting and has completed this research.

Progress: We have completed the memorandum outlining Provisional Voting legislative changes since the 2004 election and we are continuing to clarify the laws prior to these changes.

Challenges: The variety in the form and frequency of Provisional Voting legislation from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: The final analysis will be sent to the EAC by Thanksgiving.

014271

PREPARATION FOR AND EXPERIENCE WITH PROVISIONAL VOTING

The Eagleton team has researched and compiled a narrative of each state's experience with Provisional Voting in 2004. The report findings from the survey of 400 local election officials are now complete. The survey results have proven to be instrumental in shaping our understanding of actual practice in administering Provisional Voting, including the steps local officials took to prepare for the election.

PROVISIONAL VOTING NARRATIVES

Description: To construct the narratives, a researcher examined newspaper accounts, state websites, and reports from third-party organizations to gather information on the experience with Provisional Voting in the 2004 election. To organize the information derived from this examination, we created an information system that catalogues information about the states (i.e. whether a state was new to Provisional Voting, the percentage of provisional votes counted, the method of notifying voters if their vote was counted, etc.) and combined it with Moritz's collection and analysis of statutes, regulations and litigation.

Progress: We completed a state-by-state narrative of developments in Provisional Voting and distributed it to the EAC and the PRG. This work has been helpful in understanding the context of the data collected on provisional voting from the states.

Challenges: The primary obstacle to constructing the narratives was difficulty in communicating and obtaining necessary information from various state officials. As a result, the narratives underwent several revisions to incorporate up-to-date and reliable information. Now that so many other analyses, including the Election Day Survey, have been released, we were challenged by different interpretations of the same basic facts. But the reconciliation of interpretation and data collection has been invaluable in establishing rigor in our report.

Work Plan: We completed revisions of the narratives incorporating comments from the PRG and addressing any discrepancies between our findings and other interpretations of similar information included in other studies.

PROVISIONAL VOTING STATISTICAL ANALYSIS

Description: During October the Eagleton research team continued to check its statistical analysis, and worked to reconcile the classifications of this analysis (such as states counting only those provisional ballots cast within the proper precinct versus states that counted ballots cast within the proper county) with the classification made in other parts of this study or in other studies (such as the Election Day Study or Electionline reports).

Progress: The effort to double check all of the classifications used in the study is complete. The results of this effort are displayed in the attachment to this progress report, "Characteristics of the Provisional Voting Process -- Classification of the States," beginning on page 9. Only Delaware and Arkansas remain unclear in regard to one of the measures, and both states have been contacted to receive clarification in this area.

Challenges: The difficulties encountered have been a result of communication delays and time constraints. Some states have been more responsive to our inquiries about their practices than others. Overall, this is not an irresolvable problem but it does slow the process of completion down.

Work Plan: By early-November the final revision of the statistical analysis, which includes full reconciliation of all data within the study, will be complete. The reconciliation of data is displayed in the attachment to this progress report.

SURVEY OF COUNTY ELECTION OFFICIALS

Description: The Eagleton Center for Public Interest Polling (CPIP) conducted a national survey of county election officials to measure several aspects of Provisional Voting.

Progress: The analysis of the survey results and findings report is complete. As a result of the critique by the PRG, the research team is revising and clarifying the descriptions of the survey design and sample selection process to make the research methods more transparent.

Work Plan: We used the information from the survey in drafting the analysis and alternatives document required under Task 3.5. We will include necessary clarifications regarding survey design and sample selection in the final analysis and alternatives document.

--

The report and recommendations now nearing completion constitutes the draft preliminary guidance document. Based on our conversation with the EAC, the draft gives the EAC the option of proceeding with a guidance document or issuing recommendations to the state for best practices, recommendations that would not constitute voluntary guidance. Before proceeding to Task 3.7 (revise the guidance document for publication) or 3.8 (arrange a public hearing on the draft guidance), we will await the EAC's decision on how to proceed.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

The contract lists 7 tasks (3.10 – 3.16) related to Voter Identification Requirements. The research on Voter ID requirements is proceeding concurrently with our work on the experience of Provisional Voting, and is becoming the principal focus of our research.

Task 3.10: Legislation, regulations, and litigation

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation with regard to Voter Identification Requirements. This collection of material is nearing completion. It will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task.

Description: The Moritz team has compiled statutes on Voter Identification, and will provide a summarized analysis of this research to the project team for review.

Progress: The 50 State (plus the District of Columbia) chart has been completed, the voter identification statutes have been collected for all states and D.C., and summaries of the existing voter identification statutes have been written for all states and D.C.

Challenges: Identifying the relevant statutes has been challenging because of the different terminology used from state to state to codify voter identification issues, and because many states have scattered election law provisions throughout their codes. This variety from state to state makes creating a snap-shot view across states a challenge.

Work Plan: Analysis of voter identification data has begun and will increasingly become the central focus of our work.

SUPPLEMENTS TO LEGAL ANALYSIS

To supplement the legal analysis, the Eagleton team is undertaking two research efforts: First, compiling information on the debate over voter ID in the states; and second, estimating the effect on turnout of different voter ID regimes. Tracking the continuing political debate over voter identification reveals that the relatively narrow HAVA requirements for voter identification have apparently sparked in many states a broader concern and a sharp political debate over rigorous identification requirements for all voters. The research follows these developments both to monitor possible secondary effects of HAVA on voter ID, and to provide a rich collection of alternative approaches for consideration.

014274

VOTER ID AND TURNOUT ANALYSIS

The second supplemental analysis will provide objective information on a contentious feature of the debate over voter ID in the states: the effects of more rigorous voter ID regimes on voter turnout and the relationship between the voter ID regime and vote fraud. As part of this effort, Eagleton is undertaking a statistical analysis to gauge the effect of a state's voter ID regime on turnout, especially turnout by minority and elderly voters.

Description: We have created a database and gathered statistics on the effects of state-level voter identification requirements on voter turnout at the county-level in the 2004 election

Progress: The collection of data for the Voter ID-Turnout analysis is complete. The assembled database contains population demographic data, voter registration data and voter turnout data from all 50 states, 3113 Counties, and the District of Columbia. We have also used exit poll data collected on Election Day 2004 as a resource for understanding the demographics of voter turnout.

Challenges: The analysis of these data had been postponed until the data reconciliation of Provisional Voting is complete. As a result of the extensive revision and data reconciliation efforts aimed at the Provisional Voting section of our work VID had been temporarily placed on hold. We are now beginning data analysis on the impact of voter identification requirements on voter turnout.

Work Plan: The analysis of the impact that voter identification requirements have upon voter turnout should be completed by early December. Early January is our target to deliver the draft report and outline of alternative policies to the Peer Review Group. In mid January, the EAC would receive a draft report and recommendations that take into account the comments of the PRG.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

PEER REVIEW GROUP

Description: A feature of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group (PRG). It reviews our research and methodology and provides valuable feedback and suggestions for the direction of our work.

Progress: Eagleton has stayed in touch with members of the Peer Review Group since the September 21st conference call, and has solicited their final comments on the Provisional Voting research. During October, we telephoned two members who did not participate in the conference call to confirm their commitment to serving as members of the Peer Review Group. Profess Guy Charles affirmed his interest. Professor Pamela Karlan did not return the call. The revisions in the schedule for the project have now made it possible to begin the process of scheduling a meeting of the PRG to consider our draft report and recommendations on Voter Identification Issues. We anticipate that meeting will take place the second week of January.

Challenges: No new challenges were encountered during October.

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and an internal website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law is being merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding Provisional Voting and voter identification.

Progress: At this point in the research process, many documents are complete after a lengthy process of circulating drafts among team members. We have reorganized our system by separating final drafts from earlier versions of documents, discarding dated files contained in the Information System, and updating the system as a whole. Upon their completion, new documents continue to be added.

Projections: The entire project team continues to use the Information System which contains the above referenced research, in working toward the preparation for our final reports to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: All project team members have signed on to the Intranet site, and regularly post drafts, completed materials and spreadsheets online for internal review. The Intranet facilitates the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

FINANCIAL REPORT

The financial reporting for this project is supervised and prepared by the Division of Grant and Contract Accounting (DGCA) at Rutgers. Financial reporting on grant accounts is limited to actual expenses that have been incurred during the reporting period. Our contact at DGCA is: Constance Bornheimer, (732) 932-0165, EXT. 2235.

A detail of expenses incurred from project October 1- October 31, 2005, will be sent under separate cover to: Ms. Dianna Scott, Administrative Officer at the EAC.

ATTACHMENT TO OCTOBER PROGRESS REPORT
Characteristics of the Provisional Voting Process
Classification of the States

Our research on provisional voting divided the various states into several categories to allow an assessment of how different factors may have influenced the process of casting and counting provisional ballots. This analysis was conducted before the release of the Election Day Study, and the categories we used may differ in some respects from its work. The categories analyzed here are:

1. New vs. Old (states that used a provisional ballot before the 2004 election)
2. Use of a statewide database of registered voters vs. no use of a statewide database
3. Counting out-of-precinct ballots vs. not counting out-of-precinct ballots
4. Voter identification requirements
5. Method used to verify provisional ballots
6. Levels of provisional ballots cast and counted

We first assigned states within these categories based on classifications done by Electionline.org in its studies. The Electionline data was the only published information available at the time of our research. We reviewed the Electionline data carefully, and, in select cases, updated it with new, detailed information that had become available after its publication. The changes we made are explained below.

Please note that:

--Idaho, Maine, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Wisconsin and Wyoming were excluded from our analysis. They have election-day registration systems, and did not need to use HAVA-compliant provisional ballots.

--North Dakota does not register voters, so it also was excluded from HAVA requirements and did not use provisional voting.

--Mississippi has not reported its provisional voting results and could not be included in our analysis, though it was compliant in 2004.

--Pennsylvania did not report its totals for the Election Day Study, but we obtained information on Pennsylvania and did include it in our analysis.

014277

New vs. Old States

We classified states as “new” or “old” based on the 2001 Electionline study of provisional voting¹ and condensing its classifications into a single dichotomous variable, new/old with all other cases excluded. The Electionline study divided states into five categories of their use of provisional ballots in the 2000 election:

1. Use of provisional ballots (P)
2. Limited use of provisional ballots (LP)
3. Affidavit ballots (A)
4. No system in place (N)
5. Unnecessary/Not Applicable (U/NA)

We collapsed all of the states listed as using provisional ballots, limited use of provisional ballots or affidavit ballots as “old” states, because the states in all three categories would have been familiar with key aspects of provisional voting. States that had no provisional voting system in place for the 2002 election, and were HAVA compliant in 2004, were listed as “new” states, as 2004 would have been the first year in which they would be offering the option of provisional voting. States that were listed as unnecessary or not applicable were excluded from this study, as they were exempt from the HAVA regulations in 2004 because they either allowed same-day registration or did not register voters.

Rhode Island is the only state categorized as an old state by Electionline that we moved into the list of new states. Electionline’s map shows Rhode Island as a state that used provisional voting in 2000, but in the state description, it is listed as having no system in place. We learned from the Rhode Island Board of Elections that the state had previously permitted potential voters to sign an affidavit if they did not appear on a precinct’s list of registered voters, but felt they were registered to vote. Based on the signed affidavit, the election official would then contact a county official to see if the voter was on a more complete registration list. If the voter’s name was on the complete list, that voter was permitted to cast a regular ballot. As this process did not grant the voter a provisional ballot, but served as a different type of administrative failsafe, we concluded that Rhode Island’s first use of provisional voting was in 2004 and, therefore, classified the state as “new” to the system of provisional balloting.

Statewide List of Registered Voters

The Electionline preview of the 2004 Election² was the starting point for compiling a list of states that had a statewide database of registered voters. That study listed 34 States that did not have their statewide database systems complete, and 16 that did, including the District of Columbia. North Dakota does not register voters, so does not need to compile such a database. Electionline’s criterion for concluding that a state had a statewide list was that the state have participation from all jurisdictions in a statewide system. We added Oklahoma to the list of states with statewide databases because we found they had met the Electionline criteria by the 2004 election, albeit too late for inclusion in the Electionline survey.

Minnesota has a statewide database but was excluded from the analysis because it did not offer provisional ballots and was exempt from the HAVA requirements.

Out-of-Precinct Ballots

We based our classification of states that allow the counting of ballots cast outside the correct precinct on the data in the 2004 Electionline preview of the 2004 election². States that evaluated ballots cast in a precinct where the voter was not registered were categorized as “out-of-precinct.” States that invalidated such ballots were categorized as “In-precinct only.”

South Dakota complicates the effort to assign each state to a category. It permits voters to sign an affidavit that would allow them to vote without presenting photo ID. While Hawaii did not normally require photo ID, its statutes gave challenged voters the opportunity to respond by producing a photo ID.

Verification Method

We identified four different ways states assessed provisional ballots to determine if they should be counted: signature match, match voter data, signed affidavits, and bringing back identification later. We gathered information about these verification techniques by checking state websites and consulting journalistic accounts. We consulted state legislation to provide further information where needed.

Data Collection

To assemble our data for analysis, we began by using the data on provisional votes cast and counted reported by Electionline. To increase the accuracy of this data, we surveyed each state's election websites for updated data, and for reported numbers on the county level. We then sent emails to 49 (we excluded Alaska, see below) states and the District of Columbia, requesting updated data on the number of provisional votes cast and counted by county. We received information from 25 states by our cut-off date of August 25, 2005.

* North Carolina lacked clear standards to evaluate provisional ballots and is excluded from this analysis.

⁵ Alaska was not contacted via email, as the state does not have voting districts comparable to counties in other states and could not be matched with comparable census data.

⁶ Maryland reported provisional ballots that were counted per county, but not number cast.

⁷ Nebraska reported an incomplete list of provisional ballots cast and counted by county, but designated counties by number, rather than by name.

Data Differences with Election Day Study

The data used in this study differs from the data reported in the Election Day Study for 19 states. The Election Day Study was not completed until well after our statistical analysis of provisional voting was finished, on the schedule laid out in our work plan. Where there are differences, they are typically very small, usually fewer than 100 votes either cast or counted. Of the 9 states that have differences of more than 100 votes cast or counted, 7 have reported their numbers directly to us and can be considered updated data that EDS had not obtained. For one of those states, New Mexico, EDS had incomplete data, and for another, Pennsylvania, EDS had no data at all. The data that we have collected reflects updated numbers from the states that have changed following recounts and litigation that altered how ballots were evaluated.

Subject RESPONSE REQUESTED-Working Group for Voting Fraud and Voter Intimidation Project

Dear Commissioners:

The consultants' contracts for EAC's voting fraud and voter intimidation project require Tova Wang and Job Serebrov to work in consultation with EAC staff and the Commissioners "to identify a working group of key individuals and representatives of organizations knowledgeable about the topics of voting fraud and voter intimidation". The contracts do not specify the number of working group members but, as EAC has to pay for the group's travel and we want the size of the group to be manageable, I recommend that we limit the number to 6 or 8. Please let me know if you think that this limit is too conservative .

Attached for your review and comment are two lists of potential working group members for this project. One list was submitted by Job, the other by Tova. Tova and Job have provided brief summaries of each candidate's relevant experience and have placed asterisks next to the names of the individuals whom they particularly recommend. I can provide more extensive biographies of these individuals, if you need them. If EAC agrees that the recommended working group members are acceptable, an equal number may be selected from each list in order to maintain a balanced perspective.

Absent from the attached lists is the name of a representative from the U.S. Department of Justice's Election Crimes Branch. At this time, I am working through the DOJ bureaucracy to determine to what degree Craig Donsanto will be permitted to participate. If he cannot be named as a working group member, we may still be able to use him as a resource.

Please provide your feedback to me no later than Monday , November 28. I am available to meet with you if you would like to discuss this matter further.

Laughlin McDonald has been the executive director of the Southern Regional Office of the ACLU since 1972 and as the Director of the ACLU Voting Rights Project, McDonald has played a leading role eradicating discriminatory election practices and protecting the gains in political participation won by racial minorities since passage of the 1965 federal Voting Rights Act. During the past two decades, McDonald has broken new ground by expanding ACLU voting rights cases to include representation of Native Americans in various western states, and written innumerable publications on voting rights issues.

Joseph E. Sandler is a member of the firm of Sandler, Reiff & Young, P.C., in Washington, D.C., concentrating in campaign finance and election law matters, and general counsel to the Democratic National Committee. As an attorney he has handled campaign finance and election law matters for Democratic national and state party organizations, Members of Congress, candidates and campaigns. He served as general co-counsel of the Association of State Democratic Chairs, as general counsel for the Democratic Governors' Association and as counsel to several state Democratic parties.

Cathy Cox is serving her second term as Georgia's Secretary of State, having first been elected in 1998. In 2002 she earned re-election with over 61 percent of the vote, winning 146 out of 159 counties. Because of Secretary Cox's efforts Georgia has become a national leader in election reform. Her initiative made Georgia the first state in America to deploy a modern, uniform electronic voting system in every county

INTRODUCTION

This report describes our progress from November 1 through November 30, 2005. It includes brief descriptions of key tasks; progress made; challenges encountered or anticipated; milestones reached; and projections for work to be completed in the coming month.

In November we completed and submitted our Provisional Voting analysis paper, including recommendations to the EAC for best practices. These policy prescriptions are based on our research and the comments of the Peer Review Group on that research. We completed a careful review of our data to reconcile it with other sources and identify the latest, most reliable information to use in the analysis. The importance of this demanding effort was described in October's Progress Report. We continue to await the EAC's comments on that final draft.

Also in November we revised the schedule for the project in light of the additional time that has been needed for review of earlier drafts by the EAC and the late completion of the Election Day Study. We made a written request to the EAC for a no-cost extension of the contract through the end of February which we understand is likely to be approved before Christmas.

Since the submission of our Provisional Voting report to the EAC on November 28, 2005, our efforts have been entirely aimed at the completion of the voter identification research. We have been advised that EAC will take several weeks to review and react to our final draft on provisional voting. As we await a January meeting on that topic, we are moving ahead quickly on the statistical analysis of voter identification data and summarizing the legal research that was completed earlier.

This Monthly Progress Report is divided into 3 sections: Provisional Voting, Voter Identification Requirements, and Project Management. Each section references specific tasks described in paragraph 3 of the contract. The Financial Report will be sent separately by the Rutgers Division of Grant and Contract Accounting.

Please direct questions or comments about this report to [REDACTED] by [REDACTED]

PROVISIONAL VOTING

Tasks 3.4 – 3.9 in our contract relate to Provisional Voting. Task 3.4 was completed in August, and Tasks 3.5 and 3.6 were completed in November.

Task 3.6: Prepare preliminary draft guidance document.

The report and recommendations which were sent to the EAC on November 28, 2005 recommends against the adoption of a guidance document per se and advises that the EAC adopt its recommendations as best practices. That recommendation followed agreement by the EAC with that course of action. The submission of that report and recommendations, however, constitutes the document required under this task. Before proceeding to Task 3.7 (revise the guidance document for publication) or 3.8 (arrange a public hearing on the draft guidance), we await the EAC's decision on how to proceed.

014294

VOTER IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

The contract lists 7 tasks (3.10 – 3.16) related to Voter Identification Requirements. The research on Voter ID requirements is proceeding concurrently with our work on the experience of Provisional Voting, and is the principal focus of our research at this time.

Task 3.10: Legislation, regulations, and litigation

The research team at the Moritz College of Law has the lead responsibility for the collection and analysis of legislation, administrative procedures and litigation with regard to Voter Identification Requirements. This collection of material is nearing completion. It will constitute the compendium of legislation, administrative regulations, and case law called for under this task.

Description: The Moritz team has compiled statutes on Voter Identification, and will provide a summarized analysis of this research to the project team for review.

Progress: The 50 state (plus District of Columbia) chart has been completed, the voter identification statutes have been collected for all states and D.C., and summaries of the existing voter identification statutes have been written for all states and D.C. Moritz has completed its review of voter identification litigation. Moritz and Eagleton have worked together to review the research, clarify the categorization of that research on our charts, and reconcile the data developed in our two different research techniques categorizations.

Challenges: The biggest challenge facing the reconciliation process of research findings, descriptions and categorizations is that it is being done by two different teams (Moritz and Eagleton) who rely on different primary source materials. Despite the necessity this has created to reconcile conflicting data from time to time, the collaboration has also been very beneficial because it has made our research efforts more rigorous.

Work Plan: During December we will conclude our reconciliation and continue analysis of voter identification research, including an analysis of the most important issues and trends in voter identification litigation.

SUPPLEMENTS TO LEGAL ANALYSIS

To supplement the legal analysis, the Eagleton team is undertaking two research efforts: First, compiling information on the debate over voter ID in the states; and second, estimating the effect on turnout of different voter ID regimes. Tracking the continuing political debate over voter identification reveals that the relatively narrow HAVA requirements for voter identification have apparently sparked in many states a broader concern and a sharp political debate over rigorous identification requirements for all voters. The research follows these developments both to monitor possible secondary effects of HAVA on voter ID, and to provide a rich collection of alternative approaches for consideration.

During the month of November, we developed narratives to establish how laws were passed, looking at when they were proposed and when they were eventually enacted. In the upcoming month, Eagleton will examine voter registration forms across the states to see what forms of identification are requested from mail-in registrants. The difficulty will be determining the 2004 status of the states.

VOTER ID AND TURNOUT ANALYSIS

Now under way is a statistical analysis to gauge the effect of a state's voter ID regime on turnout, especially turnout by minority and elderly voters.

Description: We have created a database and gathered statistics on the effects of state-level voter identification requirements on voter turnout at the county-level in the 2004 election. In November, we have analyzed both aggregate- and individual-level data to determine whether there is any relationship between voter turnout and the various forms of voter identification states require.

Progress: Analysis is under way for two data sets: County-level data that includes registration and turnout rates for 2000 and 2004, as well as Census measures and indicators of the type of voter identification requirements that were in existence at the time of the 2004 presidential election. The second data set consists of the voter supplement to the November 2004 Current Population Survey. This data set allows for testing of the same hypotheses at the individual level. Preliminary findings from the aggregate data set suggest that voter ID requirements have their greatest effect at the registration stage, as opposed to the turnout stage. This is a first cut at the data, however, and we will be adding a number of control variables to the analysis to see if the relationship holds.

Challenges: These analyses use hierarchical linear modeling. Because voter identification requirements vary by state, one must pay special attention to other, unseen state-level influences on the data. The models are difficult to run and interpret, so the analyses are time-consuming

Work Plan: The statistical analyses will continue during the month of December, and a draft of the findings is anticipated by the end of the month.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT

PEER REVIEW GROUP

Description: A feature of our proposal was the creation of a Peer Review Group (PRG). It reviews our research and methodology and provides valuable feedback and suggestions for the direction of our work.

Progress: During the month of November, Eagleton contacted the PRG Members on two occasions. First, all members received the final draft provisional voting report that was submitted to the EAC. Further comments are welcome but not expected from the PRG. Second, we have asked PRG members to reserve two dates in mid-January for potential conference call sessions to review the voter identification report.

Challenges: No new challenges were encountered during November.

COORDINATION AND INFORMATION MANAGEMENT

Collecting and merging information and data from myriad sources is a demanding requirement of this research. We have developed two principal mechanisms to facilitate the analysis of the material collected or created in the project: an information system and an internal website for easy access to drafts and reports.

INFORMATION SYSTEM

Description: The statutory data and reports prepared by the Moritz College of Law is being merged with the political and procedural data and analysis prepared by the Eagleton Institute of Politics to provide a cohesive final product to the EAC, which will include a compendium of case law and statutes regarding Provisional Voting and voter identification.

Progress: At this point in the research process, many documents are complete after a lengthy process of circulating drafts among team members. We have reorganized our system by separating final drafts from earlier versions of documents, discarding dated files contained in the Information System, and updating the system as a whole. Upon their completion, new documents continue to be added.

Projections: The entire project team continues to use the Information System which contains the above referenced research, in working toward the preparation for our final reports to the EAC.

INTRANET

Description: All project team members have signed on to the Intranet site, and regularly post drafts, completed materials and spreadsheets online for internal review. The Intranet facilitates the exchange of information and collaboration among project participants.

FINANCIAL REPORT

The financial reporting for this project is supervised and prepared by the Division of Grant and Contract Accounting (DGCA) at Rutgers. Financial reporting on grant accounts is limited to actual expenses that have been incurred during the reporting period. Our contact at DGCA is: Constance Bornheimer, (732) 932-0165, EXT. 2235.

A detail of expenses incurred from project November 1- November 30, 2005, will be sent under separate cover to: Ms. Dianna Scott, Administrative Officer at the EAC.

Subject: Martinez ELJ Submission

Profs. Hasen, Lowenstein, and Tokaji:

Attached please find the submission of the Martinez Submission to the Election Law Journal's Mortiz Edition.

We apologize for turning in this paper late; we have unfortunately been occupied with a series of fast-moving election administration events (largely beyond our control). That said, we believe this to be a strong, well researched piece that makes an important statement, and are proud to submit it for consideration.

We are, of course, open to any edits that you may have to this papers, and as to structure, or footnoting improvements. I will provide your staff with any items that you may need to keep "on file" that are not readily available in the public for the cited material. I have taken the opportunity to do a generic law review style format, but you can obviously alter that as per ELJ's specifications. I have limited the "short cite" format-- because the piece isn't terribly long, but I have attempted to follow the Bluebook as much as possible.

Again, I know that Commissioner Martinez truly appreciates the opportunity to write for the ELJ, and the encouragement that you all have provided him to get this piece done. We welcome your comments, and will be happy to work with you on further improving this piece.

Very truly yours,
Adam Ambrogi

U.S. ELECTION ASSISTANCE COMMISSION

Status Report on the Voting Fraud-Voter Intimidation Research Project

May 17, 2006

014303

INTRODUCTION

Section 241 of the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) requires EAC to conduct research on election administration issues. Among the tasks listed in the statute is the development of:

- nationwide statistics and methods of identifying, deterring, and investigating voting fraud in elections for Federal office [section 241(b)(6)]; and
- ways of identifying, deterring, and investigating methods of voter intimidation [section 241(b)(7)].

EAC's Board of Advisors recommended that the agency make research on these matters a high priority.

FOCUS OF CURRENT RESEARCH

In September 2005, the Commission hired two consultants with expertise in this subject matter, Job Serebrov and Tova Wang, to:

- develop a comprehensive description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation in the context of Federal elections;
- perform background research (including Federal and State administrative and case law review), identify current activities of key government agencies, civic and advocacy organizations regarding these topics, and deliver a summary of this research and all source documentation;
- establish a project working group, in consultation with EAC, composed of key individuals and representatives of organizations knowledgeable about the topics of voting fraud and voter intimidation;
- provide the description of what constitutes voting fraud and voter intimidation and the results of the preliminary research to the working group, and convene the working group to discuss potential avenues for future EAC research on this topic; and
- produce a report to EAC summarizing the findings of the preliminary research effort and working group deliberations that includes recommendations for future research, if any;

As of the date of this report, the consultants have drafted a definition of election fraud, reviewed relevant literature and reports, interviewed persons from government and private sectors with subject matter expertise, analyzed news reports of alleged election fraud, reviewed case law, and established a project working group.

DEFINITION OF ELECTION FRAUD

The consultants drafted a definition of election fraud that includes numerous aspects of voting fraud (including voter intimidation, which is considered a subset of voting fraud) and voter registration fraud, but excludes campaign finance violations and election administration mistakes. This draft will be discussed and probably refined by the project working group, which is scheduled to convene on May 18, 2006.

LITERATURE REVIEW

The consultants found many reports and books that describe anecdotes and draw broad conclusions from a large array of incidents. They found little research that is truly systematic or scientific. The most systematic look at fraud appears to be the report written by Lori Minnite, entitled "Securing the Vote: An Analysis of Election Fraud". The most systematic look at voter intimidation appears to be the report by Laughlin McDonald, entitled "The New Poll Tax". The consultants found that books written about this subject all seem to have a political bias and a pre-existing agenda that makes them somewhat less valuable.

Moreover, the consultants found that reports and books make allegations but, perhaps by their nature, have little follow up. As a result, it is difficult to know when something has remained in the stage of being an allegation and gone no further, or progressed to the point of being investigated or prosecuted or in any other way proven to be valid by an independent, neutral entity. This is true, for example, with respect to allegations of voter intimidation by civil rights organizations, and, with respect to fraud, John Fund's frequently cited book, "Stealing Elections".

Consultants found that researchers agree that measuring something like the incidence of fraud and intimidation in a scientifically legitimate way is extremely difficult from a methodological perspective and would require resources beyond the means of most social and political scientists. As a result, there is much more written on this topic by advocacy groups than social scientists.

Other items of note:

- There is as much evidence, and as much concern, about structural forms of disenfranchisement as about intentional abuse of the system. These include felon disenfranchisement, poor maintenance of databases and identification requirements.
- There is tremendous disagreement about the extent to which polling place fraud, e.g. double voting, intentional felon voting, noncitizen voting, is a serious problem. On balance, more researchers find it to be less of a problem than is commonly described in the political debate; but some reports say it is a major problem, albeit hard to identify.

- There is substantial concern across the board about absentee balloting and the opportunity it presents for fraud.
- Federal law governing election fraud and intimidation is varied and complex and yet may nonetheless be insufficient or subject to too many limitations to be as effective as it might be.
- Deceptive practices, e.g. targeted flyers and phone calls providing misinformation, were a major problem in 2004.
- Voter intimidation continues to be focused on minority communities, although the American Center for Voting Rights uniquely alleges it is focused on Republicans.

Recommendations

The consultants recommend that subsequent EAC research include a follow up study of allegations made in reports, books and newspaper articles. They also suggest that the research should focus on filling the gap between the lack of reports based on methodical studies by social or political scientists and the numerous, but less scientific, reports published by advocacy groups.

INTERVIEWS

The consultants jointly selected experts from the public and private sector for interviews. The consultants' analysis of their discussions with these members of the legal, election official, advocacy, and academic communities follows.

Common Themes

- There is virtually universal agreement that absentee ballot fraud is the biggest problem, with vote buying and registration fraud coming in after that. The vote buying often comes in the form of payment for absentee ballots, although not always. Some absentee ballot fraud is part of an organized effort; some is by individuals, who sometimes are not even aware that what they are doing is illegal. Voter registration fraud seems to take the form of people signing up with false names. Registration fraud seems to be most common where people doing the registration were paid by the signature.
- There is widespread but not unanimous agreement that there is little polling place fraud, or at least much less than is claimed, including voter impersonation, "dead" voters, noncitizen voting and felon voters. Those few who believe it occurs often enough to be a concern say that it is impossible to show the extent to which it happens, but do point to instances in the press of such incidents. Most people believe that false registration forms have not resulted in polling place fraud, although it may create the perception that vote fraud is possible. Those who believe there is more polling place fraud than reported/investigated/prosecuted believe that registration fraud does lead to fraudulent votes. Jason Torchinsky from the American Center for Voting Rights is the only interviewee who believes that polling place fraud is widespread and among the most significant problems in the system.

- Abuse of challenger laws and abusive challengers seem to be the biggest intimidation/suppression concerns, and many of those interviewed assert that the new identification requirements are the modern version of voter intimidation and suppression. However there is evidence of some continued outright intimidation and suppression, especially in some Native American communities. A number of people also raise the problem of poll workers engaging in harassment of minority voters. Other activities commonly raised were the issue of polling places being moved at the last moment, unequal distribution of voting machines, videotaping of voters at the polls, and targeted misinformation campaigns.
- Several people indicate that, for various reasons, DOJ is bringing fewer voter intimidation and suppression cases now, and has increased its focus on matters such as noncitizen voting, double voting, and felon voting. Interviews with DOJ personnel indicate that the Voting Section, Civil Rights Division, focuses on systemic patterns of malfeasance in this area. While the Election Crimes Branch, Public Integrity Section, continues to maintain an aggressive pursuit of systematic schemes to corrupt the electoral process (including voter suppression), it also has increased prosecutions of individual instances of felon, alien, and double voting.
- The problem of badly kept voter registration lists, with both ineligible voters remaining on the rolls and eligible voters being taken off, remains a common concern. A few people are also troubled by voters being on registration lists in two states. They said that there was no evidence that this had led to double voting, but it opens the door to the possibility. There is great hope that full implementation of the new requirements of HAVA – done well, a major caveat – will reduce this problem dramatically.

Common Recommendations:

- Many of those interviewed recommend better poll worker training as the best way to improve the process; a few also recommended longer voting times or voting on days other than election day (such as weekends) but fewer polling places so only the best poll workers would be employed.
- Many interviewed support stronger criminal laws and increased enforcement of existing laws with respect to both fraud and intimidation. Advocates from across the spectrum expressed frustration with the failure of the Department of Justice to pursue complaints.

- With respect to DOJ's Voting Section, Civil Rights Division, John Tanner indicated that fewer cases are being brought because fewer are warranted – it has become increasingly difficult to know when allegations of intimidation and suppression are credible since it depends on one's definition of intimidation, and because both parties are doing it. Moreover prior enforcement of the laws has now changed the entire landscape – race based problems are rare now. Although challenges based on race and unequal implementation of identification rules would be actionable, Mr. Tanner was unaware of such situations actually occurring and his office has not pursued any such cases.
- Craig Donsanto of DOJ's Election Crimes Branch, Public Integrity Section, says that while the number of election fraud related complaints have not gone up since 2002, nor has the proportion of legitimate to illegitimate claims of fraud, the number of cases DOJ is investigating and the number of indictments his office is pursuing are both up dramatically. Since 2002, in addition to pursuing systematic election corruption schemes, DOJ has brought more cases against alien voters, felon voters and double voters than ever before. Mr. Donsanto would like more resources so that his agency can do more and would like to have laws that make it easier for the federal government to assume jurisdiction over voter fraud cases.
- A couple of interviewees recommend a new law that would make it easier to criminally prosecute people for intimidation even when there is not racial animus.
- Several advocate expanded monitoring of the polls, including some associated with the Department of Justice.
- Almost everyone hopes that administrators will maximize the potential of statewide voter registration databases to prevent fraud.
- Challenge laws, both with respect to pre-election day challenges and challengers at the polls, need to be revised by all states to ensure they are not used for purposes of wrongful disenfranchisement and harassment.
- Several people advocate passage of Senator Barak Obama's "deceptive practices" bill.
- There is a split on whether it would be helpful to have nonpartisan election officials – some indicated they thought even if elections officials are elected as non partisan officials, they will carry out their duties in biased ways nonetheless. However, most agree that elections officials pursuing partisan agendas are a problem that must be addressed in some fashion. Suggestions included moving election responsibilities out of the secretary of states' office; increasing transparency in the process; and enacting conflict of interest rules.

- A few recommend returning to allowing use of absentee ballots “for cause” only if it were politically feasible.
- A few recommend enacting a national identification card, including Pat Rogers, an attorney in New Mexico, and Jason Torchinsky from ACVR, who advocates the proposal in the Carter-Baker Commission Report.
- A couple of interviewees indicated the need for clear standards for the distribution of voting machines

NEWS ARTICLES

Consultants conducted a Nexis search of related news articles published between January 1, 2001 and January 1, 2006. A systematic, numerical analysis of the data collected during this review is currently being prepared. What follows is an overview of these articles provided by the consultants.

Absentee Ballots

According to press reports, absentee ballots are abused in a variety of ways:

- Campaign workers, candidates and others coerce the voting choices of vulnerable populations, usually elderly voters.
- Workers for groups and individuals have attempted to vote absentee in the names of the deceased.
- Workers for groups, campaign workers and individuals have attempted to forge the names of other voters on absentee ballot requests and absentee ballots and thus vote multiple times.

It is unclear how often actual convictions result from these activities (a handful of articles indicate convictions and guilty pleas), but this is an area in which there have been a substantial number of official investigations and actual charges filed, according to news reports where such information is available. A few of the allegations became part of civil court proceedings contesting the outcome of the election.

While absentee fraud allegations turn up throughout the country, a few states have had several such cases. Especially of note are Indiana, New Jersey, South Dakota, and most particularly, Texas. Interestingly, there were no articles regarding Oregon, where the entire system is vote by mail.

Voter Registration Fraud

According to press reports, the following types of allegations of voter registration fraud are most common:

- Registering in the name of dead people;
- Fake names and other information on voter registration forms;
- Illegitimate addresses used on voter registration forms;
- Voters being tricked into registering for a particular party under false pretenses; and
- Destruction of voter registration forms depending on the party the voter registered with.

There was only one self evident instance of a noncitizen registering to vote. Many of the instances reported included official investigations and charges filed, but few actual convictions, at least from the news reporting. There have been multiple reports of registration fraud in California, Colorado, Florida, Missouri, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, South Dakota, and Wisconsin.

Voter Intimidation and Suppression

This is the area which had the most articles, in part because there were so many allegations of intimidation and suppression during the 2004 election. Most of these remained allegations and no criminal investigation or prosecution ensued. Some of the cases did end up in civil litigation.

This is not to say that these alleged activities were confined to 2004 – there were several allegations made during every year studied. Most notable were the high number of allegations of voter intimidation and harassment reported during the 2003 Philadelphia mayoral race.

A very high number of the articles were about the issue of challenges to voters' registration status and challengers at the polling places. There were many allegations that planned challenge activities were targeted at minority communities. Some of the challenges were concentrated in immigrant communities.

However, the tactics alleged varied greatly. The types of activities discussed also include the following:

- Photographing or videotaping voters coming out of polling places;
- Improper demands for identification;

- Poll watchers harassing voters;
- Poll workers being hostile to or aggressively challenging voters;
- Disproportionate police presence;
- Poll watchers wearing clothes with messages that seemed intended to intimidate; and
- Insufficient voting machines and unmanageably long lines.

Although the incidents reported on occurred everywhere, not surprisingly, many came from “battleground” states. There were several such reports out of Florida, Ohio, and Pennsylvania.

“Dead Voters and Multiple Voting”

There were a high number of articles about people voting in the names of the dead and voting more than once. Many of these articles were marked by allegations of big numbers of people committing these frauds, and relatively few of these allegations turning out to be accurate according to investigations by the newspapers themselves, elections officials, and criminal investigators. Often the problem turned out to be a result of administrative error, poll workers mis-marking voter lists, a flawed registration list and/or errors made in the attempt to match names of voters on the list with the names of the people who voted. In a good number of cases, there were allegations that charges of double voting by political leaders were an effort to scare people away from the voting process.

Nonetheless there were a few cases of people actually being charged and/or convicted for these kinds of activities. Most of the cases involved a person voting both by absentee ballot and in person. A few instances involved people voting both during early voting and on Election Day, which calls into question the proper marking and maintenance of the voting lists. In many instances, the person charged claimed not to have voted twice on purpose. A very small handful of cases involved a voter voting in more than one county and there was one substantiated case involving a person voting in more than one state. Other instances in which such efforts were alleged were disproved by officials.

In the case of voting in the name of a dead person, the problem lay in the voter registration list not being properly maintained, i.e. the person was still on the registration list as eligible to vote, and a person took criminal advantage of that. In total, the San Francisco Chronicle found five such cases in March 2004; the AP cited a newspaper analysis of five such persons in an Indiana primary in May 2004; and a senate committee found two people to have voted in the names of the dead in 2005.

As usual, there were a disproportionate number of such articles coming out of Florida. Notably, there were three articles out of Oregon, which has one hundred percent vote-by-mail.

Vote Buying

There were a surprising number of articles about vote buying cases. A few of these instances involved long-time investigations concentrated in three states (Illinois, Kentucky, and West Virginia). There were more official investigations, indictments and convictions/pleas in this area.

Deceptive Practices

In 2004 there were numerous reports of intentional disinformation about voting eligibility and the voting process meant to confuse voters about their rights and when and where to vote. Misinformation came in the form of flyers, phone calls, letters, and even people going door to door. Many of the efforts were reportedly targeted at minority communities. A disproportionate number of them came from key battleground states, particularly Florida, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. From the news reports found, only one of these instances was officially investigated, the case in Oregon involving the destruction of completed voter registration applications. There were no reports of prosecutions or any other legal proceeding.

Non-citizen Voting

There were surprisingly few articles regarding noncitizen registration and voting – just seven all together, in seven different states across the country. They were also evenly split between allegations of noncitizens registering and noncitizens voting. In one case, charges were filed against ten individuals. In another case, a judge in a civil suit found there was illegal noncitizen voting. Three instances prompted official investigations. Two cases, from this Nexis search, remained just allegations of noncitizen voting.

Felon Voting

Although there were only thirteen cases of felon voting, some of them involved large numbers of voters. Most notably, of course, are the cases that came to light in the Washington gubernatorial election contest (see Washington summary) and in Wisconsin (see Wisconsin summary). In several states, the main problem was the large number of ineligible felons that remained on the voting list.

Election Official Fraud

In most of the cases in which fraud by elections officials is suspected or alleged, it is difficult to determine whether it is incompetence or a crime. There are several cases of ballots gone missing, ballots unaccounted for and ballots ending up in a worker's possession. In two cases workers were said to have changed peoples' votes. The one instance in which widespread ballot box stuffing by elections workers was alleged was in Washington State. The judge in the civil trial of that election contest did not find that elections workers had committed fraud. Four of the cases are from Texas.

Recommendation

The consultants recommend that subsequent EAC research should include a Nexis search that specifically attempts to follow up on the cases for which no resolution is evident from this particular initial search.

CASE LAW RESEARCH

After reviewing over 40,000 cases from 2000 to the present, the majority of which came from appeals courts, the consultants found comparatively few applicable to this study. Of those that were applicable, the consultants found that no apparent thematic pattern emerges. However, it appears to them that the greatest areas of fraud and intimidation have shifted from past patterns of stealing votes to present problems with voter registration, voter identification, the proper delivery and counting of absentee and overseas ballots, provisional voting, vote buying, and challenges to felon eligibility.

Recommendation

Because so few cases provided a picture of these current problems, consultants suggest that subsequent EAC research include a review of state trial-level decisions.

PROJECT WORKING GROUP

Consultants and EAC worked together to select members for the Voting Fraud-Voter Intimidation Working Group that included election officials and representatives of advocacy groups and the legal community who have an interest and expertise in the subject matter. (See Attachment A for a list of members.) The working group is scheduled to convene at EAC offices on May 18, 2006 to consider the results of the preliminary research and to offer ideas for future EAC activities concerning this subject.

FINAL REPORT

After convening the project working group, the consultants will draft a final report summarizing the results of their research and the working group deliberations. This report will include recommendations for future EAC research related to this subject matter. The draft report will be reviewed by EAC and, after obtaining any clarifications or corrections deemed necessary, will be made available to the EAC Standards Board and EAC Board of Advisors for review and comment. Following this, a final report will be prepared.

1 P-R-O-C-E-E-D-I-N-G-S
2 MR. MARTINEZ: Good afternoon, everybody.
3 Please continue with your lunch. We are going to get
4 started with the program. And what I am going to do for 5 a quick two or three minutes is just to lay the 6 groundwork if you will and try to let you all know what
7 we are going to attempt to accomplish over the next
8 couple of days. And give you an idea as to what issues
9 we hope to put in front of you et. Cetera.
10 Again I am Ray Martinez. I am a Commissioner
11 with the U.S. Elections Assistance Commission. I do 12 want you to recognize my esteemed colleague the former 13 Secretary of State of the great State of Colorado and 14 now Commissioner with EAC, Betty Davidson. Madame

014310

15 Commissioner if you will stand up (Applause).

16 what we hope to accomplish-- well, we are 17 here to discuss and get advice, the EAC, to get advice
18 from our Statutory Advisory Boards. We have two main 19 Statutory Advisory Boards created by(inaudible) which 20 is our government statute. One is the Board of Advisors
21 which is meeting up on the second floor and is 22 conducting concurrent meetings doing and hearing

1 exactly the same issues that you all will be hearing
2 about as well.

3 we have a presenter upstairs and as soon as
4 they are done we switch places and we will run
5 concurrent agenda with the Board of Advisors up stairs.

6 And of course our second important Advisory 7 Board committee is this great body right here and that 8 is the 110 Member Standards Board.

9 what we have done in preparing your agenda
10 for this particular meeting is different from what we 11 did in Denver last September, In Denver last September
12 we had a very important issue that we had to put before
13 our two Statutory Advisory Boards and the Board of 14 Advisors met separately for that meeting in a different
15 location.

16 what we did is focus on the voluntary voting
17 system guidelines lines back in Denver back in 18 September of last year. We broke up into break out
19 sessions on the various aspects of the BBSG, security,

20 accessibility human factors et cetera. We had a very 21 productive meeting about the voluntary voting system
22 guidelines.

1 For this particular meeting what you have is
2 an agenda full of Commissions and working EAC research
3 projects. Just about our full research agenda will be 4 presented to you throughout the next two days. And the 5 reason for us to do that is because the EAC-- a very 6 important function of the EAC in addition to working as 7 your full partner in implementing the various 8 requirements in HAVA will also be a national clearing
9 house for best practices on election administration.
10 And to be able to fully play and fulfill that role as 11 an agency it is incumbent upon us to commission
12 objective and professional and sound research so we can 13 fully inform our partners in the election community and 14 in the advocacy community, all our stake holders as to 15 what we find our best practices in election
16 administration.

17 So you will hear a series of presentations
18 that begin almost immediately as soon as I get off the 19 podium here. They will start to tell you here are the 20 things that we are working. And the goal that we want 21 to try to accomplish in the next day and a half is to 22 get your candid advice of what we are working on. I

1 strongly encourage as much feed back questions whether
2 they are positive or challenging. We want to get a
3 sense of direction on the projects we are going to be 4 presenting to you over the next day and a half. So we
5 want to encourage your candid interaction as you hear
6 these presentations and we need to get fully informed
7 as to the direction that we are headed.

8 So the goal of this meeting is to give you a 9 full briefing of all of our research projects we are 10 working on. If you look at the agenda you will see at 11 the end of the next day and a half, meaning tomorrow
12 afternoon, you will have a two block. And that block
13 can be extended even further if necessary for a plenary
14 session time were you will be able to talk among 15 yourselves as members of the Standards Board and to 16 discuss what you heard from the EAC and if necessary
17 if it is so desired pass resolutions and speak formally 18 as a Standards Board, as an Advisory Board as to your 19 collective opinion about the work that we are doing
20 here.

21 We truly value the feed back we get from all
22 of you. We don't just meet in a vacuum. I see so many

1 faces out in this room that we at the EAC call on just
2 about every day for advice and for input.

3 So it is a very unique situation for us to 4 have so many of you that we call upon almost daily to 5 have you all collectively in the same room and to be 6 able to draw from your vast experience and expertise
7 for the next day and a half. We feel very fortunate to 8 have you here. We are very thankful that you have 9 traveled a great distance for many of you to spend the 10 next day and a half with us. Thank you in advance.

11 So with that let me say I do need to 12 announce anybody that needs to have an interpreter or 13 signage can come and sit in the front row or we will 14 make better accommodations for you to have a better
15 view of the interpreter. This meeting is open to the 16 public as have all of our Standards Board meetings have 17 been. So there is a section in the back where non 18 Standards Board Members are present. However Q and A
19 and actual interaction is limited to the Standards
20 Board members who are present. The members of the 21 public who are here may observe but they may not ask 22 questions or engage in any of the discussions or

1 presentations. It is strictly for the members of the 2 Standards Board.

3 After we do some quick presentations here for 4 the remainder of our lunch hour this meeting will be
5 turned over the members of your executive board,
6 meaning your acting chair, Peggy Nighswonger and her
7 colleagues on the Executive Board, will then come up to 8 the head table and begin to work you through the agenda
9 and solicit your feed back.

10 So with that I will go ahead and ask our 11 first presenter, our current General Counsel, Julie
12 Thompson Hodgkins to come up and give us a brief
13 presentation on our Legal Resources web page. After 14 that we will have three more presentations. And then we 15 will take a break and go into your first Plenary
16 Session. Julie, if you will come up, please.

17 MS. THOMPSON-HODGKINS: Thank you Mr. Martinez
18 and welcome everyone to Washington D.C. I am so pleased 19 to be the first presenter. To be able to talk about,
20 well, what is a small project for EAC, but one that I
21 hope will bring a lot of value to the election.

22 Just to briefly give you a little insight

1 into this project I remember the days back when I was a
2 State Election Administrator being general counsel for 3 the Department of Elections in Louisiana thinking it
4 really would be nice to have one source to be able to 5 go to take a look at all of the laws, all of the 6 regulations, all of the cases country wide that dealt
7 with elections.

8 I remember those days when you got frantic
9 calls from the Legislature wanting to know how another
10 state dealt with provisional voting or casting ballots
11 or absentee voting or what have you and wishing I had a 12 resource.

13 Actually at the Denver meeting I took a 14 little poll of a few of you asking what you would think 15 about EAC putting together this kind of resource. And 16 it got some support. I brought it to the Commissioners
17 and said, you know, hey what do you think about this?
18 And they thought it was a good idea to.

19 So what we are doing is putting together a 20 website to provide access for all of you, all the 21 members of the public, to legal materials related to 22 elections. It will provide you with up to date

10

1 information, current statues, current cases, and in a
2 format that is user friendly.

3 We decided to start this project with a

4 rather simple focus and that is State and Federal 5 elections. Anything from State Constitutions, Federal 6 Constitutions, Federal law, such as Help America Vote
7 Act, and NVRA, The Voting Rights Act. Certainly the 8 Voting Accessibility for the Elderly and Handicapped, 9 ADA and the rehab act. Anything that we could think of 10 either in the Federal or State arena in terms of 11 Legislation that would impact the elections process.

12 We are also going to have State Statutes.
13 Constitutions, Administrative Rules and Regs. They will 14 be categorized by state and by topical area. So if 15 you're interested in knowing how California deals with 16 provisional voting you can go to California and take a
17 look at Provisional Voting Statutes or cases. The same 18 thing with voting equipment and various other
19 categories.

20 However if you are looking for a broader 21 search you will also be able to key in the terms that 22 you're interested in finding and take a look across all

1 of the States to see a sort of panorama of how that
2 particular topic is dealt with.

3 As far as the cases are concerned we asked
4 our contractor to summarize the cases for you at the 5 beginning so that you didn't have to read the whole

6 case in order to determine whether or not it was 7 something that really applied to your particular
8 situation. You will also have a link to the full text
9 of that decision. We started with a narrow focus and 10 that is State and Federal elections particularly Help
11 America Vote Act and the NVRA, and those issues which 12 would be the most important to you guys as you are 13 implementing HAVA.

14 As far as the time line is concerned on this 15 project our contractor is just about finished 16 identifying all of the resources that we need to be 17 contained in the data base. They are in the process of 18 summarizing those cases. And we will be populating that 19 data base.

20 I am thrilled actually today to be able to 21 give you a little bit of a preview of the data base. I
22 hope you guys can see this. The text is a little small.

12

1 But these are some screen shots that we have. And this
2 a look into the actual key word search where you would
3 be able to enter in for instance: "Cast Ballot". And 4 pull up cases, statutes, regulations that deal with how 5 various different states are casting ballots. You can 6 also of course, as I told you before, search by 7 category or by state. So there will be a browsing
8 function there that you can go to those into a drop

9 down menu and choose from various different sources.

10 And this is sort of an example of what the 11 results page would look like. The information that you
12 will be needing.

13 we are very excited about this. I hope that 14 you guys share the excitement and hope this will be a
15 great resource for you. This is another little screen
16 shot here of browsing a particular record for a single 17 state.

18 If you have any questions, comments anything
19 that I can answer right now I would be happy to take 20 questions.

21 MS. LYNN BAILEY: (Georgia) when do you
22 anticipate that project will be available for the

1 public.

2 MS. THOMPSON-HODGKINS: I believe the tract
3 that the contractor is on right now we should have this 4 up by mid July. They are well into identifying all of 5 the resources. There are quite a number of cases that 6 they have summarized. But we try to ask them to do that 7 on a priority bases, the newest cases first so that we 8 can get that information out to you in that time frame.

9 BRAD CLARK: (California) will this be
10 available to a regular EAC website? Will there be a be

11 a link to that legal resources.

12 MS. THOMPSON-HODGKINS: That is correct. There
13 will be a link to Legal Resources Clearing House or 14 Legal resources. You will be able to just go get that 15 right off the EAC page.

16 The court Reporter has asked me to tell those 17 who are speaking to identify yourselves so we will know
18 who is speaking. Thank you so much for this opportunity
19 to come and talk to you about this. I will be around
20 for the next day and a half. So if any other questions
21 come up with regard to Legal Resource Clearing House or 22 in regard to anything else please do not hesitate to

14

1 come and find me.

2 MR. MARTINEZ: I think Julie actually makes a
3 good point at the end. And that is our staff will be 4 around for the next couple of days. The presentations
5 that you're hearing today at lunch are going to be kind
6 of rushed because we are trying to get you as much
7 information as we can. And we are starting with this
8 lunch hour. But after the lunch hour the presentations
9 that you will have will be issue specific. You will not 10 not have four in a one hour block of time. There will 11 be a time when you will get a ten or fifteen minute
12 presentation with about thirty to forty minutes to ask
13 questions on a particular issue.

14 So these are the ones we thought we could do
15 rather quickly. But still even so we encourage you to 16 ask to ask questions even if it means we need to 17 readjust our agenda this afternoon.

18 Okay. Our next presenter-- I am going to ask
19 Karen Lynn-Dyson who is our research manager. Karen
20 manages all of our research agenda. And Karen, why
21 don't you come on up to the microphone if you don't 22 mind. And Karen will introduce our next presenter who

1 will give a very a quick, brief, presentation. This
2 project is on the work that we are doing to redesign or 3 to offer more user friendly designs for various 4 products that our presenter will explain to you. Karen
5 come on up.

6 MS. KAREN LYNN-DYSON: I just want to 7 reiterate what Commission Martinez said in terms of my 8 availability to everyone here over the next couple of 9 days. Am the individual responsible for oversight for 10 all of the agencies research works and projects. I look 11 forward very much to hearing from you all, your 12 concerns, you issues, things you would like to see us
13 addressing or addressing in more detail.

14 We have with us today Rick Grafe who is the 15 CEO of the American Institute of Graphic Art. This

16 project which the Elections Assistance Commission is 17 contracted for is one that Commissioner Martinez
18 indicated where we are trying to provide to you all a 19 series of best practices on ballot design and on 20 signage. And with these best practices and these 21 exhibits, if you will, of possibilities for approaches
22 to ballot design and polling place signage we will take

1 into consideration literacy, readability, usability
2 alternate languages, braille, audio accessibility and 3 ADA compliance.

4 The American Institute of Graphic Art is the 5 professional association of design. It has some 17,000
6 designers working in a variety of communication media.
7 And they through their Design for Democracy which is 8 their non profit affiliate can assist you all,
9 government agencies, in finding national or local 10 professional designers and researchers who can help you
11 on a for hire basis to implement some of these designs.

12 So with that very brief introduction I am
13 going to Mr. Grafe Korfe go ahead and describe to you
14 all the work they have been doing for the EAC on this 15 contract

16

17

DESIGN FOR DEMOCRACY

18 MR. RICK KORFE:

Page 14

014328

19 All right. Thank you Karen. Again I am Rick 20 Grafe sic) I want to thank you, Karen and also 21 Commissioner Martinez. And I think some of the comments
22 that he made are so very critical to what we want to

1 share with you. That is he talked about the importance
2 of best practices; he talked about the importance of 3 research; and he talked about how critical input is.
4 And I think all of those are reflected in what we are
5 trying to share with you today.

6 This is going to be very brief. And one of 7 the reasons it is going to be brief is that this isn't 8 really about you listening to me it is really about our 9 me listening to you.

10 Our project is effective design in election
11 administration (sic) and as Karen pointed out Sign 12 for Democracy is an initiative for AIGA which has been 13 around since 1999.

14 It eventually focused on clear communication
15 and more thoughtful experiences in public sphere so we 16 can trust in government and increase citizen
17 participation.

18 The specific project we are working on is 19 aimed at building expertise, or building from our 20 expertise, experience and new research to create models

21 for optical scan electronic ballots and also for 22 polling place signage.

18

1 Now the exhibits we actually created are
2 under Tab five in your binders. And I mention that 3 because I am going to do something that is a little
4 unusual in talking about design. And that is I am not
5 going to show you the designs because what we really 6 want to do is gain your input. And there is an 7 opportunity for you to look at the work under tab five
8 and get a sense of it. And also in a room right across 9 the hall we have two staff people, user specialists and 10 researchers who are there to gain your input on various 11 of the exhibits that are over there.

12 So during the next day, well actually two 13 days, we will have the room, again, right across the 14 hall. There is Elizabeth Hare, our Project Director and 15 Mary Kwan who is our experienced strategist and 16 usability specialist strategist. And they both will be 17 over there looking for your input on some the exhibits.
18 The exhibits are things like this. And while they are 19 all drafts the intention is to get your reaction so we 20 can refine them.

21 I want to mention now a couple of things
22 quickly about designers and try to disavow you of

1 certain preconceptions about about design. what we are
2 talking about here is not people in flip flops and long
3 pony tails who are trying to design this stuff. And we
4 are not talking about arrogant artists wearing all
5 black. what we are talking about are professionals who
6 can take an experience and define and break it down
7 into the small pieces that make an experience, like the 8 voting experience, like the election experience and 9 break it up into segments. And research how people
10 react to information and then craft a solution.

11 So what we are really talking about is a
12 process, a designing process, a way of thinking about a
13 problem and the election process itself.

14 We broke it down into identification,
15 orientation, instruction, action, is the voting part,
16 completion. And what you do is you look at the election
17 process and say what are all the pieces and how do
18 people relate to that.

19 And out of that what we are going to do is we 20 are going to propose to you guidelines that respect a 21 number of issues, that respects a number of issues. It
22 respects HAVA compliance; it will respect need to adapt

1 materials for local applications; it will always to 2 seek to find clarity and simplicity in what we are 3 doing. And it will also reflect the need to respond to 4 the technical requirements of voting equipment.

5 So right now our approach, and what happened
6 to our project, right now our approach will deal with 7 guidelines on the content, on what information is 8 really needed by people at various stages.

9 You will deal with the voting system
10 implication of course responding to the technical 11 issues. It will deal with layout systems, the way
12 people work through information. We know patterns that 13 are most effective. And we will share those with you as 14 well as issues of layout that reflect the needs of 15 different technical systems. And also principles of 16 design so that materials being adapted for the local 17 level there are certain principles that you will know
18 to follow.

19 what you see here are twelve stages in the 20 design process. And I need to mention this again to 21 point out that when you are dealing with a designer you
22 shouldn't just expect them to design a ballot.

1 You should deal with designers who are
2 actually asking you more about the process of design.
3 And the issues that are highlighted, five and six,
4 gather information and develop prototype ideas is a
5 stage that we are at. With that, that is an important
6 stage.

7 We need to understand how people need, use
8 information. What information is needed and then you
9 develop prototypes which are like the draft examples
10 you will see across the hall and then you gain greater 11 information.

12 This is one case where when we talk about 13 testing we are not testing to figure out how well we 14 have done. We are testing to inform what we do. So the 15 idea here is that we have materials for you to react to 16 and it is your reaction that is as critical as it is to 17 what we bring to the project.

18 I know that for many dealing with this issue
19 isn't traumatic but it is a tough one because ballots
20 have been developed over the years and they have 21 accommodated a huge amount of information, a huge 22 amount of requirements that are very local. And most

1 people in this room, and most people in most of the

2 elections systems, feel very strongly, they feel the 3 issues we are confronting are unique. And they are 4 concerned that all of the challenges they have already
5 faced be accommodated in the outcome.

6 Let me assure you that that is exactly why we 7 want to hear from you. Understanding what you bring
8 about, what is important, is actually critical for us
9 to be able to adapt to something that you can use
10 effectively at the local level.

11 One of the advantages of the work we have 12 done. One of the advantages of the work that we have 13 done our election design project team has already 14 worked with election officials in Cook County, Illinois
15 and the state of Oregon. And so in terms of the 16 testing process we have actually have not only the 17 kinds of test that we do in order to perform research,
18 to understand how people can best understand the issues
19 and answer the ballot. But also we have had field
20 testing and post election use. And we bring to the 21 project here not only that experience but also certain 22 things that are true of virtually any information

23

1 design issue.

2 And our objective here is useful usable
3 design. And our core team and what we bring to it,
4 among other things, in addition to that experience, we

5 bring what we know from other research in terms of how 6 people use information. And we know that there are 7 certain principles that we will share with you that 8 regardless of how your design evolves that you need to 9 keep in mind and that is the design is not because it
10 makes things look pretty but because it makes things
11 useful. It makes things usable. They are effective.
12 They are clear, they are simple.

13 These are things like using clear capital
14 letters; not center lining type; keep the number of 15 type variations down; understand information hierarchy;
16 and using graphics to help illustrate points. We will 17 share those things. And that's where we start.

18 Then we have our own panel of experts and 19 project advisors that advise us and become part of that 20 process of testing. Are we making the right conclusion
21 when we are coming up with certain solutions?

22 And the next critical aspect is all of you.

24

1 That's why we will be here for two days because we need
2 to hear from you the issues that are most important to 3 you and make sure we can accommodate them.

4 And then of course there are the voters as 5 well. We look to them and their response in two ways.
6 One is through putting together some test situations

7 with prototypical or typical voters in advance and also 8 the outcomes of actual use.

9 The concept we are taking here is we want to 10 create a design that is simple enough to address
11 exceptional means. And by dealing with the needs at the 12 extremes, the exceptional needs, and making something
13 simple and clear for them we believe we will meet
14 everyone's requirements.

15 So in this next round of testing that we do
16 we are going to include people from 18 to 21 years of 17 age, 65 to 80 and address the kind of issues that Karen 18 pointed are the object of the issues and that is 19 dealing with literacy issues, readability, usability,
20 alternate languages, braille and audio accessibility
21 and ADA compliance. And then in addition we will try to 22 see what the requirements are for localization, for low

1 experience levels and also for cultural obstacles.
2 Ultimately again the outcome will be models that are
3 other compliant, capable for local variability, easy to 4 implement and sensitive to technical requirements.

5 The next stage will be some tests that we 6 will do in the field, task based usability testing. We 7 plane to do it on the east coast, midwest and west
8 coast. And certainly if any of you want to be involved
9 in this be sure to let Elizabeth or Mary know because

10 we have not selected sights yet. And the testing will 11 be putting together, presumably, test labs and bring in 12 volunteers to actually use the information.

13 I mention we will be in the room across the 14 hall in the McPhearson Square Room, oh, I guess
15 tomorrow is in the Board Room, it is not across the 16 hall. So in the McPhearson Square Room, all day today
17 until 6 o'clock. And tomorrow it will be in the Board
18 Room which is also on this level Board Room one I
19 believe from 10 a.m., to 6 p.m. And you can also 20 respond and even if it is not responding to what you
21 see sharing with us your concerns.

22 Now what is this? We also want to get your

26

1 feed back on line. But this is one of those slides from
2 hell. You know you try to come up with a simple
3 solution, especially for designers who talk about
4 simplicity. You try to come up with a simple solution
5 and you get a URL that no one can remember. So we will
6 skip that. We are looking for a survey monkey to do
7 another job.

8 Nest, you can use this link on the Home page
9 of Design for Democracy.org./participate URL there is 10 a link of that on line survey which is going to be 11 available through the end of the month for any of your

12 comments on any materials in Tab 5. And again: Design
13 for Democracy.org/participate. And that will be up for 14 ten more days, until the end of the month to gather
15 your comments.

16 There are the names of Mary and Elizabeth who 17 we be here the next two says seeking your input. And we 18 certainly welcome it in any way or form you choose to 19 get it to us. But it is critical for us to hear from 20 all of you on this in order to accommodate your needs.
21 Thank you.

22 MR. MARTINEZ: Any questions on this

27

1 particular presentation? Okay. Great thank you.

2 It occurs to me as I was listening to that
3 presentation that perhaps this room could have been 4 designed a little better for our meeting. Howard is 5 that you behind the pillar? I think so. So our 6 apologies for columns that are blocking the view, not 7 that you want to see us up here anyway. But hopefully
8 you can hear us back there, Howard.

9 what we want to do next, the final
10 presentation both of this presentations on Public
11 Access Portals and Spanish and Asian Language Working 12 Groups that we have assembled will be presented by 13 Edgardo Cortes who is one of our research specialists
14 at the EAC. He will talk to you very quickly about 15 these issues and give you a chance to ask questions.

16 I also want to say about the previous 17 presentation we reached out to Design for Democracy and 18 to pull together best practices on ballot design and 19 polling place signage et cetera. Based upon the input
20 and urging from many of you out there we actually got a 21 lot of feed back from, in particular, our Board of 22 Advisors, upstairs, that this was a useful project for

28

1 us to do with a lot of positive feedback from election
2 officials who had worked with Design for Democracy. And 3 we felt they were an important group to bring in. Have 4 them do some templates and some best practice
5 documents that we could put out for your consumption to 6 see if you want to follow up with any of their work.
7 And that is why you heard that presentation.

8 Okay. The following two presentations very 9 quickly, Edgardo Cortes with the EAC staff:

10

11

12 PUBLIC ACCESS PORTALS & SPANISH & ASIAN

13 LANGUAGE WORKING GROUPS .

14

15 MR. CORTES:

16 Thank you Mr. Vice Chairman. Give me just a 052306

17 minute to set this up.

18 Good afternoon, everyone, my name is Edgardo
19 Cortes. I have been with EAC since late July of last 20 year. Prior to that I used to run a National Voter
21 Registration campaign that was funded by the government
22 of Puerto Rico as well as did some political

29

1 consulting work for a couple of campaigns around the 2 country. Probably working with Peggy Sims dealing with 3 all the requirement payments issues, the HAVA funding
4 questions that come in, the College Board Approval
5 Programs, any NVRA issues that come up and so anything
6 I am Peggy's backup for that. So a lot of stuff you
7 send in to us she and I work on getting your responses
8 to.

9 First thing I am going to talk about is the 10 Public Access Portal Project that we have been working 11 on since last fall. We awarded a contract to 12 Publius.org to conduct a study which will examine and 13 create a best practices document about Public Access
14 Portals.

15 Publius is a non partisan, non profit 501C3
16 based out of Detroit Michigan. They have been in 17 existence for about ten years now. And actually got 18 their start setting up an information web site like 19 this for the state of Michigan.

Page 26

014340

20 The methods up here is essentially from the 21 research that is ongoing, it is kind of a color coded
22 map as to what sorts of web sites by available by

30

1 state. You can see some of them have state wide sites
2 available. Some just have independent jurisdictions,
3 half sites. Some are county based. And you can also see
4 there are quite a few states that don't have anything
5 set up so far. So those are kind of-- in terms of the 6 research that is a visual representation of what they 7 have looked at so far.

8 They have from September through December
9 what they did was they went out and started doing an 10 initial search of what web sites were out there and who 11 is running them. And to this point they have identified 12 and reviewed approximately 425 state, county and local 13 web sites that provide information to voters.

14 Of those 425 what they did was, starting in 15 January, they started a more comprehensive look at a 16 much smaller section of those, approximately fifty.
17 what they have done is they are going in an ah, number
18 one, going through the process of looking up
19 information on the site, capturing what information is 20 provided, how it is being provided all those sorts of 21 things.

And then they have also conducted about 100

1 interviews so far, finance reviews with the
2 administrator that run these sites, with the IG folks.
3 And what they have done in terms of those 50 sites they 4 really went out and got a variety of state, county and 5 local web sites to look at. They focused on urban and 6 rural web sites, you know various that were urban and 7 rural. They looked at as much geographic diversity as 8 possible so that the Best Practices Document that comes 9 out in the end will address some of the regional 10 differences that might exist in terms of how 11 information is presented. And will look at the 12 differences throughout the states.

13 A couple facts about the web site. The 14 actual first source of these informational web sites
15 actually date back to around 1996, when the Internet, 16 the use was not very wide spread yet. And so they 17 really advanced a lot between then and now.

18 In terms of their initial research one of the 19 things that they have found to be the most popular
20 function-- when we went into this we really thought
21 that the big questions were people wanting the check
22 their registrations status, their voter registration

32

1 status. And to know where their polling place was
2 located.

3 That was one of the reasons we received this 4 project, the kind of internal, initial research that we
5 did to prepare to let this out a contractor indicated
6 that those were the two big questions.

7 what we actually found is that aside from 8 those, those are very important actually, but one of 9 the things that draws people most to these sites are 10 the sites that have candidate information and sample
11 ballot information on the sites. Which is something 12 they are taking a look at in terms of what ways that 13 can be readily presented to folks. And what they found
14 is that sites that have the usage increases
15 dramatically once that information goes up closer to 16 election time. Once those sites put that information up
17 the usage goes up.

18 Another interesting thing that we were able 19 to take a look at this year, and it is going into the 20 final report actually, is Louisiana set up a web site
21 to provide voter information to displaced voters. Folks
22 that were displaced after Hurricane Katrina. And they

33

1 set up this web site so that those folks, prior to the 2 special election in New Orleans, would be able to, from 3 anywhere in the country, go in and access not only the 4 information of, you know, the dates and everything,
5 but were able to get information on the absentee ballot
6 process, were able to down load applications for 7 absentee ballots and really provided a lot of 8 information and was kept up to date. So Publius was 9 actually able to, because of the timing of our project
10 was actually able to look at from beginning to end this 11 process and has spoken with folks in Louisiana about 12 it. And that is one of the things we will be dealing 13 with in the final report which we might be able to use
14 in the future for other studies as well.

15 One of the things that may or may not 16 surprise you is that number one there is a lot of 17 interest at all levels for providing these sites. It is 18 has really been an issue of resources up until now as 19 to whether or not jurisdictions provide these sites and 20 how advanced they are.

21 One of the things through the phone calls and 22 interviews that they have done with existing sites is a

014344

1 lot of the smaller jurisdictions and the counties have
2 been kind of stalling further development of these 3 sites because there is a lot of concern out there about
4 how the switch to a statewide voter registration list
5 is going to impact states providing this information
6 whether or not it is going to be done at a state level.
7 And kind of remove the need for them to have it at the 8 local level. So that is one of the concerns that has 9 come up during the research as well.

10 One thing that shouldn't surprise anybody is 11 there is no one promotion strategy for these sites that 12 works. Every location that has them is different as to 13 how they get the word out about them and how they draw
14 people to those sites.

15 In terms of timing, just go give everybody an 16 idea, they have been doing this research for a while 17 now. They are hoping to-- we are hoping to have the 18 draft document ready by mid to late summer. So July or 19 August we are hoping to have a draft document available
20 which we will-- I will work with the Commissioner to 21 make sure that we are able to distribute that to both 22 the Standards Board and the Board of Advisors for

35

1 people to be able to look at it, give their feed back
2 before it goes into the final version which we hope if

3 we can get the draft in mid Summer and we are hoping 4 that sometime in the early Fall we will be able to have 5 a final document out there.

6 In terms of the time line we realize it is an
7 election year. We realize this information is going out
8 in the Fall. One of the things that we realized early
9 on was that even last Fall it was to the point where it
10 was pretty much too late for states and jurisdictions to 11 implement the suggestions that were going to come out of 12 this in time to impact this year's elections. So what 13 we are really hoping to get out of this document is 14 that it will be available toward the end of this cycle
15 so that once we get into next year and people start
16 looking toward the '08 Presidential elections. And we 17 have gotten past the HAVA deadlines and everybody's 18 attention starts to shift this information will be out
19 there so that states, and counties and local 20 jurisdictions can take the information in here and be 21 able to implement these sites with enough time to make 22 them functional and work out all the bugs and

1 everything before we move into the election year. So
2 that's what we are looking at in terms of time lines
3 for this project.

4 I will take questions about both of these
5 after I finish the second topic

052306

SPANISH AND ASIAN LANGUAGES WORKING GROUPS.

9 Many of you know there have been a lot demographic 10 changes in the country and a lot of-- particularly in 11 the past decade there is a lot of jurisdictions that 12 have sizeable populations that fall under Section 203
13 of Voting Rights Act, or who will soon be, and a lot
14 jurisdictions. And lot of jurisdictions that didn't 15 before now have to provide information in alternative
16 languages.

17 We have seen it and we realize the issues
18 that come up in terms of jurisdictions that have never 19 dealt with alternative languages or to some of the 20 issues that come up and how can they implement this 21 properly.

22 Prior to my getting here the work had already

37

1 started on these projects. It was decided by the
2 Commission that we should-- really what we should do is 3 to bring together some working groups that consist of 4 election administrators, advocacy organizations,
5 different people that deal with the issues that come up
6 and deal with them first hand and let us know what sort
7 of research we can conduct that will help you in that

8 process.

9 HAVA Section 241, which is the section that 10 talks about the studies of election administrations one
11 of the things that it charges the EAC to do is conduct
12 research on making information most convenient,
13 accessible and easy to use for voters including voters
14 with limited proficiency in the English language. So 15 that is actually in HAVA. And one of our mandates is to 16 go out there and find information to make it easier to 17 provide or to administer elections using alternative
18 languages.

19 The way we started out was last August we had 20 the first meeting of the Spanish language working 21 group. We had that at the EAC offices. And the reason
22 we chose to deal with the Spanish language first is

38

1 number one it is largest alternative language that
2 folks are dealing with. Most of the-- the majority of 3 jurisdictions out there that deal with alternative
4 languages have been dealing with Spanish. And that
5 really has been because of the growing population size
6 it has been an issue that a lot of knew jurisdictions
7 have had to deal with. So we wanted to bring that group
8 together and see what sort of things we could do. That 9 was in early August.

10 The next group we decided to bring together
Page 34

014348

11 was a group to discuss access to different Asian 12 languages. Under Section 203 of the Voting Rights Act
13 there are actually five Asian languages, Asian and 14 Pacific Islander languages that are covered and that 15 certain jurisdictions have to provide information in 16 those languages. That is Chinese, Japanese, Korean, 17 Vietnamese and Tadolwin (sic). So that working group we 18 actually had at the end of April, so just about a month
19 ago we brought that group together.

20 We are looking toward the future, hopefully
21 sometime next year to be able to bring together a
22 working group dealing with native American languages.

39

1 And that one is going to be really interesting because
2 with a lot of languages we are talking about languages
3 that have no written form, they are all spoken
4 languages. And so that presents a whole additional set
5 of issues when you're talking about administering
6 elections and providing information in an alternative
7 language that you can't write.

8 So basically what all three of these groups
9 are meant to do is provide the EAC with, or help us in 10 accessing what sort of language specific projects we 11 can conduct as an agency.

12 Some of the things that have already come up

13 and that we are actually are working towards is number
14 one creating translation dictionaries of election
15 terminology to have a document that would provide a
16 whole list of election terms and provide a translation
17 from English to whatever the alternative language is.
18 The first one we are working on is actually English to 19 Spanish. And so we are also looking towards doing the 20 five Asian languages.

21 And one of the biggest complaints we have 22 gotten in terms of, and I am sure you have all heard,

40

1 in terms of trying to provide this information is that
2 the translation services that are out there aren't
3 always the best. And when election information gets 4 translated a lot of time it is a literal translation
5 and the meaning is really lost when you translate it to 6 the other language.

7 So we are hoping by providing this tool for 8 election administrators it can help you all meet the 9 needs of the communities that you are serving, and the 10 electorate that you serve.

11 The other project that we actually are 12 working and we hope to have ready by mid summer is 13 providing a translation of the National Voter
14 Registration form. We have the Spanish language
15 version, the updated one already up on our website.

16 Both the English and the Spanish were recently updated.
17 But the form hasn't been translated into the five Asian 18 languages since the FEC first created the initial voter 19 registration form. So it has been quite a while. And we 20 are hoping to get that done fairly quickly so that 21 those jurisdiction can have voter registration forms
22 available in those languages later this year.

1 And then finally we are-- one of the roles of
2 these groups is to provide us not only with the feed
3 back but to help us prioritize. I mean there is all
4 these questions all the time for different research
5 projects that you all think would be useful. And by 6 bringing these groups together we are hoping to 7 establish some sort of priority for what we can do
8 short term to get some immediate assistance out there
9 and then look at what we can do long term in terms of 10 these issues.

11 So that is pretty much what the language
12 groups are doing. So I can take some questions.

13 MR. MARTINEZ: We can move very quickly for 14 some questions or comments from anybody out there? Any 15 questions or comments about Public Access Portals or 16 the working groups we have assembled, Secretary
17 Kidmeyer.

18 SECRETARY KIDMEYER: A question in regards to 19 dialects how do you handle dialects even though it is 20 the same language?

21 MR. CORTES: That is actually one of the 22 things we spent a lot of time on actually during both

42

1 working groups. The Spanish language translations are
2 the first ones we are working on so I can tell you a
3 little bit about how we are going to handle that.

4 One of the suggestions we had was to bring
5 together a group of language experts, academics to 6 review the work we are doing in terms of translation.
7 But the other thing that we are doing is we are going 8 to look at what the regional differences are and 9 provide alternative terms to reference the same thing.

10 For instance the word ballot is translated
11 into Spanish is different if you go to Florida if you
12 go to New York , if you go to California. They all use
13 different terms for that. In the instances were we can 14 provide some sort of standard translation term that 15 everybody understands or alternatively for those were 16 that doesn't exist to provide, you know, multiples
17 translations so that depending on where you're at you 18 can look and see what sort of populations you are 19 coming from.

20 A lot has to do with country of origin. So

21 providing that information you will be able to go to 22 the list and say well my jurisdiction has a very large

1 Puerto Rican population this is probably the
2 translation form I should use.

3 MR. MARTINEZ: Other questions please? Yes,
4 John.

5 JOHN LINDBACK: It is a really basic
6 question. I don't understand the difference between a
7 Public Access Portal and conventional website. Because 8 we have had a ton of information out there on a
9 conventional website. When you talk Public Access
10 Portals what do you mean exactly?

11 MR. CORTES: It is essentially a voter
12 information website. And what they are looking at is a 13 website where you can go in and get information as far
14 as registration status. It is a polling state
15 locations, candidate information, all those very 16 specific election information.

17 We do realize that most states do have basic 18 sites, whether it is the Chief Election Officer or the 19 local jurisdictions that have polling place hours and 20 those things. We are really looking at sites that open 21 further and are more interactive in terms of the 22 information that people can pull from them.

014050

44

1 MR. MARTINEZ: And some states, I think, have
2 more experience in putting forth what is regarded as
3 Public Access Portals. I am looking at Sarah Ball
4 Johnson who is right next to you because I think
5 Kentucky is one of the states that has been something
6 like this for a while. She is whispering to you right
7 now.

8 I broke my own rule. When you raises your 9 hand to speak if you can introduce yourself, state your 10 name for the court reporter. And I apologize, Secretary
11 Mary Kiffmeyer and John Lindback from Oregon. Mary
12 Kiffmeyer from Minnesota.

13 Any other questions or comments on anything
14 that was presented, please.

15 Okay. Edgardo, thank you very much. I
16 appreciate your work.

17 Again as a quick background what we are 18 presenting to you over the next day and a half, and 19 what we just started with the first four presentations
20 are research projects that are grounded in some place
21 in our government statute, within HAVA.

22 We are either wearing a hat of producing a

45

1 national clearing house of best practices; or we are
2 wearing a hat of having to produce voluntary guidance
3 to help clarify title free requirements. So there are 4 different hats that the EAC will wear statutorily that
5 when we wear the hat we want to wear it in the manner
6 that is consistent with the advice that we get from our 7 statutory boards, and that is you.

8 Again what we do proactively is to try to 9 reach out to all of you, as many as we can 10 individually, throughout the course of our fiscal year,
11 asking you to participate in working groups, many of 12 you have done so, seeking your advice through our 13 fiscal year. We have a chance to get you all in one
14 room once or twice a year to put it all in front of you
15 and solicit your candid feedback.

16 So again I encourage your questions. And it
17 doesn't have to happen in this hour. We can continue
18 this conversation throughout the duration of the next 19 day and a half I am going to turn the mic over, after 20 the break, to your Executive Board and they will
21 commence the official gavel of your Standards Board
22 Meeting. So thank you very much for being here once.

1 Thank you for what I know will be a productive day and
2 a half. The four Commissioners will be in and out
3 because we have the Board of Advisors going on 4 simultaneously two floors above you we will be 5 alternating in and out. But all four Commissioners will
6 be around for the next couple of days. We look forward,
7 I certainly look forward to engaging in conversation
8 both with the body collectively and all of you
9 individually.

10 So with that Madam Chair, I have 1:25 if you
11 want to allow for a ten break we can just go five 12 minutes off your schedule. I have 1:25 if we can 13 reassemble at 1:35. Thank you very much.

14 (Recess from 1:25 to 1:45 P.M.)

15 MS. NIGHTSWONGER: Okay. Commission Martinez
16 has already welcomes you and I would also like to 17 welcome you to our meeting here of the National 18 Standards Board. And I am only here because Mike left
19 us. He had the nerve to go out on us. And you all 20 probably got that email about him getting a new 21 fantastic job. So he kind of left me hanging out here.
22 So all of you are going to have to be very patient with

1 me today and tomorrow and please don't throw tomatoes
Page 42

2 at me from the crowd. I will try to get someone up here
3 in a few minutes to help keep me in line.

4 Before we begin to day I guess I should call
5 this meeting to order first of all. I don't have a
6 gavel. I don't know if Adam took it or what happened. I
7 would like to just talk about a couple of ground
8 rules that I'd like to put in place here and that is 9 for our Court Reporter here is going to be taking the 10 minutes, the official minutes of this meeting so we 11 really do need to speak in a microphone when we go to 12 the floor. And we are going to have some roving mics
13 so that you don't always have to get out of your seat.
14 So if you will raise your hand I will call on you and 15 the people carrying the mic will get a microphone to 16 you. And I would like you to address the group with 17 your name and where you are from please. And then you 18 can give your question or whatever. So if you can just 19 try to do that. That way we will know who is talking 20 and what they are saying and we can hear very well.

21 The first thing we need to do is call the 22 role. So I would like to have Bill Campbell if you

48

1 would go ahead and do that. If you would respond when
2 he call your name so we can make sure we have a quorum
3 at this meeting.

4 MR. CAMPBELL: I will read the state name and

20 MS. NIGHTSWONGER I believe we need 56
21 members for a quorum, so we will figure this out.
22 MR. CAMPBELL: Is there anyone that did not

57

1 respond to the roll call?

2 MS. NIGHTSWONGER: Okay. We have a sufficient
3 number of members to conduct business. We will move
4 ahead.

5 Before we get started here with some other 6 things on the agenda I would like to introduce the 7 Executive Board if I could. Probably most of you know
8 who they are but I'd like them to stand so you can make 9 sure you know what their face looks like in case you
10 want to bombard them with a problem or an issue that 11 you're having.

12 Actually is the room okay? I want to ask 13 that. Is anyone too hot or too cold or do we care that 14 they are uncomfortable?

15 So if I could just have you stand when I call
16 your name. First of all Indiana Secretary of State Todd
17 Rokita. And Vermont's Secretary of State Deborah 18 Markowitz. Oregon Director of Elections John Lindback.
19 Kentucky Executive Director Sarah Ball Johnson. City
20 Clerk of Woburn, Massachusetts Bill Campbell who is up
21 here with me. And Clark County Registrar of Voters, 22 Harvard Lomax. And last but not least, even though he

1 came last Natchitoches Clerk of the Court, Louie
2 Bernard. And Louie do you want to come up. You have 3 something to say. I am almost afraid to call him to the 4 table. So that's your Executive Board. And I really
5 appreciate all of them and the help they haven given 6 me. Now you know what they look like in case you have 7 forgotten since Denver.

8 MR. BERNARD: I was asked to be the chaperon
9 for the Executive Board when we were first elected. I
10 was not here last night. I have nothing to do with last 11 night. I don't know what they did and I don't want to 12 know what they did.

13 It is very good to see all of you. I couldn't 14 come in until this morning. Beverly Kauffman and I flew 15 up together from Houston. We just happened to meet up,
16 it is good to be here and see all these familiar faces
17 again.

18 As most of you know Ray Martinez has 19 announced that he will be leaving the EAC in June. I am 20 personally very pleased about that because anyone who 21 has worked with Ray, you know how pushy he can be 22 (laughter). For almost two years we all have had the

1 honor and privilege to work with this tireless and
2 selfless man. And we all better people for and a better
3 EAC for him having come our way.

4 I don't know about you, I sense in this
5 country a partisanship that almost strangles everything
6 we try to do. Our Commissioner since the day I came in 7 here at the meeting in Houston. I've always been amazed
8 how they seem to get along and work together with one 9 another. I have no doubt that behind closed doors when 10 we go home they may holler and scream but there is an 11 outward appearance that lets try to respect each other 12 and accomplish something for the entire
13 group. And I think that is a good thing to do.

14 Ray Martinez has been at the heart of all
15 that is positive, that has happened with EAC in this 16 relatively short period of time.

17 He is one of the four, what I call one of the 18 four T-Rex's at the EAC but the endearing quality
19 about Ray is that he doesn't know he is one of those.
20 He is a man of great humility. He is a man of great
21 sincerity and he is someone more than anything else
22 respects someone's point of view.

1 where I come from the nicest thing that can
2 be said about a man is that he is truly a gentleman.

3 And I think without question, despite if you agree with 4 everything that Ray has said or done, that Ray Martinez
5 is truly a gentleman.

6 Ray, the Executive Board and the Standards
7 Board would like to wish the very best in all that 8 comes down your way in the future we want to give to 9 you our heartfelt appreciation for all you have done
10 for us.

11 I think it would be a shame for anybody to be 12 a part of any organization and leave without being able 13 to say they made a difference. I don't think Ray 14 Martinez has anything to worry about when it comes to 15 having made a difference at the EAC.

16 So I will close it by allowing Peggy to 17 present this plaque. And Ray I just want to tell you
18 that on behalf of all of us it is not an original 19 blessing but it is something that I feel is very 20 appropriate as you leave, the old Irish blessing, we 21 would all say to you:

22 "May the Road rise to meet you.

61

1 May the wind be always at your back.
2 May the sun shine warm upon your face.
3 May the rain fall softly upon your fields.
4 And until we all meet again may the Lord.

5 Hold you in the palm of His hand."

7 Ray, would you come forward you. (Applause).

8 Presented to Ray Martinez III for selfless

9 and exemplary service to the Elections Assistance

10 Standards Board, our heartfelt thanks for going the 11 extra mile for America's voters this 23rd day of May 12 2006, by a very appreciative Executive Board.

13 MR. MARTINEZ: Thank you very much. I am

14 going to get out of your way quickly. I can not thank

15 you, Louie, for the wonderful words and my thanks to 16 all of the members of the Executive Board. I have had

17 the distinct privilege of working very closely now for 18 the past year that I feel like I am a close friend with 19 each and every one of them for a very long time now. I

20 am so appreciative.

21 And you know I am still the Commissioner for 22 at least a few more weeks and I am going to savor every

1 moment of it because has been truly for me the most

2 fulfilling professional experience in my life.

3 In my household growing up in south Texas

4 public service meant something. And I am proud to say

5 to my family and all my friends that I have tried to

6 fulfill that. So I thank you very much. It is with

7 genuine sincerity it has been a privilege for me, a

8 real privilege and honor, to work with all of you. So
9 thank you very much now get to work.

10 (Applause).

11 MS. NIGH SWONGER: Thank you Commissioner.

12 The first order of business is we need to 13 a appoint a Parliamentarian. And Julie has been so kind
14 to do that for us in the past. She too has left us. I
15 don't know what is going on here. Everyone is leaving 16 us.

17 So I would like to open this up. I am sure 18 many of you are Parliamentarians and would love the 19 opportunity to sit up here beside me and keep me in 20 line. So is there anyone who would like to do that 21 today? Don't be shy. We know who you are. Some on.
22 Nobody? Lou, what do you think.

1 MR. BERNARD: I think they are being shy.

2 I know there is someone out there who can do
3 it. You don't want me.

4 MS. NIGH SWONGER: Anybody? I really do need
5 help, honest. Secretary Kiffmeyer, oops she is still 6 deciding here. Thank you so much for volunteering, if 7 you will come up and take the seat on my left. Are you
8 right handed.

9 MS. KIFFMEYER: Either hand will do.

10 MS. NIGHSWONGER: Thank you so much.

11 The next thing on our agenda here, and I
12 think all of you got an agenda I hope. They were in 13 your books. If you need an agenda please raise your 14 hand we can get you one for today's meeting. As we look 15 down over the agenda we are going to do a little bit of 16 Board business here. And then following that we will 17 move into some presentations from the EAC.

18 If we can move ahead with the agenda the 19 chair will entertain a motion to adopt the agenda if we 20 could first.

21 MS. BARTHOLOMEW: I so move.

22 MS. NIGHSWONGER: All in favor?

64

1 (Aye).

2 MS. NIGHSWONGER: Opposed? I hear no opposed,
3 okay. The Aye's have it and we have an agenda.

4 As for the minutes in your book, behind Tab 4
5 I believe it is we have a synthesis of the Denver
6 meeting. I don't know about you but I probably would 7 like to look over those a little bit. And I was 8 wondering if we can postpone talking about the minutes
9 until tomorrow sometime. That would give you tonight
10 to look over the minutes of the synthesis of what was 11 done in the Denver meeting.

12 I think that would be better. There is quite 13 a lot for you to read after just picking up your books.

14 So we will postpone that on the agenda until tomorrow
15 that would work better.

16 Okay. You all have your books. And I think 17 the books are pretty self explanatory. Everything is 18 tabbed and put together very nicely. So we will be 19 working from the agenda. As you notice all of the 20 presenters have information in our books. And you will 21 find them behind the tabs as indicated in your book.

22 Right now we do have some discussion about

1 our bylaws when we were in Denver last year as many of 2 you probably remember. And we actually adopted our
3 bylaws when we were in Denver. But I am going to ask
4 Kevin Kennedy if he would come up. Kevin worked on the 5 original bylaws committee, or whatever that committee
6 was called, when we were trying to establish bylaws.
7 And I would like him to give us a brief presentation on 8 sort of what is going on and the history.

9 I know many of you are new to our Board
10 because someone has left and you have been appointed 11 to this position and you may not even know some of the 12 things that have gone on in the past. So Kevin if you
13 would just give us a brief presentation about that I
14 would appreciate it.

15 MR. KENNEDY: Thank you. First I would like
16 to welcome Peggy to this new position. And challenge her
17 during the course of this meeting to pronounce the name
18 of the New Mexico Secretary of State and the Travis
19 County clerk (laughter).

20 MS. NIGH SWONGER: I have been working at it.

21 MR. KENNEDY: The minutes-- I'm sorry. The 22 bylaws are set up behind Tab 2. And as Peggy said were

66

1 adopted at the last meeting. The minutes provide a
2 very good summary of the fact that we had three motions
3 to change those bylaws. All three of those bylaws
4 failed. So what you see in front of you are the bylaws.

5 I would like to draw your attention to a few
6 sections of that so that your familiar with it because 7 as a new organization. I think this tells you how we 8 are going to operate. It is a point of reference.

9 One of the motions that failed dealt with 10 Section 23 on authority, page one on how to treat non 11 partisan members of the Commission of the Standards
12 Board.

13 I'd also want to make sure you are familiar
14 with the Procedures of Nominating of new members of the 15 Board, members of the Executive Board that are set out
16 on page 2 of the materials under Section 4.

17 Section C of the bylaws themselves, the Page 60

014374

18 Chair, on page 3 certain duties of a client, we have 19 two standing committees according to the bylaws. One is 20 a nominating committee. So there will be some action on 21 that towards the end of the year. And our President
22 will appoint a Chair for that committee and the Board

67

1 will find members.

2 The same is true of the bylaws committee. A
3 Chair will be appointed in the interim. And committee
4 members will volunteer for that. That is in Section 4F,
5 on page 3.

6 The final thing we had some questions that
7 failed at the last meeting dealing on how we establish 8 quorum. And whether or not we use proxy votes. And if
9 you look at Section 5-- I'm sorry, Section 6 on page 8
10 it describes the voting procedures.

11 Section 7 proposes how we handle the actual 12 bylaws for the committee. And with Section 7 I will 13 point out the committee wants us to establish and be 14 charged with developing a forum. My experience of 15 working with this group in the last year in putting a 16 these bylaws together is that there is no shortness of 17 ideas on how to come up with rules and regulations. One 18 of the proposals is there will be a sample form so that 19 we can have a very orderly process in doing this.

20 I think it is very important for all of the 21 members to take the time to review the materials that 22 are on pages one through ten before the next meeting,

68

1 if you have ideas on changes to the bylaws. In terms of
2 that my guess is that the Bylaws Committee will have a
3 form in place.

4 And what I would like to do for my final
5 comment before is there any questions is to point out
6 these initial set of bylaws would not have happened if 7 it were not for Joanne Armbruster, Bill Campbell, Tonni
8 Bartholomew, Howard Sholl all made dedicated attempts 9 to review these bylaws, make suggestions and edit the 10 initial document that was put together by Julie 11 Horowits (sic) so with that unless there are any 12 questions that is mu summary.

13 MS. NIGH SWONGER: I think I might before take 14 questions from the floor. I think a little apology to 15 the Executive Board I believe we asked for people who 16 had an interest in working on the bylaws committee to 17 indicate that somehow while we were at the Denver
18 meeting. And we never really formally asked for that.
19 So I would just indicate that right now that if you
20 want to look at our bylaws and propose any changes we 21 do need a committee to work on that. So I would really 22 like you to let me know if you have any interest in

1 doing that because I think it is out job to appoint a
2 Bylaws Committee. Seven members?

3 MR. KENNEDY: Seven members.

4 MS. NIGHSWONGER:

5 So if you have an interest on working on bylaws I
6 would really challenge you to let me know that. You can 7 email me. My email address is in the book. And I would 8 be happy to hear you about that. Any questions for 9 Kevin?

10 MS. Nighswonger: One thing that I failed to 11 mention. It was just a little housekeeping thing. In 12 the book where the members are listed. Behind Tab 3. I
13 want you all to really take a good look at that list
14 and also the bios for all of the members of the 15 Standards Board because I think there are some people
16 who thing that maybe they were left out, or maybe their 17 bio isn't correct, or it is an old one. Anyway please 18 look at that while you're here at this meeting and make 19 sure that everything on your information is correct.
20 Read your bio. And if there are any changes to anything
21 on that page or in that section I would suggest you get 22 hold of Adam. You can email Adam at the EAC and he will

70

1 get those changes made before we send out anymore
2 mailings or meet again. So it you will take a look at 3 that that will be great.

4 Okay. I think I would like to call
5 Commissioner Martinez to the front again. He is going
6 to review and present the Standards Board charter. And 7 we can talk about that little bit.

8 MR. MARTINEZ: Thank you, Madam Chair.

9 One person, and actually I believe you have 10 heard his name over and over again, but needs to be 11 properly introduced is Adam Ambrosi(sic) who is my 12 special assistant and who had helped to pull together
13 all of the logistics and all of the preparations for 14 this meeting. He has done a terrific job. He did it in 15 Denver. Adam is your point of contact for anything that 16 you need. He will be floating around here for the next 17 couple of days and will be available to help in any 18 way. So that is who Adam Ambrosi is.

19 The Charter that we took up, the Federal 20 Advisory Act, governs advisory committees to Federal 21 agencies. It requires that we adopt a charter in the 22 next couple of days.

71

1 MS. NIGHSWONGER: If you don't have a copy of
2 the charter it is outside on the table.

3 MR. MARTINEZ: Adam can you get a stack of 4 copies and make them available.

5 MS. NIGHSWONGER: Maybe we can them pass out.

6 MR. MARTINEZ: Right.

7 MS. NIGHSWONGER: I am sorry. I meant to do
8 that.

9 MR. MARTINEZ: Yes i should have done that.
10 But we have them up front and Adam will get a stack and 11 walk down the center isle here and pass them out.

12 The Charter, Madam Chair, is required under 13 the Federal Advisory Committee Act and it essentially,
14 I have a copy of one in front of me this is the Charter
15 that governed the authority of this Advisory Committee
16 for the past two years. And it simply has to be 17 readopted. It is required to be readopted. And we 18 readopt it every two years. And you have reached the 19 two year mark.

20 Essentially the Charter reiterates it just 21 takes the authority and responsibilities that come
22 straight out of our governing statute which is the Help

72

014379

1 America Vote Act puts it into a Charter type of format
2 and says, here are your responsibilities, here is how
3 we are going to carry out those responsibilities. It a
4 s pretty straight forward document. And we will ask
5 that you all will allow for the Charter to be adopted
6 once again.

7 And, Madam Chair, of course, if there is any 8 questions or if there is a desire to wait until your 9 plenary session tomorrow in case anybody has any 10 questions or concerns obviously I don't think that is a 11 problem from our perspective. It is just before you
12 leave here at the close of business tomorrow we 13 obviously need to readopt your Charter. As it is now
14 about to expire. Thank you. Back to you Madam Chair.

15 MS. NIGH SWONGER: Thank you, Commissioner. I
16 need a motion.

17 MS. VIGIL-GORON: Rebecca Vigil-Gorom from 18 the State of New Mexico. I make a motion for adoption
19 if there is no objection from the other members.

20 MR. KENNEDY; I will second that motion. I am
21 Kevin Kennedy.

22 MS. NIGH SWONGER: All in favor?

73

1 (Ayes from the audience).

2 MS. NIGH SWONGER: Opposed? Motion carries.

3 MR. MARTINEZ: Thank you very much.

014380

4 MS. NIGH SWONGER: I'm sorry. I am out of 5 order. We did not have discussion. Too late the motion
6 carried.

7 Would like to introduce my secretary, Joe
8 Meyer. I am so nervous about this you all conduct
9 these meetings a lot on a local level. This is not 10 like we do in Wyoming. We take a sot gun and when 11 someone is out of order we just shoot it. (laughter) I
12 guess that would go over big here.

13 Okay. Next item on our agenda is the 14 election of our Executive Board vacancy. With Mike
15 leaving that left a vacancy on the Standards Board and 16 on the Executive Board. Now when we went to figure out 17 how to figure out how to fill this vacancy nothing was 18 very clear about that in our Bylaws. So there is 19 something for you to do.

20 So what the Board talked about-- many of you,
21 or all of you, should have received emails from Adam 22 with the names of the people who are interested in

1 filling that vacancy. What the Executive Board talked
2 and decided to do because we didn't have a nominating 3 committee either, which is something that we need to 4 appoint and get a nominating committee before our next
5 meeting. We decided to go ahead and throw that out for

6 people to put their names in for that position. We did
7 have four people that showed interest for that 8 position. And I believe Adam set their bios out, that 9 are over there on the table. That is another thing that 10 is on the table. So if you don't have them with you
11 maybe raise your hand and we can get you a copy of that 12 also.

13 what we decided to do is take these names-- I
14 would like the four people who did submit their names
15 and their bio to give us a two or three minute
16 introduction to themselves so that we will know their 17 face and know who they really are. And I am going to 18 give them that opportunity. And then we would like to 19 pass out a paper ballot. And we are going to let all 20 the voting members vote for one person that he would 21 like to fill this vacancy on the Executive Board. And 22 we have a very responsible Counting Board that is going

75

1 to handle those ballots for us. Did everyone get a copy
2 of the bios?

3 MR. CAMPBELL: Can I say something?

4 MS. NIGHSWONGER: Yes, Bill, you can say
5 anything that you want.

6 MR. CAMPBELL: The bylaws do provide a method
7 by which a method is filled. And that is the Executive
8 Board Interim appointment. But we, as an Executive

9 Board, have discussed this. We took the message and 10 hold closely the message that we received when we were 11 first appointed or elected as an Executive Board and 12 that is we never want the full Board to feel that we 13 are trying to usurp any authority. And although you
14 have delegated it to us we decided the best practice
15 although it was only a four or five month period was 16 actually wait to hold the position vacant and have the 17 full election take place today.

18 So the by laws do have a provision that it
19 didn't have to have sufficient information to allow us
20 to set up that election today. We have a Nominating 21 Committee and deadlines to next February. So I hope you
22 understand how we got here and how we tried to limit

76

1 the selection process without limiting the selection
2 process and that the Bylaws Committee will know that 3 one of their first tasks is to try to work out how this 4 interim election will be can be made.

5 MS. NIGHSWONGER: Secretary Markowitz?

6 MS. MARKOWITZ: I am sorry for not thinking
7 about this morning at our Executive Board meeting
8 preparing for this today. But under Roberts Rules in 9 order to have a paper ballot for elections we need to 10 have a vote to do so. So I will actually so move.

11 MS. NIGH SWONGER: It is in the regular bylaws
12 already.

13 MS. MARKOWITZ; Oh, good so it's in the 14 regular bylaw. But thank you. Anyone else on our board
15 want to make any comments about how we came to this
16 process?

17 okay. If not I'd like to introduce the four 18 people. And if you would just step to the microphone.
19 First I am going to call Carol Johnson who is the 20 Deputy City Clerk from Manchester, New Hampshire.
21 Anything you want to say, you can tell us about 22 yourself.

77

1 MS. JOHNSON: Good afternoon, my name is
2 Carol Johnson. I am from Manchester, New Hampshire and 3 I am the local election official. I have been in this
4 municipal business for 29 years, hopefully I don't look
5 it. So I have been around for a while. I am a certified
6 municipal clerk. I have been involved in the City
7 Clerk's Office since 1988. It was not my first
8 introduction to elections but that is where I started
9 helping run them for the city.

10 I guess somebody said to me very nicely in 11 the hallway a little while ago that with every great 12 act there are some unattended consequences which is why
13 I responded to the email.

14 My bio is not contained in the book which is 15 why I am mentioning that although I have been around 16 for a couple of years. I am a certified municipal 17 clerk. I have worked as the mediator, if you will, with 18 the State and a lot of local election officials in the 19 process of delving out the processes that Howard has 20 brought us.

21 And the reason for responding to all of that 22 was I think local election officials are the ones that

78

1 frequently advise State because we are in the nitty
2 gritty and we are in with the details of it. And we
3 frequently work with other municipal and local election
4 officials and help get through the process in a
5 positive manner which is not always easy talk but 6 usually we can get there.

7 The Standards Board is very much that. It is 8 in an advisory capacity but the devil is in the detail.
9 And I think this is the Board that needs to focus on 10 those details for the EAC. So with that I will part 11 company because we have a lot on our agenda today.
12 Thank you.

13 MS. NIGH SWONGER: Thank you, Carol. Okay,
14 Sandi Wasolowski. I hope I said that correctly Sandi is 15 the Franklin City Clerk. She is from Franklin,

16 wisconsin.

17 MS. WASOLOWSKI: Thank you. I am Sandi

18 wasolowski. You pronounced it pretty close.

19 I am the Director of Clerk Services, City
20 Clerk for the city of Franklin, Wisconsin. As a local 21 election official election official I represent 1850
22 local election officials in the state of Wisconsin. I

79

1 have been involved in the administration of election
2 since 1976. So for some 30 years that has been my 3 desire my strong field.

4 I have been on the Standards Board since its
5 inception. I briefly was the State of Wisconsin
6 elections director and HAVA coordinator. I was-- I
7 returned to the city of Franklin after a new months of 8 doing that for the state. The weather in Washington has 9 taken my throat and voice.

10 You can see on the bio that I have been 11 involved with the state of Wisconsin HAVA State Plan
12 Committee. I was a former member of the SVRS, the State
13 Regulation Administration Steering Committee. I was-- I
14 am still on the Standards Board for the state of 15 Wisconsin. I am a member of the International Institute
16 of Municipal Clerks. I am also a member of the 17 Wisconsin Municipal Clerks Association. I am the past
18 president of the Metro Milwaukee Municipal Clerks

19 Association.

20 I would be honored to fill the unexpired term
21 of Mike. And I will be brief and that is it.

22 MS. NIGHSWONGER: Thank you. You all have 80

1 weird names, Ed Szczesniak, they are worse than my
2 name Ed is from New York. He is Onondaga County
3 Commissioner of Elections for Syracuse.

4 MR. SZCZESNIAK: Thank you. Good afternoon.

5 The reason I responded positively I was 6 selected and I was honored by back in 2003, January, to 7 be selected to be as a local official on this Standards
8 Board.

9 what I have attempted to do over the years is 10 attend every meeting and be as active as I can in this
11 particular group. I think it is a meaningful role for a
12 very meaningful organization, the Election Assistance
13 Commission in terms of the revolutionary impact it is 14 having on elections administrations across this 15 country.

16 Being from New York as you see I feel a
17 little overwhelmed by three women and myself on this 18 floor of candidates here. But what I want to say
19 is rather than read through all my notes I have been 20 involved in all levels from the local town level as a

21 candidate, as a party official right through county
22 level, state level and national level in terms of

81

1 involvement in the party as well with elections.

2 I think I have a fair understanding what it
3 looks like at the County level. And I happen to be from 4 New York State. But we have had the distinction of 5 being the only state that has had DOG lawsuit against 6 it to enforce HAVA. And I won't take responsibility for 7 the lawsuit. But I know the difficulty that you all
8 are going through in terms of trying to make this work.
9 And the time lines that Congress has set for us to try
10 to make this work.

11 I think that participating in things like the 12 Standards Board goes a long way toward making sure 13 everyone understands how things are happening at the 14 local level to make this thing happen. I think our 15 mission, if there is one, is to have a can do attitude
16 to make this system work whether it is through Best 17 Practices or whatever. We can share that knowledge and 18 do it right at the county level as well as the state
19 level and of course it all becomes the Federal level.

20 So with that I would be honored if you would 21 consider me to be the replacement for the unexpired
22 term. Thank you very much.

1 MS. NIGH SWONGER: There are other people
2 trying to get rid of met to.

3 Last but not least Tonni Bartholomew, is the 4 City Clerk of Troy, Michigan.

5 MS. BARTHOLOMEW: Thank you very much for 6 letting me have this opportunity to speak to you. I too
7 am very interested in this Directors position on the 8 Executive Board. I am a local clerk for a Municipality
9 of about 90,000 people. I do everything from recruit
10 people to code the devices. I have been involved at 11 various levels in the State. I do instructions for the 12 MNL as well as the Michigan Tactical Association and I
13 have been involved on various advisory boards for the 14 state of Michigan. I am currently Voter File Advisory 15 Board. I was on the JEC for the State Devices for the 16 State of Michigan.

17 If you talk to people from Michigan they will 18 say I am a very detailed person. I am all about all 19 about code standards and laws and if it says do it they 20 we do it. I think I can lend that kind of expertise
21 from my experience which I am much older than I look, I 22 have been involved with elections since 1986, '87. And

1 I would really like the opportunity to serve you and
2 serve the people of the United States.

3 MS. NIGHSWONGER: Thank you, Tonni. How many
4 of us can say we are older than we look?

5 Okay. If there is no objections we will 6 proceed with the lucky new candidate to join us on this
7 Executive Board. Oh yes, did we get the ballots past
8 out? Would you pass the ballots out please and while 9 you are doing that I want to remind you to vote for 10 one, please do not over vote or under vote, vote for 11 one. And if you can you can fold your ballot in half 12 once. I am going to have Sarah and John collect the 13 ballots. Sarah I am going to ask you to take this side
14 of the room, on my right. John if you will collect the 15 ballots on the left side of the room please. Todd would 16 you like to get the map? So if you will mark your 17 ballot and fold it in half they will pick up your 18 ballot. And then we will have a group of people who 19 will be counting the votes and we will announce to you
20 on one of our breaks who the lucky person is.

21 Oh, yes, is there anyone in the room that did
22 not respond to the first roll call? That is one thing I

1 want to ask you. Julie as been running around trying to 2 track down her luggage. That is always a hard thing.

3 Sara John and Todd are going to be picking up
4 the ballots and I would like to remind you that voting
5 members only will be marking the ballots. Polls are 6 officially closed.

7 Again I would like to remind you before we 8 close this session of our meeting I would just like to 9 remind you if you are interested in serving on a 10 nominating committee before the next meeting we will 11 have to utilize a nominating committee in order to 12 get-- Phil I believe there are two more positions on 13 our Board that will be vacant by people-- Oh, three?
14 One State and two local. If you're interested in 15 serving on a nominating committee I would appreciate
16 getting information about that so we can do this 17 process appropriately at our next meeting.

18 Thank you so much. And we will move on into 19 the next portion of our meetings. If I can get 20 Commissioner Martinez' attention. He is in the hallway
21 there. We will move on to our next report on Getting a 22 report on Provisional Voting. So will the panel who

1 going to be talking on Provisional Voting if you can

2 come on up here we will give you our seats.

3 MR. MARTINEZ: We will move into our next
4 presentation. We are, by my watch, about 11 minutes
5 off schedule right now. So we will make up the time
6 during break, or at some point we will figure out how 7 to do that. I know some of you had plans after the 8 meeting is over to get out of the hotel and so forth.
9 So we will try to honor our agenda as closely as 10 possible.

11 Out next pane will give us an important
12 presentation on Provisional Voting. The Help America
13 Vote Act requires as all of you know that the EAC at a
14 minimum consider the development of voluntary guidance
15 on any of the Title 3 requirements the Title 3
16 requirements of course for those of us with voting
17 systems that require section 301, State Wide
18 Voter Registration Voter Data Basis and Voter ID for 19 certain voters that are in Section 303 and Section 302
20 which is Provisional Voting and Poling Place Signage.
21 So in looking at that mandate that the EAC developed 22 Voluntary Guidance on Provisional Voting, we felt we

1 needed to commission some sound research and analysis
2 on the issue of provisional voting.

3 we turned for that task to the Eagleton--
4 Tom, forgive me is it Eagleton Institute, yes, I almost

5 lost it there, at Rutgers University. And in turn
6 Eagleton Institute also brought in Moritz School of Law
7 at the Ohio State University and thus we have Professor
8 Edward Foley.

9 Tom O'Neil is the Project Manager, the lead
10 consultant, if you will, to the EAC for the study that 11 has been conducted on provisional voting. They will 12 give you the details. We have been working with Tom now
13 for perhaps the last eight or ten months perhaps longer
14 than that. Lots of discussions about the issue. Tom 15 will present, as well as professor Ed Foley who is the 16 director of Election Law at Moritz program, an expert,
17 well known national expert on election law issues
18 covering the whole gamut of election law from 19 redistricting to election administration.

20 we are very pleased to have their
21 participation in this project. And particularly please 22 to have them here today to present the draft product of

1 what they have been working on and to answer your 2 questions. what we have asked our presenters to do is 3 give you an audio visual presentation that will be 4 short and to the point we hope. After which our counsel
5 Julie Thompson-Hodgkins is here. She is listed as the 6 resource person and she will lead the discussion upon.

016399

7 the end of the presentation. And we hope that you will 8 be-- that you will not be shy in asking questions and 9 give us your opinions and advice on the work product
10 you are about to hear about.

11 With that, Tom, I will give you the podium

13 DISCUSSION: DRAFT REPORT ON PROVISIONAL VOTING

14 Presenters: Thomas O'Neill, Provisional Voting/ Voter
15 Identification

16 Tim Vercellotti, Eagleton Institute.

17 Edward Foley, Election Law @ Moritz School
18 of Law .

19 MR. O'NEIL: Thank you Commissioner Martinez,
20 I am happy to be here. We regard the presentation we 21 are making at this meeting as phase of our research. We 22 are going to be presenting our final draft, report and

88

1 recommendations. And we hope that it will elicit from 2 you comments and questions that will become part and 3 parcel of our research efforts to understand the 4 dynamics of provisional voting in 2004 and going
5 forward. And we hope that the states have much to learn
6 from one another in the provisional voting process and 7 that we can do something to act as a catalyst in that 8 mutual learning exercise that all of you are engaged in 9 here as members of this Board.

10 As as Commissioner Martinez said we are 11 looking at provisional voting. We have been working on 12 this project just shy of a year. And today you're to 13 going to the see sum of what we have concluded and our 14 recommendations to the EAC. In term what we are 15 recommending to the EAC is that they make 16 recommendations for Best Practices to States and 17 localities to improve the functioning of the 18 provisional voting system.

19 Commissioner Martinez described the parties
20 that are doing this, the Eagleton Institute of Politics
21 at Rutgers State University in New Jersey, the Moritz
22 College of Law at the Ohio State University which is

89

1 well known for the website it maintains on election law
2 all around the county.

3 Ed Foley and I are happy to be up here on the 4 podium but we represent a larger group. This is the 5 project management team. The principal investigators
6 Dr. Ruth Mandel, the Director of the Eagleton Institute
7 of Politics. With us here today, from the Project
8 Management Team, are Ingrid Reed, Ansa Cadgie from the 9 Moritz College of Law and one of our lead researchers
10 Tim Bersolli, Assistant Director from the Center of 11 Public Interest Polling that undertook the survey of 12 local election officials on which some of our findings

13 are based.

14 We proceeded by looking at six questions that 15 the EAC raised with us. And those questions are 16 displayed on this slide they are basic, they are 17 important and some of them I have to tell you are very 18 hard indeed to answer.

19 How do states prepare for HAVA's
20 Provisional Voting Requirements?. How did preparation
21 and performance vary between states that previously had 22 some form of provisional ballot and those that did not?

90

1 We will be coming back to that issue several times via 2 this report. And so we have developed a short hand for 3 it. We call them Old states and New States. And I hope
4 you will bear with me. If you come from one of those 5 Old States we don't mean it personally.

6 How did litigation effect the implementation
7 of provisional voting? How effective was provisional
8 voting in enfranchising qualified? Did state and 9 local processes provide for consistent counting of 10 provisional ballots? Did local election officials have 11 a clear understanding on how to implement provisional
12 voting?

13 To answer those questions we undertook
14 several steps. Our aim being throughout this to provide

15 the EAC with a strategy to engage the states in a 16 continuing effort to strengthen the provisional voting
17 process and increase the consistency, this is 18 important, increase the consistency by which 19 provisional voting was administered. Particularly 20 consistency within the State as opposed to consistency
21 on the States.

22 We surveyed 400 local election officials. We

91

1 reviewed the EAC election day survey. We analyzed the 2 states experience with provisional voting mostly on a
3 statistical basis. We collected the provisional voting
4 statutes and regulations for each State in the country.
5 And in fact part of our deliverables to the EAC was a
6 continuum of those statutes and regulations. And they 7 will all be on one CD rom for easy access. And we 8 analyzed the litigation that took place concerning 9 provisional voting issues in 2004.

10 Summary of findings, again looking at this 11 consistency issue which is so important. There was 12 considerable variation among the States. HAVA allows
13 the States considerable latitude in how to implement 14 provisional voting including deciding who beyond the 15 required categories of voters should receive 16 provisional ballots. And how to determine which

17 provisional ballots should be counted. We had just shy
18 of two million ballots cast in 2004 and 63 percent of 19 them were counted.

20 Now the variation of among the States is 21 enormous. The percentage of provisional ballot in the 22 total vote varied by a factor of a thousand. From as

92

1 high as seven percent in Alaska to Vermont's six one
2 thousands of one percent. Now that's like the lobster
3 production between Maine and Utah. You don't find that 4 large a difference among States on measures like this.
5 So there is an enormous variation.

6 And the portion of the provisional ballots
7 counted varied significantly from 96 percent in Alaska
8 to 6 percent in Delaware. We don't need to tell you is 9 that the percentage of total votes cast rises in terms
10 of provisional votes being a greater that becomes more 11 and more significant in closer elections. If the 12 election margin of victory is two percent but seven 13 percent in provisional ballots that is a very 14 different scenario than if one percent was of ballots
15 are provisional but the victory was ten percent.

16 There are some sources of the variation among 17 the States. Number one that jumped out at us was 18 experience. The share of provisional ballots in the 19 total vote was six times greater in States that had

20 used provisional ballots before than in States where 21 the provisional ballot was new before.

22 MR. VERCELLOTTI: It is good to be an old

93

1 State.

2 MR. O'NEILL: In the 25 states, 25 States
3 that had experience with provisional balloting 18 were 4 new.

5 Administrative arrangements. Simple
6 administrative differences also I think go a long way
7 in explaining the variation in the use of provisional
8 ballots.

9 The time to evaluate ballots. How much time
10 after the election do you give officials to determine
11 whether a provisional ballot should be counted? States
12 that provided less than a week, counted a little bit
13 more of a third of the provisional ballots counted.
14 States that permitted more than two weeks counted 61
15 percent. That time factor is important.

16 And voter registration data basis. States
17 with voter registration data basis, and there were only 18 a few of them in 2004, counted an average of only 20
19 percent of the provisional ballots cast. States without 20 those data basis counted twice that number.

21 MR. FOLEY: If I can just underscore these two

22 points that you're going to hear throughout this

94

1 presentation the importance of both of them. In other
2 words the time to evaluate the ballots increasing the 3 the accuracy is a very important finding. And it leads 4 to an issue on how to trade off the value of accuracy
5 verses speed or completeness of finality of the 6 election. And we will be talking ore about that.

7 Likewise another theme that will run
8 throughout this presentation is the important
9 relationship between the provisional voting system as 10 one component of an overall election system with the 11 registration data basis. Those two subsystems if you
12 will are very much integrated as you know.

13 And they will be increasingly integrated 14 under HAVA and under centralized voter data basis.

15 MR. O' NEILL: Now turning from looking at 16 variation across States to variation within States.

17 We gathered county election-- provisional
18 ballot data for 20 States. Had we been able to get data
19 from all of the States at a county level the ranges and 20 variation I am reporting to you might be wider than 21 what we found. So bear that in mind. The rate of 22 counting provisional ballots within the same State

1 varied by as much as 90 to 100 percent among counties
2 in the State. The resources available to administer
3 provisional voting varied significantly within the same
4 State.

5 The election day study found that staffing
6 problems appeared to be particularly acute in 7 jurisdictions in the lower income and education
8 category. Small rural jurisdictions, large poor urban 9 jurisdictions have higher rates of inadequate training
10 for poll workers. The jurisdictions in poorer areas
11 reported more inactive voter registrations and more
12 provisional ballots cast. Richer areas had more poll
13 workers per polling place and reported lower rates of 14 staffing problems per precinct.

15 There are other effects that go beyond what 16 is going on at the State other than socio-economic. Some 17 reports from the States suggest possible sources of 18 lack of consistency. You know Iowa cast some 19 provisional not signed in the assigned precincts. Even 20 thought the States policy was to count only those 21 ballots cast in the correct precinct. So you could see 22 how that would enlarge the variation among counties in

96

1 the percentage of provisional votes that were cast.
2 Similar kinds of free lancing were going on in
3 Washington state.

4 MR. FOLEY:: Another theme that we found.
5 There is a difference between the rules on the books
6 and the rules as they were enforced in practice. And 7 that obviously is of concern potentially in respect to 8 litigation when we get to that point.

9 MR. O'NEILL: Turning to from this sort of 10 summary in terms of what the variation was all about to 11 some of the details of the answers we developed in each
12 of the questions that were put to us by the EAC.

13 First how did States prepare for the 14 provisional voting requirement? Most election
15 officials we talked to in our survey received
16 provisional voting instructions from State government.
17 But the type and amount of that instructions varied
18 very widely across the States. Almost all of them
19 provided training or written instruction to precinct
20 public poll workers. Only in about one in ten made
21 available to poll workers the voter registration data
22 base. Equally rare was training or written procedures

014492

1 for poll workers to understand how provisional ballots
2 would be evaluated.

3 Second question, how did preparation and 4 performance vary between States, the old States and the 5 new States? The local election officials in the old
6 States felt more confident about exercising their
7 responsibilities for provisional voting. As we earlier
8 18 States were new to provisional voting, 25 others had 9 experience.

10 The New State officials I thought they did
11 not receive enough information more frequently and felt
12 and felt more funding was necessary to educate voters
13 about, their rights to cast a provisional ballot.
14 Ballot .

15 Local Officials in the old states counted
16 more ballots, were better prepared to direct voters to 17 their correct precincts with maps and other types of 18 information. And regarded provisional voting as easy to 19 implement.

20 Officials from new states were more likely to 21 believe that voters needed more information where to 22 vote and to feel that provisional voting created

1 unnecessary problems. There was much less if a response
2 than from officials in the old states.

3 MR. FOLEY: One could abstract from that
4 provisional voting is a dynamic process. It is not
5 static, it's not that HAVA created provisional voting
6 and now we have it and we are done. There is a learning
7 curve here. It is not an all or nothing situation.
8 There are shades of gray involved. Sometimes it is sold
9 as a safety mechanism, or fail safe. But the ability
10 for it to perform as a fail safe is dependant on 11 various factors. It's not automatic.

12 MR. O'NEILL: Question three: How did
13 litigation effect the implementation of provisional
14 voting?

15 Litigation before the election clarified
16 voters rights. To sue in federal Court to remedy
17 violations of HAVA; to receive provisional ballots even 18 though they wouldn't be counted; have the voters be 19 directed to the right precinct. And most of the 20 litigations occurred to late to influence how states
21 implemented provisional voting in the year 2004. Even 22 with that finding I think it is a fair assessment to

1 say that pre election litigation was more successful in 2 changing the dynamic of at least the rules. And to 3 clarify what the rules were going into election day.
4 And therefore could be perceived as having some utility
5 in the process. Post election litigation only invited

052306

6 more complexity, more problems, more uncertainty and 7 usually unsuccessful from the litigants perspective and 8 obviously for complicated from the administrative 9 perspective as well.

10 How effective was provisional voting in 11 enfranchising qualified voters?

12 And I suggested at the outset some of these 13 questions were very hard to answer. And this was among 14 the hardest. To know the answer to how effective was 15 provisional voting in providing that fail safe that Ed
16 just mentioned and you show up and your not on the 17 registration rolls how effective is getting that 18 provisional to you? Ideally to know that we have to 19 know the decisions that were made in 200,000 precincts
20 around the country. And we would have to know the 21 criteria that the evaluators of provisional ballot used
22 when the process came to them to decide which ones

100

1 counted and which ones didn't. And there is a
2 considerable element of individual eccentricity in 3 making these decisions. It is hard to predict and 4 therefore we had to look for a more abstract way to 5 have some kind of number to attach effectiveness. If 6 that batter hits the ball one third of the time as it
7 comes across the plate it is .333. So we are aiming for 014405

8 something not quite as precise as Ted Williams 405 but 9 something that would at least put us in the order of 10 magnitude.

11 We know that 1.2 million voters, or about 12 one percent of the turnout, got to vote by provisional 13 ballot who otherwise would have been turned away. But 14 what is the denominator of that? What do you divide
15 into? Well in 2000 the CalTech MIT voting technology
16 estimated that two and a half million to four million
17 votes were lost in the 2000 Presidential election
18 because of registration mix ups or confusion at the 19 polling place.

20 Now registration mix up and confusion at the 21 polling place are pretty good description of what is 22 going to put someone in the line for provisional ballot

101

1 instead of to get on the regular machine. So 1.2
2 million voters casting a provisional ballot and maybe
3 two and a half to three million figure in the number of 4 them who were there but didn't get one, we figure that
5 provisional balloting might just have been 50 percent
6 effective in 2004. It's an approximation but it
7 indicates something I think we all will agree about 8 which is there is room for improvement.

9 Indeed legislative activity in the states
10 following the 2004 election leads us to believe that

11 the states themselves recognized that they were not 12 satisfied with the effectiveness of their provisional
13 voting systems and made efforts to improve that through 14 legislation.

15 Question five: Did state and local processes
16 provide for consistent counting of provisional
17 ballots?

18 Again this is a topic of considerable
19 interest. As we have already talked about there was 20 little consistency among states and within states. That 21 the use of provisional ballots was not distributed
22 evenly across the country. In fact six states accounted

102

1 for two thirds of all the provisional ballots cast. The 2 share of provisional ballots in the total vote was six
3 times greater in experiences states than in new states.
4 The more rigorous the state's voter ID requirements the 5 smaller percentage of provisional ballots that were 6 counted. And new states with registration data bases
7 counted 20 percent of the ballots past. Those without 8 data bases counted more than double that rate, 44
9 percent.

10 MR. FOLEY: And I can add to that. The most 11 common reason why a provisional ballot was not counted
12 in most states it was reported that the provisional

13 voter was not a registered voter. That was the reason
14 given. What is poorly understood unfortunately at this 15 point is what underlies the reason why that voter was 16 not registered according to the system, yet that voter 17 attested that to believing he or she was registered by 18 HAVA. And what our research has shown, as Tom just 19 suggested, is that there is a considerable variation
20 both among states and within states as the method for 21 checking whether or not the provisional voter is 22 registered.

103

1 The methods and the processes that the system
2 uses to try to verify whether this ballot should count
3 varied considerably. And there is very little rule
4 guidance as to what that methodology should be.

5 So an important part of our presentation
6 today is the need to better understand that and to 7 develop more guidelines. The theme here is there is 8 just a lot of difference just about the mechanics on 9 how to go about determining whether this voter is even 10 an eligible.

11 MR. O'NEILL: Continuing on with the 12 consistency question.

13 States that allowed out of precinct ballots
14 counted 65 percent of the provisional ballots cast.
15 States that recognized only ballots cast in the proper

16 precinct counted 42 percent. In old states the 17 difference was greater than that 52 percent were 18 counted in states requiring new district ballots and 70
19 percent were counted in those allowing other precinct
20 ballots.

21 This aspect of the consistency issue takes us
22 back to the time question. Fourteen states permitted

104

1 less than a week to evaluate provisional ballots, they
2 counted 35 percent of the ballots. Fifteen states
3 between one and two weeks, they counted 47 percent of 4 the ballot. And 14 states that permitted more than two 5 weeks they counted 61 percent of the ballots. Just the 6 administrative handling of the ballots makes a
7 difference in the performance of the state.

8 Conclusions with this? The states have
9 latitude on how they meet under the HAVA requirements.
10 A considerable degree of variation among the states are 11 to be expected. And here is the interesting observation
12 about that. If the variation among the states reflects
13 differences in their political cultures it is likely to 14 persist. If it reflects a learning curve for the new 15 states figuring out how to do this provisional ballot
16 thing then consistency among the states is likely to be 17 achieved much more quickly than if some states have a

18 fundamental philosophic objection to the concept of the 19 provisional ballot.

20 Questions six: Did local election officials
21 have a clear understanding on how to implement
22 provisional voting?

105

1 what we did was ask the local officials
2 themselves to characterize understanding. From a sample
3 of about 400 of them around the country eight out of 4 ten reported receiving instructions from state
5 government; four out of ten, only four out of ten I
6 should say, felt poll workers needed more training to 7 understand their responsibilities.

8 Moving back now from asking the local
9 officials themselves for some kind of objective
10 evaluation on how the process was managed. The lack of 11 consistency among and within states indicates the 12 differences in how our election officials understand
13 their responsibilities and managed the 2004 election.

14 In thinking through this body of information
15 we have to recognize the existence of inconsistency of 16 understanding between the states and within the states.
17 Particularly of concern are the inconsistencies within 18 a state. And that we need to forge away to approach
19 this as a learning experience, a way to understand and 20 explain the rules by which each state governs

21 provisional voting .

22 And we will phrase this as a set of

106

1 questions. Does the provisional ballot system
2 distribute, collect, record and tally provisional
3 ballots with sufficient accuracy as to be seen as 4 procedurally legitimate by both supporters and
5 opponents of the winning candidate. That is the acid
6 test here.

7 Second: Does the provisional balloting
8 system place administrative demands on local 9 jurisdictions that are realistically related to the 10 staff and other resources available to fulfill those 11 demand?

12 Third: Is the variation within state great 13 enough to cause concern that the system might not be 14 administered uniformly from county to county.

15 MR. FOLEY: I just want to act on Tom's point
16 about the acid test of legitimacy. The reason why
17 clarity is so important to that is again because the 18 provisional votes matter as you know when there is a
19 close race and when there is a dispute about what to do
20 with these ballots. Should they be verified or not?
21 And if the rules for that process are unclear and 22 disputable that casts everything in doubt. It casts the

107

1 process in doubt; it casts the results of the election
2 in doubt. So clarity is the first and most important
3 value for bringing legitimacy to the process. Because 4 it will be a process that unfolds after election day in 5 the heat of the moment. And to avoid litigation, and 6 particularly destabilizing litigation, clarity has to be 7 the first priority.

8 MR. O'NEILL: In looking for clarity a place
9 the states often turn to is the history of litigation.
10 Litigation coming out of the 2004 election clarified
11 the right of voters to receive provisional ballots even 12 though the election officials were certain they would 13 not be counted. And lawsuits prompted election
14 officials to take better care in instructing precinct
15 officials on how to notify voters about the needs and 16 go to the correct precinct in order to cast a countable
17 ballot. Those are the issues of clarity like we have 18 just been discussing.

19 We recommending to the EAC that it recommend 20 as Best Practices to states the promulgation of clear
21 standards for evaluating provisions ballots. And 22 provide training for the officials who will apply those

108

1 ballots. We believe they should provide materials to 2 local jurisdictions. To train polling workers on such 3 procedures as how to locate polling places for 4 potential voters who show up at the wrong place. And 5 to think that the only permissible requirement to 6 obtain a provisional ballot is an affirmation by that
7 voter standing in front of a local election official
8 that that voter is registered in the jurisdiction and 9 eligible to vote in an election for federal office. And 10 poll workers need the training to understand their duty
11 to give those voters a provisional ballot.

12 MR. FOLEY: And on that point, on the voters
13 affirmation, it's their sincere belief that they think 14 that they are registered. The polling place is not the 15 time or place to verify eligibility in determining 16 whether the voter is correct or not.

17 And in that sense as a working rule, as a
18 practical matter given long lines in a high turn out
19 election, you know if a voter asks for provisional
20 ballot they really ought to get one. Then you can 21 figure out what to do with it later the one question
22 that can be asked is: Do you really think you are

1 registered? If they think they are registered they
2 should get that provisional ballot. It should not be a
3 complicated process to administer provisional voting at 4 the precinct.

5 There maybe complexities that are unavoidable
6 after election day. And again it might be best to 7 minimize those complexities as we get into. But it is 8 very, very important to stream line the process at the 9 polling place itself. And so it should be virtually
10 automatic that if a voter says: I think I am entitled 11 to vote; that they get the provisional ballot.

12 MR. O'NEILL: We believe the general way the 13 states can most effectively pursue improvements in the 14 provisional voting process is to take a quality
15 improvement approach.

16 Defining quality begins in asking how well
17 the system works now. But figuring it out to how open 18 it is to error, recognition and correction. And by 19 asking how well our provisional voting process is 20 connected to the other parts of the machine that they 21 need to be well characterized to the registration and 22 voter identification names. So to do all that requires

1 a systematic quality improvement program that starts by

014414

2 collecting data that is not now generally available.

3 The data collected should insure a list of 4 the specific reasons why provisional ballots were not
5 counted; measures of variance among jurisdictions,
6 counties or even precincts; a hard look at the time
7 actually required to evaluate the ballots by 8 jurisdiction and then comparing that to what the 9 statute or regulation allows in that state. If it is 10 simply unrealistic what kind of changes are needed? And 11 an accurate and timely report on provisional votes cast
12 and counted by jurisdiction down to the precinct level
13 so you can spot anomalies and take a look at where more 14 poll worker training may necessary to get them up to 15 the standard you would like the entire state operate 16 at.

17 MR. FOLEY: Just to give an example of this.
18 Most of you know about Washington State's experience
19 with its gubernatorial election in 2004. That 20 illustrated several things about this process. One of 21 which was this issue is the provisional voter
22 registered? And in some localities the answer came

111

1 back yes, and this was not true by the way of only
2 Washington State, this occurred in other states in
3 lower profile races. So the answer comes down back "no,

4 we have looked at our data base, our files and we don't 5 have this voter as a registered voter." Then the 6 question arises well they are not in the system but did 7 you go back to the original voter registration card and 8 see for whatever reason that card for a new registrant
9 was not entered in the system in the run up to this
10 particular election? Sure enough it turned out there
11 were a substantial number of voters in Washington
12 state, and elsewhere, that had submitted timely
13 registration forms; that had submitted timely
14 registration forms; had submitted procedurally proper 15 registration forms and they should have been in the 16 system but were not through no fault of their own.

17 That's the very thing that a provisional
18 voting fail safe is supposed to protect against. But it
19 couldn't protect against it if the only checking
20 mechanism is to go back to the data base as opposed to 21 going back to the original voter registration card. The 22 reason why the poll book, the precinct official has,

1 didn't the registered voter is because they weren't in 2 the system to begin with. So there was a match between 3 what the poll book said and what the system said but 4 the misstep was getting that card entered in the system
5 in the first place given the high volume of new
6 registrations filed at the deadline.

7 The courts ordered those forms to be entered
8 into the system and ordered those provisional ballots
9 to count several weeks after the election had already 10 be certified.

11 So here is an example of where the 12 methodology used and the process used determined what 13 does it mean to be a registered voter really matters
14 which is why there has to specific standards on that.

15 And that gets into the finality point, or the 16 timing point that we have already talked about. If it 17 takes, five, six, eight weeks to add those hundreds of 18 voters to the certified total you run up against 19 serious deadlines. You have past certification
20 deadlines. In some cases you have past inauguration
21 deadline. You have past the Federal so called safe
22 harbor deadline for Presidential races.

113

1 So there was an ability to increase accuracy
2 that had outcome determinative effects in terms of who
3 was the winner of the governor's race in Washington.
4 That final certification occurred two days before New 5 Year's Eve. So again accuracy verses timing is a these 6 that needs to be evaluated as you specify what are best
7 practices for implementing the evaluation process.

8 MR. O'NEILL: The heart of this quality

9 approach for improving the provisional voting process
10 is to access each stage of the provisional voting
11 process. Before the election the better the voters 12 understand their rights and obligations the easier the 13 system will be to manage and the more legitimate the 14 appearance of the process.

15 At the polling place? Avoiding error at the 16 polling place will allow more voters to cast a regular 17 ballot and all others who requested cast a provisional 18 ballot. In the evaluation process the clarity of the 19 criteria for evaluating voter eligibility is critical
20 to a sound process for deciding which of the cast
21 provisional ballots should be counted.

22 And post election we believe the best practice

114

1 is for states to consider how to complete, as Ed was 2 just saying, all the steps in the evaluation of 3 ballots and challenges to that determinations within
4 the five weeks available in Presidential elections it
5 is important to provide timely information to voters
6 about the disposition of their provisional ballot. For 7 instance having cast a provisional ballot this time are 8 they now registered for future elections. They should 9 know that. If not what do they need to do to be 10 covered?

11 As I said at the opening we look at this Page 104

014418

12 briefing as an opportunity to continue our research by 13 hearing from you. The detailed examination of each
14 stage in the provisional voting process we hope can lay 15 the foundation that each state needs to improve its 16 system.

17 Efforts to improve provisional voting may be 18 most effective as a part of a broader effort to 19 strengthen voting systems. Collecting and analyzing 20 data about those systems will enable states to 21 identify which aspects of the registration and 22 electoral process are most important into the

115

1 provisions voting process. Responsible officials
2 can then look to their registration system, their 3 identification requirements, poll worker training, as 4 ways to reduce the need for voters to cast their ballot
5 provisionally and evaluate them consistently. Thank you
6 and we are looking forward to our discussion.

7 MR. FOLEY: Likewise. Thank you.

8 And just one more general remark to share
9 with you before turning it over for questions and so
10 forth. If 2004 was a learning experience in terms of 11 the provisional voting process. And we saw stresses 12 imposed on that system and we were asking could the 13 provisional voting process handle the stresses of a

14 close election and the demands put on it. I think right
15 now, two years later in 2006 we are in an interesting
16 situation because there has been reaction to 2004, as 17 Tomb said. There has been new legislation.

18 Some of that new legislation has alleviated
19 some of the stresses that were imposed onto the 20 provisional voting system, having increased its ability 21 to be the fail safe that HAVA and Congress spoke of.

22 But some of the legislation and some of the 116

1 developments candidly put more stresses on the
2 provisional voting system. It is possible that as we go
3 forward in elections this Fall and in the future we 4 will see higher rates of provisional ballots past, not 5 lower rates more demands in terms of how to evaluate
6 them. Some of this again is maybe good and important
7 for understandable reasons, but as the data bases get 8 rolled out and as there are complexities in terms of 9 rolling out the data bases that may cause more
10 questions to be asked about the eligibility of a
11 registered voter. And that may cause that voter to cast
12 a provisional ballot whereas in the past the question
13 would not have been raised and would have cast a
14 regular ballot.

15 Likewise in the states without the voter ID
16 requirements those new requirements may raise questions

17 about eligibility causing more votes to be cast as 18 provisional votes in stead of regular votes.

19 So that has created a rather interesting
20 phenomenon and that HAVA said from a voting rights
21 perspective, if you will, said we saw the situation in 22 which a voter went to vote, turned up at the voting

1 place on election day believing that they were entitled
2 and then finding that they were purged, sometimes
3 erroneously purged, and they were turned away. So what
4 provisional voting was designed to do is to make sure
5 no one was ever turned away like that. They could at 6 least cast a provisional ballot and then we could ask
7 questions.

8 Some of the new legislation and some of the 9 new demands being put on the system have instead of 10 saying this is really for the voter. They are saying 11 this a reason to check eligible voters and therefore 12 instead of using a provisional ballot to give the voter 13 an opportunity so that they are not cast away we are 14 going to use this provisional ballot so that the voter 15 doesn't case a regular ballot. We are going to put 16 them in the question mark category rather than the yes
17 category which is different than putting them in the 18 question mark category rather than the no category. But

19 as that happens more questions marks get raised so
20 more stress gets put on the system. Thank you.

21 MS. HODGKINS: Thank you Mr. O'Neill and 22 Professor Foley. Members of the Standards Board we

118

1 have about 35 minutes until the end of this session
2 for your discussion, comments. I know many of you have 3 questions about perhaps the methodology, their 4 conclusions maybe experiences you would like to share.
5 I am going to be here to make sure this is an orderly
6 process. And as you had in your previous session there
7 are several hand held mics that are around the room.

8 If you will indicate to me that you're 9 interested in making a statement will recognize you and 10 then we bring a mic to you and let you speak. Please do
11 remember to identify yourself before you start speaking
12 Mr. Szczesniak?

13 MR. SZCZESNIAK: Yes. I guess through from 14 the presentation I got the sense that many states as 15 part of your survey have coworkers make the 16 determination as to whether or not the provisional 17 ballot was a good deal or not; is that correct, or was 18 I misunderstanding something.

19 MR. O'NEILL: We did not mean to imply that.

20 MR. SZCZESNIAK: That's good because it
21 didn't make any sense to me.

22 MR. FOLEY: It is after determination. And

119

1 sometimes it's two after the facts that the process
2 gets wrapped up. Sometimes it is two weeks. So there is 3 considerable variation on how long the boards take to 4 process the provisionals.

5 MR. O'NEILL: Another comment is many people
6 that do put that out are the old states. But it is 7 truly a fail safe provision and we focus that in the 8 training of the inspectors, poll workers so they 9 understand that nobody leaves the polling place
10 without having had the opportunity to vote either on 11 the machine, by court order or by provisional ballot.

12 MR. SZCZESNIAK: But many people cast a 13 ballot thinking they are registered voters and they 14 aren't. There is a requirement that we do not put in 15 our poll box any inactive voters whether active or not.
16 Many people who show up at the right place but they 17 just can't. We give them the affidavit and we check
18 them out and give them a chance.

19 Some reason they are not counted is that 20 people have moved within out jurisdiction. They are in 21 the right church and the wrong pew. They are still 22 eligible to vote but now with the new requirement and

120

1 because of federal lawsuits says right church wrong pew
2 that's okay. But if they are in the wrong church they
3 just can't be counted. So we tell them to go to the 4 right polling place if they want to get counted.

5 MS. HODGKINS: Mr. Kennedy?

6 MR. KENNEDY: Kevin Kennedy from Wisconsin. I
7 have a question about the methodology in the sense that 8 you have 43 states that do not include the six states
9 with election day registration?

10 MR. O'NEILL: That is correct, yes .

11 MS. HODGKINS: Yes, ma'am behind A1.

12 MS. ROUST: Sue Roust from South Dakota. On 13 page eight of your handout at the top that says: "EAC 14 should recommend to the states that they" and one of 15 the bullet points is: " Make clear the only permissible
16 requirement to obtain a provisional ballot is an 17 affirmation that the voter is registered in the 18 jurisdiction and eligible to vote in a federal 19 election."

20 Are you saying that you feel that the EAC
21 should recommend that on that question of do you have 22 to be at the right precinct or you just have to be

1 eligible to be registered anywhere in the jurisdiction.
2 Are you saying that the EAC should come down on the 3 side that if you go to the wrong precinct that your
4 registered somewhere in that jurisdiction that you
5 should be allowed to vote or that your provisional
6 ballot should count?

7 MR. FOLEY: Well first of all it is our
8 understanding in examining the case law that has 9 developed on this that HAVA itself does not require the 10 states to adopt the so called wrong precinct you count
11 the ballot rule.

12 So it couldn't be mandated as a matter of 13 what HAVA requires. In terms of-- if EAC considers 14 itself in a position to provide best practice type
15 recommendations that aren't necessarily HAVA
16 requirements then it could be considered whether or not 17 as a policy matter is there something advisable. And 18 actually in reference to the New York litigation it
19 seemed that a middle step position is that if a state
20 is going to allow for multiple precincts to exist
21 within the same location and the voter shows up at the 22 correct location but ends up in the wrong line at that

1 location could that be considered attributable to 2 administrative error as opposed to voter error? That 3 was the holding of the New York case.

4 So that the voter should get the benefit of 5 the doubt if they go to the right place even if they
6 ended up in the wrong line. And we thought as a policy
7 matter that was appropriate to recommend as best
8 practices. Beyond that probably it makes sense to say
9 that as a matter of Federalism in federal law it's 10 really up to the state whether to go beyond that.

11 MS. HODGKINS: Mr. Clark.

12 MR. CLARK: Bradley Clark from California.

13 I was just curious.

14 How you on methodology how you selected your 15 400 jurisdictions to survey?

16 MR. O'NEILL: It was a stratified random
17 sample we looked for size, a mix of size, a mix of 18 urban and suburban and then selected randomly from 19 within that. We have our poll director here if you
20 would like more details.

21 MS. HODGKINS: Mr. Sholl.

22 MR. SHOLL: Howard Sholl from Delaware. I

1 have a few comments.

2 First of all in your analysis you seemed to

014426

3 forget there are different types of provisional
4 ballots. By that I mean in Delaware we had 300 and some
5 odd provisional ballots that were cast between 400.000
6 people and you were saying we were doing a very good
7 job. well, actually if you would count our fail safe if 8 someone changes an address instead of sending them to a
9 different a different polling or giving them a
10 provisional ballot we made every effort to qualify them
11 and let them vote normal. So instead of having 6
12 percent rate that we counted you count the 6 or 7
13 thousand change of addresses that we did at the polling
14 place we ended up counting 95 percent of our so called 15 provisional ballots.

16 So there is a difference of what a state
17 calls a provisional ballot. You will find that it 18 varies across the country and that could effect your 19 analysis to some degree.

20 Second of all. You are very correct
21 information needs to be distributed to the election
22 officials and their friends. It also needs to go to the

124

1 media who consistently misrepresented what provisional
2 voting was. The media in the Philadelphia market said
3 you can vote anywhere you want to. well that wrong in 4 Pennsylvania, that was wrong in Delaware and I don't 014427

5 know about New Jersey. But people picked up information
6 from elsewhere in the country and misrepresented it to 7 their populations. So the media needs a heck of a lot
8 of education about what provisional voting is so they 9 don't misrepresent it to the voter, because we can't 10 counter what the media blitz misrepresents.

11 MR. FOLEY: Well that underscores what we 12 were saying were A this is a dynamic evolving process
13 and not static. We couldn't agree more with that point.
14 Secondly we agreed very much as Tom said that there
15 were challenges, methodological challenges in terms of 16 finding the right data, evaluating the right data, and 17 one theme in our recommendation, and you know-- besides 18 we are a snapshot or synopsis of the larger report. But 19 one theme is that a very helpful role that the EAC can 20 play is that of data collection, data consistency in 21 terms of terminology or data classification of data. So 22 we hope that through this cycle of empirical studies is

125

1 just the first in a series of cycles of empirical
2 studies that increase knowledge and increase
3 understanding of the mechanics of the process.

4 MR. O'NEILL: Can I respond also.

5 MS. HODGKINS: Sure.

6 MR. O'NEILL: Mr. Shall you said that there
7 are different kinds of provisional ballots in Delaware.

8 Is there more than one category of provisional ballot
9 that you report? Or are there some sorts of things that 10 provisional ballots aren't really provisional ballots
11 as we have been referring to? When you talk about 12 qualifying voters for instance to make sure that they 13 can vote a regular ballot?

14 MR. SHOLL: Howard Sholl from Delaware.

15 No, we call a provisional ballot exactly
16 what it is it is a provisional ballot. It's the last 17 chance to vote. So that's what we report, we don't 18 report fail safe, what we call fail safe voting call.
19 We update your address at the polling place, we verify 20 the registration and we let them vote it. That's not in 21 our lingo a provisional ballot. But it is in the lingo
22 of other states what a provisional ballot is.

126

1 So when you're looking at Delaware verses
2 Ohio verses California you're looking at apples and 3 oranges.

4 MR. O'NEILL: Thank you.

5 MR. HODGKINS: The lady in the back and then
6 we will come over here for Mr. Lomax.

7 MS. ANDERSON: Sharon Anderson from Minnesota.

8 My question is about limiting the study to 43
9 states that do not now have election day registration,

10 and I guess North Dakota doesn't have registration at.
11 I am curious about studying those EDR states in the 12 future. And the reason that I ask that is I have spent 13 my entire 27 years in the county office is riveted with 14 election day registration. And certainly on election
15 day in those EDR states is moving that whole decision
16 making process to election day. And one of the slides
17 that you were showing is training between the poll
18 workers makes a big difference, I can assure you that 19 makes a huge difference when you are a EDR state. So my 20 question is based in the thought that perhaps perhaps 21 things to be learned from EDR states that could improve
22 the provisional ballot process.

127

1 MS. HODGKINS: Mr. Lomax?

2 MR. LOMAX: Harvey Lomax, Clark county,
3 Nevada.

4 I guess your sources of variation you listed
5 is the experience of the state and how long a time the 6 state has given to resolve the provisional ballot. Yet
7 I would suggest kind of piggy backing on what Howard
8 said that the laws of the state-- if you take the laws
9 of California and Nevada and look at the laws of who 10 past the provisional ballot. They drive (sic) more the 11 number of provisional ballots cast, how long it takes 12 to resolve those issues and how many are going to be

13 excepted. And most of that has to do with how people
14 changes in address and if you allow changes in address
15 up to the last minute.

16 In Nevada for instance no changes in address
17 are allowed. So all we are dealing with are they 18 registered or are they not registered. That's pretty 19 much it. So it doesn't take us as long. And you're 20 going to have a much higher rejection rate.

21 Just on the side a different issue. I can 22 also speak loud and clear not all voters who show up

1 and attest that they are registered voters even begin
2 to qualify. In Nevada a high tourism state down there
3 in Las Vegas in the 2004 elections we had people from 4 all over the country insisting they had a right to vote
5 in Nevada. And we let them vote provisionally and we 6 didn't count them.

7 MR. FOLEY: And we are by no means suggesting 8 that provisional votes should be counted if in fact the 9 provisional voter was not properly registered voter.
10 And in fact one of the problems that occurred in the 11 state of Washington was the erroneous inclusion of 12 provisional voters, of some provisional ballots in the 13 final certified total that should not have been 14 included. They were included prior to the evaluation

15 process. So there are two possible errors. There is the 16 exclusion of one that should have been validated. And 17 the other kind of error is the inclusion of those that 18 should not have been validated. In a well designed 19 system we try to minimize both types of error.

20 MR. O'NEILL: Let me supplement that a little 21 bit.

22 I think what is driving our recommendation is

129

1 anybody that comes in and affirms that he or she is 2 registered and eligible to get a provisional ballot is 3 driven by the pressures on the poll workers on election
4 day. And we gladly not see those poll workers time
5 taken up by sort of a quasi traditional process in 6 deciding whether any particular voter really deserves a
7 provisional ballot. Everybody should get it and sort
8 out later when you have a matter of weeks rather than 9 matter of hours. That is the burden of our argument.

10 MS. HODGKINS: The gentleman in the blue
11 shirt?

12 MR. TERWILLIGER: Bob Terwilliger from the 13 state of Washington.

14 I hear categorizations of states by the way
15 the they verify (inaudible) the ballot. You talk about 16 a voters affidavit and current ID as if they exclusive.
17 In the state of Washington we actually use three. To 18 determine whether or not they get a mechanical ballot.

19 The only thing we don't have is to return with your 20 ID. If we have an affidavit on the envelope we check 21 the signature. We also verify that he or she is an 22 actual registered voter which to is three of the four

130

1 that you list there.

2 MR. O'NEILL: We will clarify that.

3 MR. MILLER: Paul Miller also from the state
4 of Washington.

5 And I was interested in your comments about
6 going back and checking against the actual original
7 registration card for a couple of reasons.

8 One the practical administration implications
9 of that. And two because you cited Washington state
10 specifically in regards to that. And I think that there
11 may be possibly some misunderstanding as to what came 12 out of the 2004 gubernatorial election in that regards.

13 First of all as a practical matter what I
14 understand you to say is we ought to be going back and 15 checking all of our voter registration cards to make 16 sure we didn't inadvertently miss one or more.
17 Obviously in King County where they have 1.2 million
18 registered voters, as an administrative matter that is 19 an impossibility.

20 Two, what I am understanding you to refer to 21 actually is a little more complex; but, raises some 22 additional questions I think you might want to

131

1 investigate in your survey which is what can be
2 remedied in voters registration when either the 3 provisional affidavit is incomplete or when the 4 original voter registration form is incomplete. If the 5 person, for example, didn't sign the voter registration
6 form they can't be made inactive registered voter. Can 7 that be remedied with a provisional ballot and a
8 signature verification if the address was an invalid
9 address and couldn't be precincted can we give them a 10 provisional ballot? Those are some of the kinds of 11 issues that did come out and we were forced, in 12 Washington, to clarify those kinds of questions.

13 MR. FOLEY: Those are really important
14 questions. And absolutely that's where clarify is the 15 primary value. It's much more important to have an 16 answer to that question ahead of time that it matters
17 what the answer is. So if the issue is a missing
18 address we should ahead of time what the consequences
19 of that missing address is. It either counts or it 20 won't count. But at least you know the rule ahead of 21 time So I absolutely agree with that.

22 MR. O'NEILL: And I believe the court case

014434

132

1 you are referring to is the Judge ordered King County
2 to seek signatures for provisional when they hadn't
3 signed the provisional ballot. That's my understanding
4 of the decision in that case. My guess is that was the 5 court case you were referring to.

6 MR. FOLEY: Well there were multiple cases as
7 you know. And one piece of good news on this I do
8 think the HAVA requirement of statewide centralized
9 voter registration data bases will help because I think
10 a well designed data base will always archive any 11 retained historical records with respect to registered
12 voter. In the event of a purge or in the event of some 13 action on that registered voter you can go back and 14 archive the history. And that will minimize to a 15 considerable degree issues about the validity of the 16 status should they arise in the context of a
17 provisional ballot.

18 But there is still a question of the point of 19 intake question. In other words until you get that 20 registrant within the system, in the centralized data
21 base there is a gap and we have seen it. It is not just 22 in Washington. There are gaps in terms of forms

1 delivered to DMV that are not transferred timely to the 2 Board of Elections, who bears the burden of that risk?
3 Of course there is a different burden of risk if the 4 form is delivered to one of the third party groups. And 5 they make a mistake. I am not saying that all risks
6 should be borne by the state. Some risk should be borne
7 by the voters. Some risks maybe should be borne by the 8 system. But the most important issue is to clarify
9 ahead of time is who bears the risk of a missed form,
10 and under what circumstances?

11 MS. HODGKINS: The gentleman in the back and 12 then we will go to Mr. McCormack .

13 REGIS YOUNG: Regis Young from Pennsylvania.
14 You made several points about educating the 15 polls workers throughout your presentation. But nowhere
16 did you mention educating the news media. I am 17 following up on what Howard mentioned before especially 18 in Pennsylvania in 2004 the news media kind of took 19 over our election by advertising and saying it doesn't 20 matter if you're registered or not just go vote. It
21 doesn't matter where you live just go vote to your 22 nearest polling place. And I was wondering did you

1 gather any statistics on your survey in Pennsylvania?
2 we had a low percentage of counting the provisional
3 ballots because of that. It was too late for us to get
4 to the the news media to change.

5 I think it should be noted that on the 6 national level the news media should be trained right
7 down to the local newspapers.

8 MR. O'NEILL: They usually resist training .

9 MS. HODGKINS: Okay. Mr. Lindback and then
10 Secretary Markowitz.

11 MR. LINDBACK: John Lindback, I am Director
12 of Elections in Oregon.

13 You know we are one of those odd ball states
14 where we do things very differently and it effects your 15 study I am sure. One of those states that make you rip
16 your hair out.

17 One of the things we found with 18 implementation of state wide voter registration program
19 is in a primary election last week is it appears that 20 the number of provisional ballots went dramatically
21 down because of our statewide voter registration
22 system. It sort of strikes me that your research team

1 lists us as a moving target in regards to the dynamics
2 of elections changing in this country. And I sympathize
3 with. And I am wondering if you could go back for a
4 second to your slide on your quality improvement
5 program because I have a question about that.

6 MR. O'NEILL: Tell me when.

7 MR. LINDBACK: That one. As election officials
8 we get told we ought to do a lot of things. And in fact
9 I have gotten kind of used to it. Ever since 2000 we 10 have to do this and we have to do that we have to do a 11 lot of things that are very good ideas. Rarely do we 12 get a suggestion are we told how to do it. And a cost
13 effective in a efficient way. And I am looking 14 specifically for example at time required to evaluate 15 ballots by jurisdiction.

16 when we get into that level of detain and 17 data collection I need to hire a full time person to 18 collect that data at election time. I don't have the 19 budget to do that or the resources to do it and that 20 kind of thing.

21 I think we are appreciated as election
22 officials when folks from the academic world do studies

1 and make recommendations. We don't only need
2 recommendations on what we ought to do as to how we
3 ought to do it and how we can do it in a cost effective

4 and efficient way. I think if you folks would look at 5 that specifically with request to these four 6 suggestions because to me they look expensive and 7 overwhelming in some respects when we are trying to 8 collect the data.

9 MR. FOLEY: I hope we were sensitive to that.
10 we tried to be, maybe not sufficiently, but we wrestled
11 with the notion of trying get specific. And there are 12 downsides to getting too specific on some of these 13 issues, particularly as to what date should this be 14 done by. It also relates to a larger theme which I
15 theme which I as an academic.

16 I think requires a dialogue between people
17 who are implementing election law in practice as 18 administrators and then people who are studying it. And 19 a real genuine back and forth ongoing dynamic dialogue
20 because what would it take to build an optimal 21 provisional voting system is not an easy task just in 22 terms of identifying the values. And there are trade

137

1 off values, there is a trade off between accuracy and 2 finality not to mention not to mention budgets and
3 expenses. And I think it is unfair to election
4 officials that the media in particular and public
5 rhetoric demands more than is achievable. It is sort of

6 an expectation that the system is going to be perfect
7 that provisional voting is going to be that automatic
8 fail safe.

9 I think one of the education functions that 10 hopefully the EAC can play given its public profile is 11 that there needs to be more sophisticated
12 understanding that a well designed system can't promise
13 too much. And it can work without the-- cars, you know
14 well designed cars sometimes break down but we don't 15 think the car was poorly designed because you have to 16 take it to the shop every few years. And it may be that 17 a well designed election system, you know, is still 18 well designed it still functions appropriately given 19 the budget and so forth even though it has glitches
20 here and there.

21 I don't think the public is not quite at that 22 point in the conversation, and hopefully our process

138

1 and the EAC can help with that understanding.

2 MR. O'NEILL: We agree with the thrust of
3 your comments I believe somewhere in here we have a
4 bullet point that calls for an assessment of cost
5 effectiveness of the kinds of regulations you set up to 6 improve and evaluate provisional ballots.

7 You will find also here a specific reference
8 to the check list that has been using, Colorado to 014440

9 record the reasons provisional ballots were not 10 excepted with a simple three letter code and will allow 11 you to go back at the end of the election and process
12 and evaluate why persons are getting into the 13 provisional ballot line and why they are failing to 14 have their ballots evaluated and counted. It will give 15 you a check on the functioning of many parts of the 16 system.

17 And many of these pieces of information are 18 collected for other purposes. You know how many 19 provisional ballots are cast. You know how many are 20 counted. But they are not necessarily compiled in a way
21 that allows you to analyze the data at leisure once
22 the election is over. So in general what we are calling

1 for is using the data for two purposes; to call the 2 election and after it is all over to analyze why the 3 system worked the way it did in that particular
4 election. Your right it is a moving target and each
5 year will be a little different.

6 MS. HODGKINS; Secretary Markowitz? And Adam
7 if you wouldn't mind the gentleman on the front row
8 will be next and secretary Ruggiero will have the last 9 word.

10 MS. MARKOWITZ: Secretary of State, Deborah

11 Markowitz from Vermont.

12 I like to go back to the comments from 13 Delaware. As you continue to study this issue you look 14 at what the goal of provisional balloting is and then 15 evaluate how it is working state by state. Vermont is 16 your lowest participant in provisional voting and 17 that's because our-- we actually do something better
18 than that like Delaware where we have affidavit voting.
19 So somebody comes in-- and we have a terrible problem
20 with motor voter, and I don't know about the rest of 21 the other states, but routinely there are thousands of 22 people who never make it on the voter rolls because

140

1 those registration forms aren't filled out correctly
2 and don't get to us or don't get to the right place and
3 really, in most cases, through no fault of the voter.
4 So for many years and we are called an old state with 5 provisional balloting and we have resolved by allowing 6 somebody to swear or affirm that they were registered
7 and we simply add them to the check list on election
8 day and allow them to vote.

9 In Vermont provisional voting is reflected in 10 two things: One was town clerks or election officials
11 who misunderstood provisional voting and used it
12 instead of the activating list and we should have a 13 lower number than that. Or there were people from

14 Connecticut who come to Vermont and think they have a 15 right to vote in any polling place because they are 16 Americans. So we should say that we have something
17 better that allows them to have an actual ballot.

18 MR. FOLEY: Oh, absolutely. Like Tom said and 19 I will definitely repeat. A large number of provisional
20 ballots cast in a jurisdiction is by no means 21 necessarily a good thing. And a large number of 22 provisional ballots counted is not necessarily a good

141

1 thing because maybe those folks should have gotten an
2 actual ballot in the first place, if it was determined
3 that they were registered voters why weren't they 4 voting a regular ballot.

5 Now, again, a fire extinguisher is good. It
6 is good to have safety measures. It is good to have 7 fire extinguisher if there is a fire that you have to 8 put out. It would be nice to avoid the first in the 9 first place. And some of the academic research that we 10 drew upon was efforts to have improvements in 11 registration systems that would avoid the need for 12 provisional voting and put less stress on the on 13 provisional voting precisely because provisional voting
14 is after election day when the litigants want to gain
15 the system. In other words in a post election

16 environment there is inevitably going to be extra
17 stress if the election is close. So it would be much,
18 much better if you could reduce the number of 19 provisional ballots cast and have those be actual 20 ballots if that is a feasible thing. So that's why we 21 talk about the relationship between the provisional
22 voting system as a subsystem, with the data bases

142

1 another subsystem. It is an important component and it
2 is provided by HAVA and it is good to have fire
3 extinguishes. But one needs an overall assessment of 4 the totality of the states election system really to be 5 able to evaluate its component that is provisional
6 voting.

7 MR. BLEVINS: Don Blevins, Lexington,
8 Kentucky. I have got a couple of things.

9 Number one you say that everybody should get
10 a provisional ballot. And the application, if we decide 11 to put it in place, is not a good thing. We only allow 12 a provisional ballot for federal elections only. And 13 given that there is no such thing really as a federal 14 election. There is an election day in America where we 15 elect officers of all levels of government including 16 six cities where half a dozen people get together and 17 decide they want to have a little city. So for those of 18 us who administer elections on the local level we have

19 to absorb the entire scheme of officers and issues that 20 are on the ballot. So in our state the way we put it in 21 place in a perfect situation we would never count a 22 provisional ballot. We have it orchestrated so that

143

1 that truly is a last resort. On the other hand we want
2 the voters to be able to vote in all election issues
3 and races that they are eligible to vote in. And when 4 they choose the provisional ballot route they have
5 opted out of that. So that is not necessarily the best
6 route to go.

7 We have a statewide data base. We have had it
8 for a long time. We have a leg up on the states that 9 don't have that. And we have a telecommunications
10 system that allows us check the registration. The size
11 of the population of the state plays a roll we have 12 four million people, two million registered voters.
13 They top that in Los Angeles county in California. So I 14 can tell you from my administration we would have to 15 look at this in a different context by virtue of sheer 16 volume.

17 The second thing I want to point out to you
18 is that I think the biggest over simplification that 19 was in HAVA was this idea that we are not training poll
20 workers well enough. Or we are not training the public

21 well enough. I don't think the federal government has 22 got enough money to train the electorate out there on

144

1 how to do this voting. So the burden of the election on
2 the county. When people talk about.

3 Educating poll workers I hear what I think
4 must be a two, three or four day training session. And 5 you're lucky if you get them in for 30, 40 minutes.
6 They have the attention span of a kindergartner. So
7 this is over glorified and under appreciated that these 8 poll workers are volunteers and get paid poorly. And 9 until there is some heat built up on the state to put 10 up more money poll workers were are we going to get 11 that?

12 Another thing that HAVA wants is we are 13 supposed to teach them a sensitivity about disabled. We 14 are supposed to teach them about provisional ballots.
15 we have to teach them about state law and all this. You
16 know, I don't know about anybody else but we get a them
17 for two hours we have performed a miracle. So this idea
18 of training being the answer to everything I think you
19 are going to find between academics and practice there
20 is a big over simplification difference.

21 MR. FOLEY: I think we are very much in the 22 arena because it is because of that complexity and

145

1 difficulty that out point about the practical rule of
2 thumb is to give them a provisional ballot. And I
3 stress that is when the poll workers are in a position
4 to say I am in a position were I can not give this
5 voter standing in front of me, or a would be voter, a 6 regular ballot. Something has caused me to make the 7 determination that they can't vote a regular ballot.
8 They are not on my list; they don't have the right ID
9 whatever. If at that point the voter says I don't want
10 to go home empty handed I would like to vote a
11 provisional ballot because I believe I am eligible it
12 is at that point that our recommendation is don't take 13 time to worry about that. You have too much on your 14 mind poll worker. At that point you know you're not 15 going to let them in the regular booth or regular 16 ballot give them a provisional ballot. So it is not 17 giving them a provisional ballot instead of letting 18 them vote regularly. That is not an issue.

19 MR. O'NEILL: I did not follow one part of 20 your comment, maybe you can straighten it out for me.
21 You said you don't like the issue of the provisional
22 ballot in Kentucky. And if you do the person who get it

1 doesn't get to vote in a local election. That's the 2 part I didn't understand.

3 MR. BLEVINS: We chose to make the
4 provisional ballot only for federal elections. We went 5 with HAVA in that regard that it only applied to 6 federal elections.

7 MR. O'NEILL: I understand. Thank you.

8 MR. BLEVINS: And we did that for several 9 reasons that may not make a lot sense here. Voter
10 fraud, and vote ban and those sort of things.

11 MR. O'NEILL: You're talking to someone from 12 New Jersey.

13 MS. HODGKINS: Thank you Mr. Blevins.
14 Secretary Rokita.

15 MR. ROKITA; I have a couple comments and a
16 couple of questions if you can bear with me.

17 First of all for the record I also agree that 18 there is much more relationship between this subject
19 and ERA than to your research currently. And I would 20 suggest doing a little more research in that regard.
21 For example when EAC requires that full service
22 agencies to continue to accept voter registrations it's

1 a great thing. But you're also at the same time right
2 after the election and if you would the election coming
3 up after registering it might be driving more people to 4 the polling place like NVRA requires only to have them
5 cast a provisional ballot because the registrant won't
6 let us pass. So issues like that I think might be 7 right for some of your discussions.

8 What data point did you specifically come up
9 to conclude that if someone is in the right polling 10 site, all be it not the right precinct, that their 11 ballot should count?

12 MR. FOLEY: It was a core decision, correct.

13 MR. ROKITA: I understand. Just for example a 14 photo ID, I will use that as an example, are you saying
15 that there is a causal effect between the time allowed
16 to count a provisional ballot and the rate-- are you
17 saying there is a causal effect and the rate of 18 counting that provisional ballot and voter ID are you
19 saying it causal?

20 MR. FOLEY: No. We found correlation if you
21 will, I don't have the time but I could go into this 22 more. But I don't think we are making a finding on

1 causation.

2 MR. ROKITA: Well, if it is not causal I
3 guess my point would be, so you can respond, what value
4 is it to be in this report?

5 MR. O'NEILL: The existence of the correlation
6 between having less time to evaluate ballots and with 7 fewer ballots being excepted it is an indication to us
8 that something is going on. We don't know exactly
9 whether it is causative or merely highly correlated.
10 But whatever it is it makes it worth while looking at 11 the time period allowed to evaluate ballots and try to 12 figure out if it is causing it. And you can do that 13 for instance by finding out are there a bunch of 14 ballots that you never got to at the end of the 15 process, the process was only three days long. It is 16 worthy of further investigation.

17 My own suspicion is that the arrow of 18 causality does flow that way but it is only a 19 suspicion.

20 MR. FOLEY: And there would be reasons to 21 look at the timing issue even if that data didn't 22 exist. I mean it maybe anecdotal but I mean I keep

1 referring to Washington but half of the Washington
2 governor's race the process for evaluating the ballots
3 shut down on the same date in 2004 as a matter of state
4 law that the federal Supreme Court in Bush vs. Gore

5 shut down the counting process in 2000, the current
6 governor would be a different incumbent. So the fact
7 that the the process took longer than the five weeks
8 that federal law allows for Presidential elections
9 shows that timing can be outcome determinative.

10 And I simply wanted to share that knowledge
11 with all of you as you determine for your own races
12 what is the appropriate time table to utilize before
13 bringing the process to conclusion.

14 MR. O'NEILL: And my recommendation for the 15 EAC is that they be very careful with this research 16 where things are not causal or currently suspicions that 17 we say that.

18 I think at the outset with some of these 19 subjects, and I am usually the first on up to bat, but 20 some of the other subjects that we are going to deal
21 with maybe the same way, maybe not. But these issues
22 these themes are not conducive to very easy data

150

1 gathering. I must have said that ten times here. And
2 maybe it has to stop right there or slow down right
3 there. Maybe there is value in just saying that, rather 4 than try to fit a square peg in a round hole where 5 these potential conclusions or these correlations that 6 you're saying could be taken by the public as 014451

7 conclusion or causality when there really is none.

8 MS. HODGKINS: Thank you. Mr. Martinez, we 9 do apologize for running this session over time but--

10 MR. MARTINEZ: That was great. We were looking 11 for the kind of discussion we had today. It's very 12 valuable to us. We are on the record and we can come
13 back and really consider the comments. We really do
14 appreciate them all and are looking for this kind of 15 discussion.

16 I am speaking for myself and not the EAC in 17 saying this I think there is strong sentiment at the 18 EAC, at least from my perspective, to evaluate in very 19 sound and deliberative manner, Mr. Secretary, the kinds 20 of reports of reports that were presented to you.

21 Keep in mind these reports are from our 22 consultants to the EAC and we are sharing them with

151

1 you. These were not EAC reports that we have adopted
2 and are presenting to you for final analysis.

3 There is a complete difference in those areas
4 and that's why we took these extremely important steps
5 to show you what the consultants have brought to us and 6 sharing it with you at this stage in the development so
7 we can then honor that importance to deliberate and 8 contemplate very thoroughly before we embrace whether 9 it is voluntary guidance or best practices. So we are

10 very much in that period. I encourage it for the rest
11 of the discussions we are going to discuss.

12 All right. We are going to take a quick
13 break our next topic will be Research on Poll worker
14 Recruitment.

15 Madam Chair, it is 4:20 and I am calling for 16 a 15 minutes break or so. Reassemble in 15 minutes,
17 please.

18 (Recess taken at 4:20 p.m., and reconvened at 19 4:40).

20 MR. MARTINEZ: We are starting again. We have 21 one more session left. I know it has been a long
22 afternoon full of a lot of information. We have one

152

1 session left for today and tomorrow we will hit you
2 again with a long session.

3 what we are going to do today is give you a
4 presentation regarding another one of our contracted
5 research projects and that is pertaining to poll worker
6 recruitment, training and retention for poll workers
7 who are generally used at the polls but targeted
8 specifically as well to college poll workers, to the 9 population of college poll workers.

10 we have a couple of consultants that we have 11 hired that have done some tremendous work and want to 12 share the results of that work.

13 what I am going to do is ask Karen Lynn Dyson
14 who we all heard before. She is our project research
15 manager at the EAC and has been with us for quite some 16 time now to stand up and give us a quick introduction
17 of our project consultants and anything else she might 18 want to say.

19 However I forgot I am supposed to recognize 20 your chair, Peggy Nighswonger who wants to give you a
21 quick piece of information, Madam Chair .

22 MS. NIGHSWONGER: Okay. I am just going to

1 tell you that 66 ballots were counted successfully. So
2 please welcome Tonni as our new Executive Director.

3 we are leaving right after this session.

4 MR. MARTINEZ: Congratulations. Karen
5 Lynn-Dyson will make the introductions and we will get
6 to the last presentation of the afternoon.

7 MS. LYNN-DYSON: Commissioner Martinez just 8 mentioned that I have been with the EAC for some time
9 and I could swear either he said or Chairman Boyer
10 said I have been here for years. He said a lifetime.

11 I am pleased to introduce two of our 12 contractors Abby Horn who is to my immediate right. And 13 Abbey is the Assistant Director for the Center for 14 Election Integrity at Cleveland State University. Abby

15 leads the Center as Acting Assistant Director and she 16 came to the Center as a democracy for the United States
17 for International Development and did a lot of work
18 all over the world, primarily in Central America related 19 to democracy and citizenship.

20 The Center for Election Integrity at 21 Cleveland State University is a partnership of the 22 Cleveland Marshall of Law and the Massey, Goodman,

154

1 Levine College of Urban Affairs. She draws upon the 2 long standing expertise from those colleges in 3 electoral and regulatory law, public education and 4 civic education the Center for Election Integrity
5 provides research, training consultation to assist
6 Ohio in becoming a national leader in transparent,
7 legal, efficient and accurate elections. It is three 8 organizations dedicated to three interconnected
9 missions: To assist Ohio in becoming the national 10 leader in elections; to help assure the citizens trust
11 that their elections are fair, lawful and accurate and 12 to undertake scholarly studies and offer
13 recommendations on election administration and legal 14 reform at the state, local and international level.

15 Again Abby is overseeing the Cleveland
16 State's efforts related to college poll worker

17 recruitment and training and retention.
18 Jennifer Collins-Foley to Abby's right is an 19 attorney who has provided democracy development around
20 the world since 1989 working with election
21 administrators, civic organizations and politic
22 parties in the former Soviet Union, Central Asia and

1 the Middle East.
2 Jennifer has served in the Elections
3 Administration Community since 1996, spending seven
4 years as Assistant Registrar of Voters of LA County.
5 She now serves as an Election Administration
6 Consultant. And has worked in recent years with us and 7 on this project with IFES. And IFES for those of you
8 who don't know was established in 1987 as a non 9 governmental, non partisan, non profit organization.
10 IFES has provided assistance to current elections, the 11 rule of law, civil society and good government in more
12 than a hundred countries including the US.

13 IFES is headquartered in Washington with 14 offices in nearly 30 countries and it specializes in 15 technical assessments, poll worker training programs
16 technical observations, election commission management
17 reviews and election equipment and commodities
18 procurement systems.

19 IFES is the contractor for the Elections

1 Jennifer who is going to make her presentation that
2 will last for about 15 minutes. And then Abby will go
3 for about 15 minutes. And then I will open it up for 4 questions. Thank you
